Requisition of Steamer by Admiralty as Troopship—Alterations to Structure—Implied Condition that Ship should be fit to Carry Oil—Claim by Shipowners of Termination of Contract owing to Requisition. — A tank steamer was chartered for a period of five years for the carriage of oil. The charterers were to have the liberty of sub-letting the steamer on Admiralty or other service without prejudice to the charterparty. The charterparty also contained an exceptions clause which included restraint of princes. During the continuance of the charterparty the steamer was requisitioned by the Admiralty for the carriage of troops, and certain structural alterations were made in her for that purpose. The shipowners claimed that the charterparty had been terminated or suspended by a restraint of princes and by a breach of the implied condition that the steamer should be fit to carry oil, which formed the basis of the contract; and that the requisitioning of the steamer did not amount to a sub-letting :—Held, that there was no implied condition enforceable by the shipowners that the charterparty should be terminated when the steamer ceased to be fit to carry oil, and that the requisitioning of the steamer by the Admiralty during the continuance of the charterparty did not amount to a breach of the charterparty by the charterers, and that therefore the shipowners were not entitled to terminate the contract. Tamplin Steamship Co. v. Anglo-Mexican Petroleum Products Co., 84 L. Effect of Bill of Lading — Cargo of Pit Props — Freight Payable "per intaken piled fathom"—Cargo Measured before Shipment by Different Method—Cargo Re-measured at Port of Discharge by Shipowners—Liability of Charterers for Cost of Re-measurement.]—A charterparty provided for the loading and delivery of a full and complete cargo of pit props, freight being payable at a rate "per intaken piled fathom." It also provided that bills of lading should be prepared on the form indorsed on the charterparty and should be signed by the master "measure unknown." The bill of lading presented by the shippers to the master for signature shewed that a certain quantity of fathoms measured on a different basis from that required by the charterparty had been shipped. The master signed the bill of lading, under protest, "measure unknown." The shipowners, on the discharge of the cargo in this country, had the timber piled, checked, and measured by independent persons according to the basis required by the charterparty, and then brought this action against the charterers to recover the expenses incurred by them in so doing :—Held, that the charterers were under an implied, if not an express obligation to have the timber measured according to the basis required by the charterparty, and to tender bills of lading to the master for signature containing a statement of such measurement; and that as the charterers had failed to fulfil that obligation they were liable to pay the reasonable expenses incurred by the shipowners in having the timber measured according to the basis required by the charterparty. Merryweather & Co. v. Pearson & Co., 83 L. Unseaworthiness of Ship—Deviation—Contract of Carriage.] — The appellants were owners of the Wearside. The respondents were the indorsees of a bill of lading which incorporated all the conditions, provisos, and exceptions in the charterparty. The charterparty authorised the vessel to deviate for the purpose of saving life and property, the master or owners to have an absolute lien on the cargo for all freight, dead freight, demurrage, and average. The charterers failed to provide a full cargo, and the master, obtaining additional cargo, so overloaded the ship as to make her unseaworthy; and in order to save crew and cargo the vessel was obliged to take refuge in the port of Halifax. The owners paid for repairs and compensated the owners of jettisoned cargo :—Held, that the deviation was justifiable, that the deviation and overloading did not put an end to the contract of affreightment, and that the owners had not lost their rights under the charterparty. Steel & Co. v. Scott & Co. (59 L. Decision of the Court of Appeal (80 L. J. K.B. 601; [1911] 1 K.B. 625) reversed, and that of Walton, J. (79 L. J. K.B. 1113; [1910] 2 K.B. 309), restored. Ib.

"Consignees to effect discharge of cargo steamer paying 1s. per ton"—Sale of Cargo by Consignee — "Cost of stevedoring to be paid by" Purchaser—Right to Sum Payable by Steamer.]—The appellant had chartered a steamer to load a cargo of coal for Sydney. The charterparty contained the following clause : "Consignees to effect the discharge of the cargo, strike or no strike, steamer paying 1*s.* per ton of 20 cwt." Before the ship arrived the appellant sold the cargo to the Government of New South Wales on the terms (inter alia), "The Government to guarantee to discharge the vessel at not less than 500 tons per day, strike or no strike. The cost of stevedoring to be paid by the Government" :—Held, that the Government were entitled to retain the 1*s.* per ton payable as against the appellant. White v. Williams, 82 L. J. Bills of Lading — Assignment — Cesser of Shipowner's Liability—Submission to Arbitration.]—The plaintiffs, who were the owners of the steamship Den of Mains, chartered her by charterparty dated April 26, 1911, to the defendants M. & Co., to load a cargo of beans at Vladivostock, and to proceed to a port in the United Kingdom and there deliver the cargo "agreeably to bills of lading." On June 10 a cargo of about 6,000 tons was loaded, and bills of lading made out to the order of M. & Co. or their assigns were signed by the master and handed to M. & Co.'s representative. M. & Co. had, by a contract dated April 27, 1911, sold the cargo to the defendants the B. Co. on the terms of a "basis delivered" contract, by clause 10 of which the contract was to be void as regarded any portion shipped which might not arrive. On June 12 the defendants M. & Co., under the contract of April 27, declared to the B. Co. that the beans had been shipped by steamship Den of Mains. On arrival of the vessel at Liverpool, the port of discharge, M. & Co. handed to the B. Co. the bills of lading indorsed against a payment. When the discharge had been completed it was alleged that there was a shortage of 171 bags, and, the B. Co. having paid only in respect of the quantity actually delivered, M. & Co. instructed them to make a corresponding deduction from the freight, but the plaintiffs refused to acknowledge the claim for short delivery. A dispute having thus arisen, M. & Co. gave notice that they demanded an arbitration under a clause in the charterparty which provided for arbitration "by arbitrators, one to be appointed by each of the parties to this agreement, if necessary the arbitrators to appoint a third," and formally required the plaintiffs within seven clear days to appoint their arbitrator. The plaintiffs did not appoint an arbitrator, and the defendants after the expiry of the seven days gave notice of the appointment of a gentleman to act as sole arbitrator. On a summons for directions taken out by the plaintiffs,—Held, first, that there was nothing in the contract or the circumstances of the case to satisfy the Court that it was the intention of the shipowners and charterers that the responsibility of the former under the charterparty had ceased; and secondly, that the submission to arbitration came within section 6 of the Arbitration Act, 1889. "Den of Airlie" Steamship Co. v. Mitsui, 106 L. T. 451; 17 Com. Cas. 116; 12 Asp. M.C. 169—C.A.

Requisition of Ship by Admiralty—Rights of Owners and Charterers.]—A steamer was chartered from the owners for five years from December, 1912, for the carriage of petroleum and crude oil or its products, the charterers having liberty to sublet the steamer on Admiralty or other service without prejudice to the charterparty, the charterers, however, remaining responsible. A clause in the charterparty included restraints of princes. In February, 1915, the British Government requisitioned the steamer for Admiralty transport service, and she was then fitted up and used for the transport of troops. Disputes having arisen between the parties as to their rights under the charterparty, and having been submitted to arbitration,—Held, on a Case stated by the arbitrator, that the charterparty was not put an end to or suspended by the requisition, and the charterers and not the shipowners were entitled to the compensation offered by the Government. Tamplin Steamship Co. v. Anglo-Mexican Petroleum Products Co., 84 L. Craft Transit—"Vessel"—Barge—Unseaworthiness—Ambiguity.]—A bill of lading provided for the shipment of certain goods from London to Gloversville, in the United States of America, and contained a clause of exceptions which included damage from rain, frost, decay, pilferage, wastage, &c. It also contained exceptions in respect of damage or loss from boilers, &c., and "unseaworthiness, submerging or sinking of ship or admission of water into the vessel . . . unseaworthiness or unfitness of the vessel at commencement of, or before, or at any time during the voyage, perils of the sea, rivers, navigation or land transit of whatever nature or kind, and all damage, loss or injury arising from the perils or things above mentioned." At the end of the bill of lading were the words "All the above exceptions and conditions shall apply from the time when the goods come into the possession or custody of the carriers or their agents in warehouse or wharf in course of land or water transit or in any other situation." In a claim for damages by the shippers in respect of injury caused by the unseaworthiness of a barge in which the cargo was carried,—Held, that the word "vessel" in the bill of lading applied to the barge, and that, as a matter of construction, the last clause also had application to the barge, and the provision about unseaworthiness effectually protected the shipowners. Weiner v. Wilsons and Furness-Leyland Line, 102 L. T. 716; 54 S. J. 543—Hamilton, J. Affirmed, 103, L. T. 168; 15 Com. Cas. 294; 11 Asp. M.C. 413—C.A.

Incorporation of Terms of Charterparty—Goods "at charterers' risk"—Shipowners not Responsible for Leakage and Breakage—Negligence of Shipowners' Servants—Liability of Shipowners.]—By a bill of lading 900 barrels of tar were shipped on the defendants' steamship, in substitution for a timber cargo that was to have been loaded. The bill of lading, which was a timber bill of lading, contained a clause that the shipowners were not responsible for leakage and breakage, and the further clause "all other conditions and exceptions as per charterparty." The charterparty provided that the steamer was to be provided with a deckload at full freight "at charterers' risk," and it contained exceptions in favour of the shipowners in respect of accidents of navigation even when occasioned by the negligence of the shipowners' servants. The barrels of tar were carried on deck, and owing to a quantity of heavy timber being improperly stowed on the top of them, a large number were crushed and broken. In an action to recover damages in respect thereof,—Held, that the words "at charterers' risk" in the charterparty were not incorporated in the bill of lading; that the exception in the bill of lading that the shipowners were not to be accountable "for leakage and breakage" did not protect the shipowners where the leakage or breakage was due to the negligence of their servants; and that the shipowners were liable for the damage that had been occasioned to the barrels of tar. The Modena, 16 Com. Cas. 292; 27 T. L. R. 529—D.

—— Custom of Port—Inconsistency with Terms of Bill of Lading.]—A steamer loaded a cargo of barley in sacks at a North Pacific port, under a charterparty which stipulated for discharge at a "safe port or ports in the United Kingdom . . . Vessel to discharge afloat with dispatch, according to the custom at port of discharge for steamers except as otherwise provided; cargo to be delivered at ship's tackles." The bills of lading acknowledged receipt of a certain number of sacks said to contain a certain weight of barley "to be delivered in the like good order and condition. . . . Freight for the said goods payable as per endorsement on charterparty, with average accustomed general average, if any, and all other conditions and exceptions as per charterparty." The consignees, to whom the bills of lading had been indorsed, ordered the ship to Leith, and claimed to take delivery of the cargo there in the sacks as shipped. The shipowners maintained that they were entitled to deliver it according to the custom of the port of Leith with regard to grain cargoes from North Pacific ports, whereby the cargo was bulked by the receivers' men in the hold, from which it was hoisted in tubs to the deck and poured into sacks of uniform size, the sacks being weighed on deck before being slung ashore. The consignees maintained that this custom was not binding on them in respect that it was unknown to them, and, further, that it was inconsistent with the terms of the bills of lading which implied that delivery was to be made in the original sacks, and with the terms of the charterparty which provided for delivery at the ship's tackles :—Held, that the consignees were bound by the custom of the port of Leith in respect, first, that the custom was imported into the bills of lading by the reference to the charterparty, and, secondly, that, as it had been made an express term of the contract it was immaterial whether it was known to the consignees or not; that it overrode the implication in the bills of lading that the cargo was to be delivered in the original sacks; and fourthly, that it was not inconsistent with the provision that the cargo should be delivered at the ship's tackles. Strathlorne Steamship Co. v. Baird & Sons, Lim., [1915] S. C. 956—Ct. of Sess.

—— Arbitration Clause.]—A charterparty for the carriage of a cargo of timber stipulating for the discharge of the cargo with customary dispatch and for payment of demurrage in the event of the ship being longer detained, contained a clause that "any dispute or claim arising out of any of the conditions of this charterparty shall be adjusted at port where it occurs, and same shall be settled by arbitration." The bill of lading given for the cargo contained the words "all other terms and conditions and exceptions of charter to be as per charterparty." The shipowners having brought an action for demurrage against the holders of the bill of lading to whom the cargo had been consigned,—Held, that the arbitration clause of the charterparty was not incorporated in the bill of lading so as to entitle the defendants to have the action stayed, inasmuch as it only applied to the way of settling disputes between the parties to the charterparty and to disputes arising out of the conditions of the charterparty, but not to disputes arising out of the bill of lading. The Portsmouth, 81 L. J. P. 17; [1912] A.C. 1; 105 L. T. 257; 12 Asp. M.C. 23; 55 S. J. 615—H.L. (E.)

Express Contract of Liability for Unseaworthiness—Ship Unseaworthy—Limitation of Time for Making Claims—Whether Limitation Applied in Case of Unseaworthiness — Transhipment of Goods.]—The indorsees of bills of lading sued the shipowners for breach of contract, and for damages for injury to the goods carried. The goods were shipped at Wellington, New Zealand, upon the Clan Maclaren. At Port Pirie some of the goods were transhipped into the Geelong. The Clan Maclaren arrived on April 13, 1912, and the Geelong on April 23. The goods were damaged owing to the unseaworthiness of the Clan Maclaren. Clause 3 of the bill of lading provided for the possible transhipment of goods. Clause 12 provided, "No claim that may arise in respect of goods shipped by this steamer will be recoverable unless made at the port of delivery within seven days from the date of steamer's arrival there." Clause 14 provided, "the shipowners shall be responsible for loss or damage arising from any unseaworthiness of the vessel when she sails on the voyage." No claim was made by the plaintiffs till more than seven days after the arrival of either vessel. Bailhache, J., held that as the Clan Maclaren was unseaworthy clause 12 of the bill of lading, which limited the time for making claims, had no application :—Held, that, as there was an express condition in the bill of lading making the shipowners liable for damage resulting from unseaworthiness, clause 12 applied. But held by Pickford, L.J., and Bankes, L.J., that the clause was not clear and unambiguous, and did not protect the shipowners as regards the goods transhipped from the Clan Maclaren to the Geelong. Tattersall v. National Steamship Co. (53 L. Conveyance Involving Transhipment—Unseaworthy Barge—Liability of Person Providing Barge.]—Where the owner of goods contracts with a steamship company under a through bill of lading for their conveyance and delivery, including transhipment by barge at a port en route, a company which contracts with the steamship company to supply a barge to tranship the goods commits a tort against the owners of the goods by supplying an unseaworthy barge and is liable to them for damages. The Termagant, 19 Com. "Shipped in apparent good order and condition"—"Contents unknown"—Goods Shipped in Damaged Condition—Estoppel—Liability of Shipowners to Indorsees of Bill of Lading.]—Sugar in bags was shipped at a port in Mexico for carriage to London. When put on board, the bags were in such a state that the mate made the following note on the receipt given by him: "Very wet and stained by contents." The bill of lading stated that the bags were "shipped in apparent good order and condition," and also contained the words "weight, contents . . . unknown." The sugar was in fact externally damaged before shipment by both fresh and sea water, and was not damaged by an excepted peril after shipment. In an action by indorsees of the bill of lading in respect of the damage to the sugar, held that the shipowners were estopped by the terms of the bill of lading from proving in accordance with the fact that the goods were in bad condition when shipped, and that as the sugar, which was stated in the bill of lading to have been shipped in apparent good order and condition, had been delivered damaged by an external cause not due to an excepted peril, the shipowners were liable for the difference between the value of sound sugar and the sugar as delivered. Compania Naviera Vascongada v. Churchill & Sim (75 L. Exemptions — Short Delivery of Cargo — Unidentified Residue—Rights of Consignee.] — Where in discharging the cargo of a ship there is a shortage of delivery, and also a residue of unidentified goods, the shipowner cannot compel the consignees to take the unidentified goods as a pro tanto fulfilment of the contract to deliver. Sandeman v. Tyzack and Branfoot Steamship Co., 83 L. On the arrival of a ship laden with bales of jute at her port of discharge fourteen bales were found to be missing, and there were eleven bales which could not be identified as forming part of any of the consignments shipped. In an action by the shipowners for freight,—Held, that the consignees were entitled to set off the value of the fourteen bales not delivered, and could not be compelled to allocate amongst themselves the eleven bales unidentified in reduction of such short delivery, and that the shipowners were not protected by a clause in the bills of lading by which the ship was not to be liable "for inaccuracies, obliteration, or absence of marks, numbers, or description of goods shipped." Ib.

Non-delivery at Port of Loading.] — The plaintiffs bought from the defendants under a c.i.f. contract, for delivery in London, 100 tons of block gambier, which the defendants declared per their steamship Selandia sailing from Singapore. The block gambier had been shipped under a bill of lading making it deliverable in Copenhagen. On the arrival of the vessel in London the defendants, not having received the bill of lading, gave the plaintiffs delivery orders against payment, but when these were presented delivery was refused, and the vessel took the goods on to Copenhagen. More than a month later the goods were delivered to the plaintiffs in London. Meanwhile, the plaintiffs had suffered loss by a fall in the market. The plaintiffs also bought under a c.i.f. contract, for delivery in London, a parcel of pepper from C. M. & Co., who had bought it from the defendants and who declared it per the same vessel sailing on the same voyage. The bill of lading provided for delivery at Copenhagen, and it was indorsed by the defendants "To be delivered in London" and was then handed to the plaintiffs against payment. Delivery in London was refused, and the pepper was carried on to Copenhagen and thence back to London. Meantime, there had been a fall in the market with a resulting loss to the plaintiffs. The conditions in both bills of lading provided that the ship might carry the goods beyond their destination, and that the shipowners were not to be responsible for loss arising from late or wrong delivery or overcarriage. In an action by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendants the amount of the loss,—Held, that as in the case of the block gambier the defendants did not deliver a bill of lading answering the requirements of the contract they could not in that case rely upon the conditions in the bill of lading, and as in the case both of the block gambier and the pepper the conditions did not apply where the vessel had actually been in the port of destination of the goods for the purpose of delivering cargo, the defendants were liable for the loss. Sargant v. East Asiatic Co., 32 T. 3. Exemptions from Liability.

a. Seaworthiness, Warranty.

See also Vol. XIII. 325, 2041.

Exception from Liability for Latent Defect—Incorporation in Bill of Lading of Australian Sea Carriage of Goods Act, 1904.]—A bill of lading contained a stipulation that "any latent defects in the hull and tackle shall not be considered unseaworthiness, provided the same did not result from want of due diligence of the owner . . . or manager." By a "clause paramount" it was provided that the bill of lading was "to be read and construed as if every clause therein contained which is rendered illegal or null or void by the [Australian] Sea Carriage of Goods Act, 1904, had never been inserted therein." By that Act it is provided that in every bill of lading a warranty of seaworthiness shall be implied, and that any clause in a bill of lading, whereby any obligation to exercise due diligence and to properly equip the ship, to make her seaworthy, and to make the ship's hold fit for cargo, is lessened or avoided, shall be null and void: Held, that the incorporation of that Act in the bill of lading did not render the stipulations as to latent defects null and void; and that it was open to the shipowners, sued for damages to the cargo arising from unseaworthiness due to defects in the ship, to establish as a defence that the defects were latent and did not result from want of due diligence on their part. Charlton & Bayshaw v. Law & Co., [1913] S. Through Bill of Lading—Goods to be Transhipped at Ship's Expense and Shipper's Risk — Damage to Goods during Transhipment through Unseaworthiness of Lighter—Negligence—Liability of Shipowner.]—Goods were shipped at New York, under a through bill of lading, for conveyance to a port in Sweden via Hull. By the bill of lading the goods were to be delivered in good order and condition at Hull, "to be thence transhipped at ship's expense and shipper's risk to the port of N," the carrier to "have liberty to convey goods in craft and or lighters to and from the steamer at the risk of the owners of the goods." The goods arrived safely at Hull, and were there put on board a lighter in order to be transhipped into a vessel bound for N. in Sweden. The lighter was unseaworthy and sank in the dock, and the goods were damaged:—Held, that the shipowners were guilty of negligence, and were not protected by the clause in the bill of lading. Wilson, Sons & Co. v. b. Fire.

Exclusive of Section 502 of Merchant Shipping Act.]—A bill of lading provided that the goods were to be delivered "in the like good order and condition subject to the clauses and conditions expressed in this bill of lading, which constitutes the contract of freight between the shipowners, shippers, and consignees." It also provided that "the shipowners and/or charterers are not responsible for any loss, detention, or damage to the goods or the consequences thereof, or expenses occasioned by any of the following causes, viz.: . . fire on board, in hulk, in craft, or on shore; explosions, heat, defects in hull, tackle, engines, boilers, machinery, or their appurtenances, or accidents arising therefrom; perils of the seas . . . and all accidents of navigation . . .; nor for any act, neglect, or default of the pilot, master, crew, stevedores, engineers, or agents of the shipowners . . . or by unseaworthiness of the ship at the commencement of or at any period of the voyage, provided all reasonable means have been taken to provide against such unseaworthiness, or by any other cause whatever":—Held, that the parties had by the terms of the bill of lading excluded the operation of section 502 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and that it was intended that the shipowners should be liable for loss of goods by fire if they had failed to take reasonable means to provide against unseaworthiness. Virginia Carolina Chemical Co. v. Norfolk and North American Steam Shipping Co. (No. 1), 81 L. J. K.B. 129; [1912] 1 K.B. 229; 105 L. T. 810; 12 Asp. M.C. 82; 17 Com. Cas. 6; 28 T. L. R. 85—C.A. Questions of fact directed to be tried, 82 L. J. K.B. 389; [1913] A.C. 52—H.L. (E.)

The Court of Appeal having decided as a preliminary question of law that section 502 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1892, which exempts the owner of a British sea-going ship from liability for loss or damage to goods by fire where the loss or damage happens without his actual fault or privity, applies to protect the shipowner, even although there has been a breach by him of the warranty of seaworthiness, but that the parties to a contract for carriage of goods by sea may, by the terms of their contract, exclude the operation of this section, and that on the construction of a bill of lading the parties had excluded the operation of the section, the House of Lords, on appeal thereto from the Court of Appeal's decision, directed that the facts should be ascertained before the preliminary question of law could be decided. On the re-hearing,—Held, that the vessel in question was not unseaworthy when she started on her voyage, and that the fire which caused the damage to the plaintiff's goods was occasioned by an act of negligence on the part of one of the ship's engineers, for which act of negligence the shipowners were exempt from liability by the terms of the bill of lading. Virginia Carolina Chemical Co. v. Norfolk and North American Steam Shipping Co. (No. 2), 107 L. T. 320; 17 Com. Cas. 277; 56 S. J. 722; 28 T. L. R. 513—Hamilton, J.

The plaintiffs shipped goods on board the defendants' vessel. The bill of lading provided that the goods were "to be delivered subject to the exceptions and conditions herein mentioned, in the like good order and condition." Among the exceptions thus referred to were the following: "1. Fire on board, in hulk or craft, or on shore, stranding and all accidents, loss and damage whatsoever from defects in hull, tackle, apparatus . . . or from perils of the seas . . . or from any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the pilot, master, officers, engineers, crew, stevedores, servants, or agents of the owners and/or charterers, ashore or afloat, in the management, loading, stowing, discharging, or navigation of the ship, or other craft, or otherwise, the owners and/or charterers being in no way liable for any consequences of the causes before mentioned." "11. It is agreed that the maintenance by the shipowners of the vessel's class (or, in the alternative, failing a class, the exercise by the shipowners and/or charterers or their agents of reasonable care and diligence in connection with the upkeep of the ship) shall be considered a fulfilment of every duty, warranty, or obligation, and whether before or after the commencement of the said voyage." The plaintiffs' goods were lost without the actual fault or privity of the defendants by reason of fire on board the ship. The ship was unseaworthy at the commencement of the voyage owing to the insufficient packing and bad stowage of a quantity of metallic sodium which was taken on board. The fire was caused by sea water coming in contact with the sodium :—Held, that there was nothing in the terms of the bill of lading which shewed an agreement by the parties to exclude the operation of section 502 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which exempts the owner of a British seagoing ship from liability for the loss of goods happening without his actual fault or privity by reason of fire on board the ship. Ingram & Royle, Lim. v. Services Maritimes du Tréport (No. 1), 83 L. c. Restraints of Princes.

Goods Shipped on Board Vessel with Foul Bill of Health—Decree of French Government as to Fumigation of Ship.]—By a decree of the French Government in force since 1906 it was enacted that a process for the destruction of rats on board ships, and known as dératisation, by means of sulphur fumigation, should be compulsorily effected upon any vessel coming from a port considered to be contaminated by plague and seeking to obtain admission to the port of Marseilles. In 1914, under a bill of lading which contained the exceptions of "restraints of princes" and "any circumstances beyond the shipowner's control," and gave the ship liberty to call at any ports in the course of the voyage, the shipowners received from the plaintiff a quantity of lemons at Naples for carriage to London. The ship had come from Mombasa with a foul bill of health to Naples, where, after loading her cargo, she proceeded to Marseilles. There, owing to the fact that Mombasa was a plague-contaminated port, the ship was, in accordance with the decree, subjected by the authorities to the process of dératisation, with the result that the lemons were damaged. In an action by the plaintiffs for the loss,—Held, (1) that the shipowners were not exempt from liability under the exceptions in the bill of lading; and (2) that, owing to the fact that the ship and cargo would inevitably have to undergo the process of dératisation at Marseilles, with resulting damage to the lemons, the ship was not reasonably fit at Naples for the carriage thereof, and was therefore unseaworthy. Ciampa v. British India Steam Navigation Co., 84 L. Danger from Minefields—Safe Port—Parcel of Beans—Prohibition of Export.]—The plaintiffs were the holders of a bill of lading dated before the war, and containing the exception "restraint of princes," and relating to a parcel of soya beans which formed part of the cargo of a steamship belonging to the defendants. By the terms of the bill of lading the vessel was to call at Port Said for orders, and to deliver the beans at the port there ordered, or so near thereto as she might safely get. Orders were duly given for Amsterdam in October, 1914. The vessel had other cargo for Hull, and on her arrival there the defendants, owing to danger from minefields, declined to let her go on to Amsterdam, claiming that they had performed their bill of lading obligations, and on non-payment of the freight they lightered and warehoused the beans. Meantime the authorities ordered the beans to be detained pending enquiry, and ultimately they prohibited their export. In an action by the plaintiffs for failure to carry the beans to Amsterdam, the defendants counterclaimed for freight and lighterage and warehouse charges :—Held, that though the passage from Hull to Amsterdam was not so attended with danger from minefields as to make Amsterdam not a safe port, and the defendants broke their contract by not sending the vessel there, yet as the exception "restraint of princes" excused their failure to carry to Amsterdam, they were immune from resultant damages, but they could not recover the freight and lighterage and warehouse charges. Semble, that the words "so near thereto as she may safely get" in the bill of lading did not cover the port of Hull. East Asiatic Co. v. *Tronto S.S. Ship not Liable "for inaccuracies, obliteration, or absence of marks," &c.] — On the arrival of a ship laden with bales of jute at her port of discharge fourteen bales were found to be missing, and there were eleven bales which could not be identified as forming part of any of the consignments shipped. In an action by the shipowners for freight,—Held, that the consignees were entitled to set off the value of the fourteen bales not delivered, and could not be compelled to allocate amongst themselves the eleven bales unidentified in reduction of such short delivery, and that the shipowners were not protected by a clause in the bills of lading by which the ship was not to be liable "for inaccuracies, obliteration, or absence of marks, numbers, or description of goods shipped." Sandeman v. Tyzack and Branfoot Steamship Co., 83 L. Strikes — Clause Exempting Shipowners from Liability in Certain Circumstances.]—The A., owned by the O.S. Co., Lim., and managed by A. H. & Co., left Adelaide on April 10 last, bound to London and Liverpool with a general cargo including 2,794 sacks of flour belonging to plaintiffs, and including fruit and meat in her refrigerating chambers. Plaintiffs' flour was for delivery in London. The A. arrived at Gravesend at 9.38 A.M. on May 24 (Friday before Whit-Sunday), and at the time there was a strike throughout the Port of London which would or might have prevented the discharge in London of the cargo in the A. The strike also would or might have prevented the loading of coal on the A. necessary for the working of her refrigerator. The vessel, which had only 100 tons of coal on board, equal to one day's consumption for refrigerator and steaming purposes, required an immediate further supply of coal. There was no way of ascertaining how long the strike would last, and in fact the strike continued till the month of August. Under these circumstances the A. proceeded at once to the Hook of Holland, arriving there on May 25, where she took a sufficient quantity of coal on board. Learning that the strike still continued, she proceeded on May 26 towards Liverpool, where she arrived on May 28, and discharged her cargo, including plaintiffs' cargo and other London cargo. A. H. & Co., by their agents, J. S. & Sons, of London, notified all the owners of London cargo by circular of May 25 that it was being discharged at Liverpool, and offering delivery there. Plaintiffs declined to take delivery elsewhere than in London. Plaintiffs' cargo was brought freight free to London at the beginning of July by the steamship P., another steamer managed by A. H. & Co., and was delivered to plaintiffs in London. As a result of the discharging of the plaintiffs' cargo at Liverpool instead of London, transhipment expenses and dock dues at Liverpool amounting to 30*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* were paid by the defendants to the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, and were charged to the plaintiffs by the defendants. Of this the plaintiffs had paid 30*l.* under protest, and now sought to recover the said sum. The important clause of the bill of lading, leaving out the immaterial words, was to this effect: "If the master reasonably anticipates that delivery will be impeded at the port of delivery by strikes, the master may at any point of the transit, at the risk and expense of the owner of the goods, tranship or land or otherwise dispose of the cargo, or any part thereof, and the same may be re-shipped or forwarded, or he may proceed on the voyage with the whole or part of the goods, and discharge the same on the return voyage, or forward them to their destination from another port always subject to the conditions of the forwarding conveyance. . . . If the discharge of the cargo be or threatens to be impeded by absence from whatever cause of facilities of discharge, the master to have liberty at ship's expense, but shipper's risk, to put the whole of the cargo into hulk, lighter. . . . Transhipment of cargo for ports where the ship does not call or for shipowner's purposes to be at shipowner's expense":—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed, as in the events which happened the expenses were not thrown upon the owners of the goods. Wiles v. Ocean Steamship Co., 107 L. Bill of Lading Incorporating Charterparty—Negligence Clause—Loss of Cargo by Negligence of Master and Crew—Liability of Shipowners.]—Where cargo-owners shipped goods under a charterparty in pursuance of a contract which stipulated that the charterparty should be in a particular form, and the bill of lading contained the words "all other conditions as per charterparty," the bill of lading was held to incorporate the charterparty, which contained a negligence clause exempting the shipowners from liability for negligence. The shipowners were accordingly held not liable for the jettison of cargo made necessary by the negligence of the master and crew. The Draupner, 79 L. J. P. 88; [1910] A.C. 450; 103 L. "Shipped in apparent good order and condition" — "Contents unknown" — Goods Shipped in Damaged Condition—Estoppel—Liability of Shipowners to Indorsees of Bill of Lading.]—Sugar in bags was shipped at a port in Mexico for carriage to London. When put on board, the bags were in such a state that the mate made the following note on the receipt given by him: "Very wet and stained by contents." The bill of lading stated that the bags were "shipped in apparent good order and condition," and also contained the words "weight, contents . . . unknown." The sugar was in fact externally damaged before shipment by both fresh and sea water, and was not damaged by an exeepted peril after shipment. In an action by indorsees of the bill of lading in respect of the damage to the sugar, held that the shipowners were estopped by the terms of the bill of lading from proving in accordance with the fact that the goods were in bad condition when shipped, and that the sugar, which was stated in the bill of lading to have been shipped in apparent good order and condition, had been delivered damaged by an external cause not due to an exeepted peril, the shipowners were liable for the difference between the value of sound sugar and the sugar as delivered. Compania Naviera Vascongada v. Churchill & Sim ([1906] 1 K.B. 237) followed. Martineaus v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 106 L. "Neglect, default, or error of judgment in the navigation or management of the vessel" —Damage to Cargo by Delay.]—A cargo of fruit was shipped in the defendants' vessel from Gandia to London under bills of lading by which the defendants were not liable for the master's neglect, default, or error in judgment in the navigation or management of the vessel, and which gave liberty to proceed to and stay at any port (although in a contrary direction to or out of the route of the port of discharge) "for loading or discharging cargo or passengers or for any purpose whatsoever." On the voyage, in December, 1914, the master put into Corunna and remained there twenty-three days, as he feared his bunker coals would not be sufficient and as he was not willing to brave the weather at that season or to face the dangers which he anticipated on the voyage between the north-west of Spain and London. The fruit was damaged by the delay in transit, and the plaintiffs, as indorsees of the bills of lading to whom the property had passed, and as consignees and owners of their respective parcels, claimed damages from the defendants:—Held, that the default of the master in putting into and remaining at Corunna was not a neglect, default, or error of judgment in the navigation of the vessel within the exceptions in the bills of lading, that the deviation to and the delay at Corunna were not covered by the liberty given to proceed to ports outside the route of the voyage for the purposes specified, that the defendants were not protected by the exceptions, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to damages. The Renée Hyaffil, 32 T. 4. Indorsement, Assignment and Transfer.

Wrongful Delivery to Consignee — Indorsement of Bill of Lading by Consignee to Bank —Title Subsequently Accruing—Trover.]—A contract provided for the sale of certain oil to P. & Co. on the terms of cash against documents, P. & Co.'s name being inserted in the bill of lading at their request as shippers, and the bill of lading provided for the oil to be delivered to them or to their order. The draft attached to the bill of lading was then sold by the sellers to certain bill brokers, who subsequently sold the same on exchange to a bank at Amsterdam. On the arrival of the oil in London, P. & C. obtained from the defendants, who were the agents of the shipping company by whose vessel the oil was carried, delivery of the oil, without delivery of the bill of lading, on an indemnity being given by P. & Co. P. & Co. then approached the plaintiffs, who, as London correspondents of the Amsterdam bank, were holding the bill of lading as against the draft, and arranged with them to advance the money to take up the draft on condition that the plaintiffs should retain the bill of lading, which P. & Co. thereupon indorsed. In an action for trover,—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed, as, although P. & Co. were not entitled to the possession of the bill of lading, the plaintiffs took over the rights of the Amsterdam bank on crediting them with the amount of the draft, which rights were perfected by the indorsement by P. & Co. of the bill of lading. London Joint-Stock Bank v. British Amsterdam Maritime Agency, 104 L. Lump Sum Freight — Loss by Excepted Peril—Delivery of Part of Cargo—Right of Shipowner to Recover Freight.]—By a charterparty a ship of the respondents was to proceed to a named port and there load a full and complete cargo of pit props, and then proceed to a port in the United Kingdom and deliver the same to the appellants on being paid as freight a lump sum of 1,600*l.*, to be paid in cash on unloading and right delivery of the cargo. The charterparty contained an exception of "perils of the seas." The ship duly loaded her cargo, and proceeded to the port of discharge, but was wrecked outside that port by perils of the seas, and became a total loss. About three-quarters of the cargo was saved and delivered to the appellants:—Held, that the shipowners were entitled to the full freight. Thomas v. Harrowing Steamship Co., 83 L. J. Dead Freight—Liability of Bill of Lading Holders.]—A bill of lading was in the following terms: "Shipped . . . being marked and numbered as in the margin . . . unto order, he or they paying freight for the said goods and performing all other conditions and exceptions as per charterparty . . . per the rate of freight as per charterparty per ton of 2,240 lb. gross weight delivered in full; sixpence less if ordered to a direct port on signing last bill of lading." The charterparty provided (inter alia) as follows: "Freight twelve shillings and sixpence sterling per ton . . . all per ton of 2,240 lb. English gross weight delivered . . . charterers to have the option of shipping other lawful merchandise . . . in which case freight to be paid on steamer's dead weight capacity for wheat or maize in bags at the rates above agreed on for heavy grain . . . but steamer not to earn more freight than she would if loaded with a full cargo of wheat or maize in bags." The vessel left port half loaded owing to the fact that the charterer could provide no further cargo:—Held, that, on the true construction of the bill of lading and charterparty, the plaintiffs were only entitled to payment at the rate of 12*s.* per ton gross weight delivered, and could not support a claim in respect of dead freight. Red "R" Steamship Co. v. Allatini, 103 L. T. 86; 15 Com. Cas. 290; 11 Asp. M.C. 434; 26 T. L. R. 621—H.L. (E.)

Held, also, that the defendants were entitled to 5 per cent. interest on the sum deposited with the dock company. Ib.

Authority to Collect — Assignment.] — The master of a steamer gave to the plaintiffs, who were the agents of the steamer at the port where she discharged her cargo, a document in the following terms: "I hereby authorize Messrs. H. G. Harper & Co., Cardiff, to collect the freight due to my steamer the s.s. Casablanca on the cargo of timber from Riga ex my steamer." The plaintiffs in consideration of receiving that document made disbursements on behalf of the steamer. The freight on the cargo, which was timber, could not be ascertained till after it was measured, but the cargo was delivered to the various consignees, leaving the amount of freight payable to be ascertained after the steamer had left the port. The plaintiffs sued the receivers of a parcel of timber for the freight due in respect of such parcel without joining the owners of the steamer as plaintiffs, alleging that such freight had been assigned to them:—Held, that the document given by the master of the steamer to the plaintiffs was a mere authority to collect the freight on behalf of the owners of the steamer, and was neither a legal nor an equitable assignment of the freight; that if it was an assignment at all it was only an equitable assignment, and that therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to sue for the freight in their own name. Harper & Co. v. Bland & Co., 84 L. Lien for Unsatisfied Freight — Cargo — Debenture-holders' Action — Receiver and Manager—Powers of Receiver.]—The respondent was in a debenture-holders' action appointed receiver and manager of Ind, Coope & Co., and as such carried on the company's business. He wrote to the company's agents at Malta an order for the delivery of beer and signed the letter "Ind, Coope & Co. By Arthur F. Whinney, Receiver and Manager." The beer was sent under a bill of lading which provided that the shipowner should have a lien for the freight and charges, not only on the goods sent, but also "for any previously unsatisfied freight and other charges due either from shippers or consignees to the shipowner." The Malta agents claimed not only the freight for the particular cargo, but also the unsatisfied freight and charges on previous consignments. It had for years been the practice of Ind, Coope & Co. to ship their goods under bills of lading containing the stipulation as to previously unsatisfied freight:—Held (Lord Shaw and Lord Mersey dissenting), that as a bill of lading primarily affects only the particular cargo shipped, and as the respondent was both shipper and consignee, the respondent was not bound by the stipulations as to previous freight. By Lord Atkinson: The respondent had no power without leave of the Court to create such a lien. Moss Steamship Co. v. Whinney, 81 L. J. K.B. 674; [1912] A.C. 254; 105 L. T. 305; 12 Asp. IX. DEMURRAGE.

1. Time and Calculation of Days.

See also Vol. XIII. 457, 2072.

"Working day"—"Surf day"—Custom of the Port of Iquique—Effect of Custom in Construction of Charterparty.]—A cargo of lumber was shipped on board the plaintiff's ship for delivery at the port of Iquique under a bill of lading which provided that the charterers or assigns should pay freight "and all other conditions as per charterparty." The charterparty, which provided for a certain number of lay days for loading and discharging the ship, contained a clause that discharge was to be given with "despatch according to the custom of the port of discharge (but not less than thirty mille per working day) at such safe wharf, dock or place as the charterers or their agents shall designate," and for each and every day's detention by default of the charterers or their agents a certain sum was to be paid. In an action by the plaintiffs against the assigns of the bill of lading to recover demurrage for delay in the discharge of the cargo at Iquique the defendants, in respect of certain days for which demurrage was claimed, pleaded in effect that according to the custom of the port of Iquique these days, when entered by the captain of the port in the register of the port as "surf days," were not included in the term "working day"; that the plaintiffs at the time the charterparty was made or at the time of the loading of the ship either knew or ought to have known that there was a well-established custom of the port of Iquique that "surf days"—that is, days on which the operation of unloading was not only dangerous to life and property, but was commercially impracticable—were not reckoned as working days, and that this custom applied also to half surf days, which were only reckoned as half working days, and that on days or part days which appeared as surf or half surf days in the port register, or in the alternative days or part days which were in fact surf days, persons who had engaged to take delivery were not bound to do so; and that the charterparty, according to the customary interpretation put upon one in that form, incorporated every custom of the port of discharge, and where the port of discharge was Iquique the custom of that port as regards surf days; that at that port the words "working day" in the charterparty meant what they would mean at the port of Iquique according to the custom of that port, and that all parties to the charterparty were bound by the custom:—Held, upon the facts stated in the pleadings, and assuming them to be true, that, as the custom was not too vague and unreasonable so that it could not be applied for the purpose of construing the charterparty, it was a valid custom which excluded "surf days" from "working days," and that the plaintiffs, therefore, were not entitled to recover demurrage in respect of "surf days." British and Mexican Shipping Co. v. Lockett, 80 L. Rate but no Time Specified—Obligation of Ship to Wait after Expiration of Time Limited for Loading.]—In cases where the charterparty contains a clause limiting the rate of loading and discharging cargo, but not limiting the number of days the ship may be kept on demurrage, the latter will be limited by law to what is reasonable in the circumstances, as circumstances may happen to exist or emerge. View of Lord Trayner in Lilly v. Stevenson (22 Rettie, 278, at p. 286) followed. Wilson v. Otto Thoresen's Linie, 79 L. J. K.B. 1048; [1910] 2 K.B. 405; 103 L. T. 112; 15 Com. Colliery Guarantee — Incorporation in Charterparty—Exceptions—"Any other cause beyond my control "—"Ejusdem generis."]—By a charterparty the plaintiff chartered the defendants' ship the Aldgate to proceed to Hull (Alexandra Docks) and "there take on board as tendered in the usual manner according to the custom of the place as per colliery guarantee" a full and complete cargo of coals. The Aldgate was "to be loaded in 120 hours on condition of usual colliery guarantee." The colliery guarantee given by the plaintiff contained the following clause: "Sundays, Saturdays, bank holidays, cavilling days, and colliery holidays excepted. Time not to count until after the said steamer is wholly unballasted and ready in dock to receive her entire cargo. Strikes of pitmen or workmen, frosts or storms, and delays at spouts caused by stormy weather, and any accidents stopping the working, leading, or shipping of the said cargo, also restrictions or suspensions of labour, lock-outs, delay on the part of the railway company either in supplying waggons or leading the coals, or any other cause beyond my control, such stoppage occurring any time between the present date and actual completion of loading always excepted." The Aldgate arrived in the Alexandra Dock, Hull, and gave notice of readiness to load by 9 A.M. on July 23, 1907; and her lay hours would then begin to run subject to any exceptions in the colliery guarantee, and would expire on July 30 at 9 A.M. Owing, however, to the large number of ships which were waiting to load in turn before the Aldgate, she did not get to a berth under a tip until midnight, August 1, and she completed loading her cargo on August 7. The delay arose in part from the inability of the railway to deal with the traffic. In a claim by the owners of the Aldgate for demurrage, —Held, that the Aldgate was an arrived ship when she arrived in the dock and gave her notice of readiness to load on July 23 at 9 A.M., and that the lay hours then commenced to run; that the exception in the colliery guarantee of "any other cause beyond my control" must be read ejusdem generis with the words that preceded them, and that the exception did not prevent the lay hours running against the plaintiff. Thorman v. Dowgate Steamship Co., 79 L. Time to Count—"Strikes . . . or any cause beyond the control of the charterer"—Deficiency of Railway Waggons for Taking Delivery of Cargo.]—A printed clause in a charterparty provided as follows: "The steamer to be loaded in usual turn, with customary despatch, at Goole, and discharged in thirty-six running hours, commencing first high water on or after arrival at or off the berth, unless berthed before, but time, unless used, not to commence between 6 P.M. and 6 A.M. . . ." On the margin the following clause was written: "When steamer loads at Hull seventy-two running hours will be allowed for loading and discharging, which time is to commence when steamer is at or off loading berth, but should steamer be prevented from entering the loading dock owing to congestion time to commence from the first high water after arrival off the dock":—Held, that when the steamer loaded at Hull the words in the printed clause "time . . . not to commence between 6 P.M. and 6 A.M." did not apply, and that the time commenced to count from the time the steamer got to the loading berth. The charterparty also contained the following exception clause: "Strikes of workmen, lock outs, pay days, idle days or cavilling days, or riots, or frost, rain or floods, or any accident or any cause whatsoever beyond the control of the charterer which may prevent or delay her loading or unloading excepted." At the port of discharge there was a delay of seventeen hours owing to a deficiency of railway waggons, this being due to the abnormal demands upon the railway company at the material time. On a claim for demurrage in respect of the seventeen hours.—Held, that the words in the exception clause, "or any cause whatsoever," were sufficiently wide to exclude the ejusdem generis rule of construction; that in the circumstances the charterers came within the exceptions clause, and were therefore not liable for demurrage. France, Fenwick & Co. v. Spackman, 108 L. Despatch Money — "All time saved in loading"—Sunday.]—A charterparty provided that the ship should load at a certain rate per running day "(Sundays . . . excepted)," and for demurrage, and contained a clause that the owners should pay as despatch money "10*l.* per day for all time saved in loading." The charterer was entitled to ten and a half lay days, but only occupied five days in loading. A Sunday intervened between the expiration of these five days and that of the lay days:—Held, that in calculating the number of days in respect of which despatch money was payable, the Sunday must be included, so that the charterer was entitled to payment of despatch money for six and a half days. Mawson Shipping Co. v. Beyer, 83 L. 2. PLACE.

Ship to Go to Wharf "or so near thereunto as she may safely get"—Wharf Occupied by Another Vessel—Strike at Port—Ship Ordered by Harbour Master to Another Place in Port—Delay at that Place—Possibility of Discharge into Lighters—Ship whether Arrived.]—By a charterparty it was agreed between the plaintiffs, the owners of the steamship Fox, and the defendant, the charterer, that the steamship should load a cargo of flour at Hull and should proceed with all convenient speed "to London as ordered or so near thereunto as she may safely get," and there deliver the same, cargo to be discharged in two weather working days, and if longer delayed demurrage to be paid at the rate of 7*l.* a day. The charterparty contained no clause exempting the plaintiffs from liability for loss resulting from strikes. The defendant ordered the steamship to go to Keen's Wharf at London. On May 25, 1912, she arrived opposite Keen's Wharf, but could not get alongside the wharf owing to another vessel being berthed there. She then went, pursuant to the order of the harbour master, to a place called East Lane Tier, about a quarter of a mile from the wharf where she lay. On June 12, 1912, no part of her cargo having yet been discharged, she went, pursuant to the order of the defendant's agent, to Chatham, where by June 14, 1912, she completed discharging her cargo. During the whole of the time the Fox was at London the other vessel had remained at Keen's Wharf, and a general dock strike had been in existence at the Port of London. The evidence shewed that, notwithstanding the strike, the cargo of the Fox could have been discharged into lighters at East Lane Tier by her crew or by the defendant's men, but that that was not a usual place of discharge, and that it was not customary to discharge cargoes of flour into lighters. The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendant in the County Court, claiming seventeen days' demurrage from May 28, 1912, to June 14, 1912. The County Court Judge gave judgment for the defendant. The Divisional Court reversed this decision and gave judgment for the plaintiffs. The defendant appealed. The Court of Appeal, by a majority, reversed the judgment of the Divisional Court, and restored that of the County Court Judge, Buckley L.J., and Scrutton, J., held that by the contract the plaintiffs were bound in the first instance to wait a reasonable time for the berth at Keen's Wharf to become vacant; that, if the plaintiffs had waited a reasonable time for that berth to become vacant, they would have been entitled to call upon the defendant to take delivery of the cargo at an alternative place so near thereunto as she could safely get, provided they gave them notice of the alternative place selected and called upon them to take delivery there; that they had never called upon the defendant to take delivery at East Lane Tier; that therefore the Fox was never an arrived ship; and that the plaintiffs could not recover. Kennedy, L.J., held that in the circumstances the obstacle to the Fox getting a berth at Keen's Wharf was of so permanent a character that the alternative destination of a place so near thereunto as she could safely get at once came into force in favour of the plaintiffs; that no formal notice by the plaintiffs of a claim to be on demurrage at the alternative place was required; that East Lane Tier was a place where the cargo of the vessel could reasonably have been discharged by means of lighters and was a place as near to the wharf as she could safely get; that the Fox on reaching East Lane Tier was an arrived ship; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. The Fox, 83 L. Reasonableness—Custom—Port of Novorossisk—Distinction between Law and Custom.]—A custom is a reasonable and universal rule of action in a locality, followed, not because it is believed to be the general law of the land or because the parties following it have made particular agreements to observe it, but because "it is in effect the common law within that place to which it extends." Alleged custom of the port of Novorossisk considered. Anglo-Hellenic Steamship Co. v. Dreyfus, 108 L. T. 36; 12 Asp. M.C. 291; 57 S. J. 246; 29 T. L. R. 197—Scrutton, J.

"Customary steamship despatch as fast as the steamer can deliver"—Stevedore to be Named by Charterers—Custom for Discharge by Harbour Authority—Negligent Delay—Liability of Charterers.]—By the terms of a charterparty a cargo of pits props was to be discharged with the customary steamship despatch as fast as the steamer could deliver during the ordinary working hours of the port, but according to the custom thereof, certain days excepted. The cargo was to be taken from alongside the steamer at charterers' risk and expense as customary. There was a proviso for demurrage at a certain rate per ton should the steamer be detained beyond the time stipulated. Discharging was to be effected by the charterers' stevedore, the steamer paying for it at a fixed rate. The steamer was sent to a proper dock in the port, and to a proper quay in this dock, and was there discharged by the harbour authority, as this was the custom in the port in the case of such cargoes, and she was not discharged by a stevedore named by the charterers. The harbour authority discharged negligently, causing detention of the steamer. In an action by the shipowners against the charterers for demurrage,—Held, that the charterers were not liable, because the words of the charterparty as to discharge did not amount to a contract to discharge in a specified time, so as to create a liability independently of the rest of the contract; and because the harbour authority was not the agent of the charterers, or no more their agent than the shipowners' agent, and therefore the charterers were not responsible for the harbour authority's negligence. Dicta in Weir & Co. v. Richardson (3 Com. 4. Causes of Delay.

a. Strikes.

Strike Clause—"Workmen essential to the discharge of the cargo"—"Loading" and "Discharge."] —A charterparty contained a strike clause providing that if the cargo cannot be discharged by reason of a strike or lock-out of any class of workmen essential to the discharge of the cargo, the days of discharging shall not count during the continuance of such strike or lock-out." On the arrival of the ship at the port of discharge a strike of carters was in existence, in consequence of which the docks had become congested, and this condition of affairs rendered it impossible for the consignee to accept delivery of the cargo, there being neither space for the cargo in the docks, nor means of taking it away when tendered over the ship's rail:—Held, that the carters in these circumstances were not a "class of workmen essential to the discharge" within the meaning of the clause. Held, also, that "discharge" is a joint act, necessitating co-operation on the part of the ship and the receiver of the cargo, and that the obligation of the ship under this term is fulfilled when its crew or its stevedore's men are in a position to offer, and do offer, delivery to the consignee over the ship's side. Langham Steamship Co. v. Gallagher, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 348; 12 Asp. M.C. 109—K.B. D.

Loading Delayed by Strike.] —A charterparty for the carriage of a cargo of coal which stipulated for the completion of the loading within a certain period, contained a clause exempting the charterers from liability for time lost through strikes, or any unavoidable accidents beyond their control "preventing or delaying the working, leading, or shipping of the said cargo." In an action for demurrage against the charterers they pleaded this clause of exception, averring that the delay had been caused by a strike. It was proved, first, that a strike of coal trimmers had caused the colliery company, with whom the charterers had contracted for delivery of the coals, to restrict their output and they did not deliver the coals in time for the loading which, but for the strike, they would probably have done; but secondly, that the contract between the charterers and the colliery company contained no clause binding the company to deliver the coals in time for the loading; and thirdly, that it would not have been impossible for them to deliver the coals in time had they been bound to do so:—Held, that the charterers were liable for demurrage in respect that—even if the strike were the direct cause of the delay, which was not proved—the failure of the charterers to contract for the timeous delivery of the coal was a failure to take reasonable measures to prevent avoidable delay, which excluded them from the benefit of the exception in the charterparty. Dampskibsselskabet Danmark v. Poulsen & Co., [1913] S. C. 1043—Ct. of Sess.

Delay by Strike—Construction of Clause Relating to Time Allowed for Discharging.]—A charterparty contained the following clause: "Time to commence when steamer is ready to unload and written notice given, whether in berth or not. In case of strikes, look-outs, civil commotions, or any other causes or accidents beyond the control of the consignees which prevents or delays the discharging, such time is not to count unless the steamer is already on demurrage":—Held, that the clause did not mean that time was not to count at all if a strike delayed the discharging, but that time should not count to the extent of any delay caused by a strike. London and Northern Steamship Co. v. Central Argentine Railway, 108 L. T. 527; 12 Asp. M.C. 303—Scrutton, J.

By a charterparty, time for discharging was to commence "when steamer is ready to unload and written notice given whether in berth or not. In case of strikes . . . which prevent or delay the discharging such time is not to count unless the steamer is already in demurrage." The ship arrived at her port of discharge on January 12, and gave notice that she was ready to discharge. At that time a strike was going on, and no work was done till January 27, when work was partially resumed. On February 15 the strike ended. Between January 27 and February 15 six and a quarter normal days' work was done. The ship did not get a discharging berth on March 23:—Held, first, that "such time" in the charterparty meant the time for which the discharging was actually prevented or delayed by a strike, and did not apply to a delay in getting a berth in consequence of a strike; and secondly, that the period between January 27 and February 15 should be excluded, except six and a quarter days. London and Northern Steamship Co. v. Central Argentine Railway (108 L. T. 527) approved. Central Argentine Railway v. Marwood, 84 L. J. K.B. 1593; [1915] A.C. 981—H.L. (E.)

Exemption of any "claim for damages" for Delay "by reason of" Strike—Congestion at Port Following on Termination of Strike.] —A charterparty which allowed ten days on demurrage beyond the lay days at a certain rate, contained a clause providing that the days for discharging should not count during the continuance of a strike, and also providing that in case of delay "by reason of" a strike "no claim for damages" should lie. The ship was detained at the port of discharge for four days beyond the lay days, not owing to the continuance of a strike, but owing to congestion following on the termination of a strike. In an action for demurrage for these four days,—Held, first (following Leonis S.S. Co. v. Rank (No. 2) (13 Com. Cas. 295), that the detention was a "delay by reason of" a strike, which excluded claims for damages; and secondly, that claims for damages for delay were not limited to claims for detention beyond the demurrage period, but included claims for demurrage. Moor Line, Lim. v. Distillers Co., [1912] S. C. 514—Ct. of Sess.

Per Lord Salvesen: Demurrage is agreed damages to be paid for delay of the ship in loading or unloading beyond an agreed period; the distinction between demurrage and damages for detention being that one is liquidated damages and the other unliquidated. Ib.

Discharge "with customary steamship dispatch according to the custom of the port"—Exception of Strike of "workmen essential to the discharge"—Strike of Workmen in Charterers' Yard.]—A firm of wood merchants chartered a ship to bring a cargo of pit props from St. Petersburg to Granton. The charterparty did not stipulate for lay days, but provided that the ship should be discharged "with customary steamship dispatch . . . according to the custom of the" port; with the proviso that if the cargo could not be discharged by reason of a strike of any class of workmen "essential to the . . . discharge of the cargo" the time for discharging should not count during the continuance of such strike. It was the custom of the port of Granton for cargo to be discharged direct into railway waggons, and it was the charterers' practice to have the loaded waggons brought into their woodyard, which was near the dock, in order that the props might be sorted before being sent to purchasers. When the ship arrived at Granton a strike of workmen in the charterers' yard was in progress, and, although there was no scarcity of labour at the quay, the railway company, knowing that the waggons would be detained in the yard, refused to supply them except for conveyance of cargo direct from the quay to purchasers. Part of the cargo was so dealt with, but the discharge of the remainder was delayed, and the ship was detained for eleven days beyond the normal period for discharge. In an action against charterers for demurrage,—Held, first, that they had failed to discharge with "customary dispatch" in respect that the delay was due to circumstances affecting, not the discharge—which was complete when the cargo was transferred to the railway waggons, of which there was an ample supply—but only the subsequent disposal of the cargo: and secondly, that they could not rely on the strike clause in the charterparty, as the strike was not of "workmen essential to the discharge." Dampskibsselskabet Svendborg v. Lore & Stewart, Lim., [1915] S. C. 543—Ct. of Sess.

b. Other Causes.

See also Vol. XIII. 482, 2093.

Delay in Berthing—Port Regulations as to Unloading—Ejusdem Generis.—A ship of the plaintiffs was chartered by the defendants under a charterparty dated August 25, 1909, to carry coal to the port of S. Clause 8 of the charterparty provided that the cargo was "to be taken from alongside by consignees at port of discharge . . . at the average rate of 500 tons per day . . . provided steamer can deliver it at this rate; if longer detained consignees to pay steamer demurrage. . . . Time to commence when steamer is ready to unload and written notice given, whether in berth or not. In case of strikes, lockouts, civil commotions, or any other causes or accidents beyond the control of the consignees which prevent or delay the discharging, such time is not to count. . . ." On September 22, 1909, the steamer moored inside the port, and a written notice of readiness to unload was given. At that time all the berths in the port were occupied, and none became vacant till September 25, when the ship was berthed alongside a wharf. At this port there had been a regulation since 1907 that shore labourers should not work at a ship until she was in berth alongside a wharf. Shore labourers were required by the ship to bring the cargo to the ship's rail and by the consignees to take the cargo from there, and therefore no unloading commenced till September 25. The plaintiffs claimed demurrage in respect of the delay:—Held, that, in view of the provision in the charterparty that time for demurrage was to commence when the steamer was ready to unload and written notice given, "whether in berth or not," the steamer must be regarded as ready to unload on September 22; that the words in the earlier part of clause 8 of the charterparty—"provided steamer can deliver at this rate"—had no reference to a delay due to a lack of shore labour; and that the delay in unloading was not due to a cause ejusdem generis with "strikes." And held, therefore, that the plaintiffs were entitled to demurrage in respect of the delay. Northfield Steamship Co. v. Union des Gaz, 81 L. J. K.B. 281; [1912] 1 K.B. 434; 105 L. T. 853; 17 Com. Cas. 74; 12 Asp. M.C. 87; 28 T. L. R. 148—C.A.

"Detention by cranes"—"Other unavoidable cause"—Delay in Getting Berth.]—A demurrage clause in a charterparty excepted from the time specified for loading a number of causes of delay, including strikes, floods, riots, storms, accidents to machinery, "detention by cranes," "or any other unavoidable cause":—Held, first, that delay caused by failure to get a berth, and consequently the use of a crane, owing to congestion of shipping at the port of loading, was not a "detention by crane" within the meaning of the charterparty; and secondly, that such delay was not covered by the words "or any other unavoidable cause," these words referring to causes ejusdem generis with the enumerated causes, and not to delays arising naturally in the ordinary routine of working the port. Abchurch Steamship Co. v. Stinnes, [1911] S. C. 1010—Ct. of Sess.

"Stoppage at collieries"—Temporary Restriction of Output of Colliery—Causes which "prevent or delay the loading."]—A charterparty stipulated that a vessel should load a cargo of coals in sixty running hours, time not to count in cases of "delays through stoppages at collieries with which steamer is booked to load," or "any accidents or cause beyond control of the charterers which may prevent or delay the loading." A colliery company, who were supplying to the charterers a certain class of coal which was to form part of the cargo, having temporarily restricted the output of their pits for the purpose of economic working and thereby diminished the supply of that class of coal, failed to deliver coal alongside the vessel in sufficient quantities to allow loading to proceed continuously, and the consequent delay caused the vessel to exceed her stipulated loading time :—Held, that the charterers were not relieved from a claim for demurrage by the clause of exemption in the charterparty in respect, first, that the restricted output of the coal in question was not a "stoppage at collieries" in the sense of the charterparty, and, secondly, that it did not "prevent or delay the loading," but delayed the provision of the cargo, and that the obligation on the charterers to provide a cargo was an absolute duty unless expressly excepted. "Arden" Steamship Co. v. Mathwin, [1912] S. C. 211—Ct. of Sess.

Deck Cargo—Damage to Vessel by Shifting—Time Occupied by Repairs—"Damage preventing working of vessel"—Liability of Shipowner.]—The owners of a steamship chartered her to the charterers by a charterparty which contained the following clause : "In the event of loss of time from deficiency of men or stores breakdown of machinery collision docking stranding or other accident or damage preventing the working of the vessel for more than twenty-four consecutive hours the time lost shall be allowed to the charterers including first twenty-four hours . . . but should the vessel be driven into port or to anchorage by stress of weather or from accident to the cargo such detention or loss of time shall be at the charterers' expense." The vessel was loaded with a cargo of lumber, including a deck cargo. While on her voyage she encountered heavy weather, and the stowage of the deck cargo shifted and caused damage to the vessel. It was thereupon decided to put into port, where it became necessary to discharge the deck cargo and do certain repairs to the vessel, with the result that she was detained for a period of thirty-three days seventeen hours, of which nine days and twelve hours were occupied by the repairs. Upon a claim by the owners in respect of the detention,—Held, that the time occupied in repairing the damage to the vessel could not be included in the time lost under the last words of the above clause, that during the time occupied by such repairs the vessel was off hire, and that an allowance must be made to the charterers in respect of the period of nine days and twelve hours as being time lost from "damage preventing the working of the vessel." Burrell v. Green & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 192; [1915] 1 K.B. 391; 112 L. T. 105; 20 Com. Cas. 84; 12 Asp. M.C. 589—C.A.

Arrival of Ship before Bills of Lading—Refusal of Master to Discharge until Bills of Lading Produced—Offer of Bank Guarantee.]—A ship carrying pit props from a port in Sweden to a port in the Firth of Forth arrived, as often happened in the trade, before the bills of lading, which were sent by post. Contrary to the usual practice in such cases, the master, acting on the charterer's instructions, refused to discharge the cargo without production of the bills, although the consignees were ready to take delivery, and offered to give a bank guarantee indemnifying him from all liability. After a delay of some twenty-four hours the ship began to discharge the cargo, under an arrangement between the agents of the charterer and a railway company, into the hands of the railway company as wharfingers, and continued to do so until the arrival of the bills of lading, when she delivered the remainder of the cargo to the consignees. The bills of lading provided : "the captain to deliver all cargo on ship's railing, and the same to be taken from there by the consignee notwithstanding any custom of the port to the contrary. The goods to be received as fast as the steamer can deliver day and night, or the same will be landed or put into lighters at the risk and expense of the consignee." In an action by the charterer against the vendees of the cargo for demurrage in respect of the detention of the ship prior to the commencement of the discharge :—Held, that the defenders were not liable—per the Lord President, on the ground that there was no unqualified obligation on the part of the consignees, either at common law or under the contract, to produce the bills of lading as soon as the ship was ready to discharge, and that the detention of the ship was due to the unreasonable conduct of the pursuer, and not to the fault of the consignees; per Lord Skerrington, on the ground that as the bills of lading did not specify any period within which the cargo must be discharged, the obligation on the consignees was to use the utmost dispatch practicable in the circumstances, which had been done. Lord Johnston was of opinion that, although the consignees were not entitled to delivery of the cargo until the bills of lading were produced, the circumstances of the detention of the ship were such as could not justify more than nominal damages. Carlberg v. Wemyss Coal Co., [1915] S. Detention beyond Lay Days for more than a Reasonable Time—Damages—Basis of Assessment.]—It was provided by demurrage clauses in two charterparties that cargo should be discharged from vessels at a specified rate; but if the vessels were "longer detained" demurrage at a named rate was payable :—Held, that it could not be implied that that clause was applicable to, and damages at the demurrage rate payable for, a reasonable period of detention only, but that damages were payable at the demurrage rate over the whole period of detention. Western Steamship Co. v. Amaral Sutherland & Co., 82 L. 1. Loading.

Notice of Readiness to Load—Coal Cargo—Right to Cancel—Stoppage at Colliery Continuing for Five Days from Time of Steamer being Ready to Load.]—By a charterparty dated February 29, 1912, the Adalands was to proceed to Hull and there load a complete cargo of coal. No particular colliery was specified. Clause 5 provided that the cargo was to be loaded in seventy-two running hours, "time to count when notice of readiness to receive the entire cargo is given to the staithman or colliery agent or handed in to his office between the hours of 6 A.M. and noon. The loading date to be not before 6 A.M. on the 7th April, but seven clear days' written notice of definite loading date to be given by owners. . . ." Clause 6 provided that "the parties hereto mutually exempt each other from all liability (except under the strike rules) arising from or for time lost through riots, strikes, lock-outs of workmen, or disputes between masters and men, or by reason of accidents to mines or machinery, obstructions on railways or in harbours (not including congestion of ships or traffic), or by reason of frosts, floods, fogs, storms, and any unavoidable accidents and hindrances beyond their control, either preventing or delaying the working, loading, or shipping of the said cargo, occurring on or after the date of this charter until the expiration of the loading time. . . . In the event of any stoppage or stoppages arising from any of these causes (other than a 'strike' as defined in the strike rules) continuing for the period of five days from the time of the steamer being ready to load at the colliery or collieries for which she is stemmed, this charter shall become null and void, provided, however, that no cargo shall have been shipped on board the vessel previous to such stoppage or stoppages." The shipowners notified the charterers that the vessel would be ready to load on April 22, 1912. On April 16, 1912, the charterers refused to load as they said they could not get coal from a particular colliery owing to a stoppage at the colliery such as was contemplated by clause 6. On April 19, 1912, the shipowners notified the charterers that the vessel was in Hull roads on that date ready for loading and at their disposal. The charterers not having loaded any cargo on the Adalands the shipowners claimed damages:—Held, first, that the five days mentioned in clause 6 must be counted from April 22, although the vessel was in fact ready to load on April 19; and secondly, that the word "stoppage" in clause 6 meant an entire stoppage of work, and that as the charterers had failed on the evidence to shew that there was an entire stoppage which prevented any loading for five days from April 22, they were liable in damages for refusing to load. Aktieselskabet Adalands v. Whitaker, 18 Com. Cas. 229—Pickford, J.

Detention of Vessel at Port of Loading—Right of Charterer to Refuse to Load.]—The principle which entitles a charterer to refuse to load a vessel if he has reasonable ground for believing that she will not be able to proceed to her destination with the cargo on board within a commercially reasonable time owing to the existence of a war cannot be applied to a case where a vessel may be delayed in starting on her voyage through a strike in this country, which, however, does not prevent the loading of the cargo. Ropner & Co. v. Ronnebeck, 84 L. J. K.B. 392; 112 L. T. 723; 20 Com. Cas. 95—Bailhache, J.

Ready to Load—Maize Cargo—Bunker Coal Stored on Deck.]—Held, on the evidence, that a steamship was ready to load a cargo of maize, notwithstanding that she had, when tendered to the charterers, a large quantity of coal stored on deck between the bulwarks and the raised coamings, which coal had formed part of the outward cargo and was bought by the shipowner as bunker coal for the homeward voyage. London Traders' Shipping Co. v. General Mercantile Shipping Co., 30 T. Rights and Obligations of Harbour Authority—Duty to Provide Labour for Loading Cargo or Permitting Shipowner to Employ Labour—"Trade dispute."]—A ship belonging to a Belfast firm, after its arrival at Ayr harbour for the purpose of loading a cargo, was detained there owing to the refusal of the harbour employees to work the ship. These employees were members of a Scottish trade union, and their refusal to do the work was due to the existence of a strike of the shipowners' workmen at Belfast. The shipowners offered to supply their own labour to load the ship, but the harbour trustees refused the offer on the ground that they would not permit outsiders to work their cranes. The local secretary of the Scottish trade union had threatened a general strike in the harbour if outside labour was imported. In an action of damages for the detention of the ship, brought by the shipowners against the harbour trustees, the defenders maintained that they were not in the circumstances bound to load the ship or to allow it to be loaded by outside labour in respect, first, that they had a reasonable discretion in the matter, and, secondly, that, if there was a duty resting on them, performance was, in the circumstances, excused by reason of its impossibility. They also maintained that, as they were acting in furtherance or contemplation of a trade dispute in Belfast or otherwise with their own employees they were relieved of liability under section 3 of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906:—Held, that, while the defenders were not, in view of the terms of their private Acts, bound to supply labour, they were bound, if they did not do so, to allow shipowners to employ their own labour; and, as this was not in the circumstances impossible, they were liable to the pursuers in damages. Held also, that section 3 of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, did not apply. Milligan & Co. v. Ayr Harbour Trustees, [1915] S. C. 937—Ct. of Sess.

2. Loss by Fire.

Damage to Goods—Fire—Exceptions—Warranty of Seaworthiness—Liability of Shipowner.]—Section 502 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which protects the owner of a British sea-going ship from liability to make good any loss or damage to goods by reason of fire on board the ship happening without his actual fault or privity, applies whenever there has been damage to goods by fire without the shipowner's fault or privity, irrespective of whether there has been a breach by him of the warranty of seaworthiness. Virginia Carolina Chemical Co. v. Norfolk and North American Steam Shipping Co. (No. 1), 81 L. J. K.B. 129; [1912] 1 K.B. 229; 105 L. T. 810; 12 Asp. M.C. 82; 17 Com. Cas. 6; 28 T. L. R. 85—C.A. Appeal compromised, 82 L. J. K.B. 389; [1913] A.C. 52—H.L. (E.)

The Court of Appeal having decided as a preliminary question of law that section 502 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1892, which exempts the owner of a British sea-going ship from liability for loss or damage to goods by fire where the loss or damage happens without his actual fault or privity, applies to protect the shipowner, even although there has been a breach by him of the warranty of seaworthiness, but that the parties to a contract for carriage of goods by sea may, by the terms of their contract, exclude the operation of this section, and that on the construction of a bill of lading the parties had excluded the operation of the section, the House of Lords, on appeal thereto from the Court of Appeal's decision, directed that the facts should be ascertained before the preliminary question of law could be decided. On the re-hearing,—Held, that the vessel in question was not unseaworthy when she started on her voyage, and that the fire which caused the damage to the plaintiff's goods was occasioned by an act of negligence on the part of one of the ship's engineers, for which act of negligence the shipowners were exempt from liability by the terms of the bill of lading. Virginia Carolina Chemical Co. v. Norfolk and North America Steam Shipping Co. (No. 2), 107 L. T. 320; 12 Asp. M.C. 233; 17 Com. Cas. 277; 56 S. J. 722; 28 T. L. R. 513—Hamilton. J. See preceding case.

Statutory Protection in Case of Fire on Board — Agreement to Exclude Operation of Statute — Terms of Bill of Lading.] — The plaintiffs shipped goods on board the defendants' vessel. The bill of lading provided that the goods were "to be delivered subject to the exceptions and conditions herein mentioned, in the like good order and condition." Among the exceptions thus referred to were the following: "1. Fire on board, in hulk or craft or on shore, stranding and all accidents, loss and damage whatsoever from defects in hull, tackle, apparatus . . . or from perils of the seas . . . or from any act, neglect or default whatsoever of the pilot, master, officers, engineers, crew, stevedores, servants, or agents of the owners and/or charterers, ashore or afloat, in the management, loading, stowing, discharging, or navigation of the ship, or other craft, or otherwise, the owners and/or charterers being in no way liable for any consequences of the causes before mentioned." "11. It is agreed that the maintenance by the shipowners of the vessel's class (or, in the alternative, failing a class, the exercise by the shipowners and/or charterers or their agents of reasonable care and diligence in connection with the upkeep of the ship) shall be considered a fulfilment of every duty, warranty, or obligation, and whether before or after the commencement of the said voyage." The plaintiffs' goods were lost without the actual fault or privity of the defendants by reason of fire on board the ship. The ship was unseaworthy at the commencement of the voyage owing to the insufficient packing and bad stowage of a quantity of metallic sodium which was taken on board. The fire was caused by sea water coming in contact with the sodium:—Held, that there was nothing in the terms of the bill of lading which shewed an agreement by the parties to exclude the operation of section 502 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which exempts the owner of a British seagoing ship from liability for the loss of goods happening without his actual fault or privity by reason of fire on board the ship. Ingram & Royle, Lim. v. Services Martimes du Tréport (No. 1), 83 L. Fire Caused by Unseaworthiness — Loss without Actual Fault or Privity of Owner — Burden of Proof.] — By section 502 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894: "The owner of a British sea-going ship . . . shall not be liable to make good . . . any loss or damage happening without his actual fault or privity . . . where any goods, merchandise, or other things whatsoever taken in or put on board his ship are lost or damaged by reason of fire on board the ship." A ship carrying a cargo of oil was unseaworthy at the commencement of her voyage by reason of defects in her boilers. She encountered bad weather, and was driven on shore in consequence of want of steam power caused by the condition of the boilers. The oil escaped from the tanks, caught fire, and was lost:—Held, that under the above section the onus was on the shipowners of proving the absence of actual fault or privity on their part, and, in the case of a company, the onus was on the registered managing owner of shewing that he did not know, and ought not to have known, of the unseaworthy condition of the ship. Lennard's Carrying Co. v. Asiatic Petroleum Co., 84 L. Shipowners Responsible to Charterers for Full Delivery of Cargo—Stevedores to be Employed by Charterers, though Shipowners to be Responsible for Proper Stowage—Theft of Cargo by Stevedores—Shipowners not Responsible for Short Delivery or for Damages Occasioned by the Theft. —By a charterparty shipowners were made responsible for full and complete delivery of the cargo and also for its proper stowage by the stevedores, but the stevedores were to be employed by the charterers. When loading the ship for a voyage to Brazil the stevedores stole part of the cargo, and owing to their theft the charterers were unable to make full delivery at the Brazilian port. As the cargo actually delivered did not correspond with that shewn on the ship's manifest, the Brazilian Government imposed fines on the local agent of the charterers. The charterers reimbursed their agent, and also paid damages to the owners of the goods which were stolen; and they now sought to recover the amounts of the fines and damages so paid by them from the shipowners:—Held, that the clause in the charterparty which made the shipowners responsible for full and complete delivery of the cargo did not apply where the loss of cargo had been occasioned by the felonious acts of the charterers' own servants, and that therefore the shipowners were not liable for either the fines or the damages. Query, whether, if the charterers had been protected by their bill of lading from any obligation in consequence of the theft to pay damages to the owners of the goods, they could nevertheless under the charterparty have compelled the shipowners to make good the loss. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co. v. Macintyre, 16 Com. Cas. 231—D.

Goods to be Taken from Alongside by Consignees as Soon as Vessel Ready to Discharge — Right of Shipowners to Land and Store Goods — Freight Payable before Delivery — Consignees not Ready to Take Delivery — Storage of Goods by Shipowners in Warehouse —Right of Consignees to Delivery on Depositing Freight with Warehousemen.] — Goods were shipped at Antwerp for delivery at Southampton under a bill of lading which provided that freight was payable before delivery and that the goods were "to be taken from alongside by the consignees as soon as the vessel is ready to discharge and to receive same as fast as the steamer can deliver . . . and wherever the steamer is to discharge, or otherwise they may be landed, put into lighters, or stored by the steamer's agents . . . at the expense of the consignees." At Southampton the consignees were not ready to take delivery when the steamer discharged, nor did they then pay the freight: whereupon the shipowners stored the goods in a warehouse, having previously given to the warehousemen a general notice that all goods landed by the shipowners were landed for ship's purposes, and were to be held for the shipowners, without whose instructions, accompanied by their release for freight, the goods were not to be delivered. No amount of freight was mentioned by the shipowners in their notice to the warehousemen:—Held, that the storage by the shipowners of the goods in the warehouse was not a warehousing of them under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and therefore that the consignees were not entitled to obtain delivery of the goods by depositing with the warehousemen the amount of the freight under section 495, sub-section 2 of the Act. Dennis v. Cork Steamship Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 660; [1913] 2 K.B. 393; 108 L. T. 726; 18 Com. Cas. 177; 12 Asp. M.C. 337; 29 T. L. R. 489—Scrutton, J.

Short Delivery of Cargo — Unidentified Residue — Rights of Consignee.] — Where in discharging the cargo of a ship there is a shortage of delivery, and also a residue of unidentified goods, the shipowner cannot compel the consignees to take the unidentified goods as a pro tanto fulfilment of the contract to deliver. Sandeman v. Tyzack and Branfoot Steamship Co., 83 L. J. P.C. 23; [1913] A.C. 680; 109 L. T. 580; 12 Asp. M.C. 437; 57 S. J. 752; 29 T. L. R. 694—H.L. (Sc.)

Discharge by Shipowners—Damage to Bags Containing Cargo — Liability for Repairs.] — Where an obligation rests upon shipowners to discharge the cargo, in the absence of any stipulation to the contrary, the cost of repairing bags in which the cargo is carried, in order that it may be delivered in proper condition, falls upon the shipowners and not upon the charterers. Leach v. Royal Mail Steam Packet Co., 104 L. T. 319; 16 Com. Cas. 143; 11 Asp. M.C. 587—Channell, J.

—— "Workmen essential to the discharge of the cargo"—"Loading" and "Discharge."] —A charterparty contained a strike clause providing that "if the cargo cannot be discharged by reason of a strike or lock-out of any class of workmen essential to the discharge of the cargo, the days of discharging shall not count during the continuance of such strike or lock-out." On the arrival of the ship at the port of discharge a strike of carters was in existence, in consequence of which the docks had become congested; and this condition of affairs rendered it impossible for the consignee to accept delivery of the cargo, there being neither space for the cargo in the docks, nor means of taking it away when tendered over the ship's rail:—Held, that the carters in these circumstances were not a "class of workmen essential to the discharge" within the meaning of the clause. Held, also, that "discharge" is a joint act, necessitating co-operation on the part of the ship and the receiver of the cargo, and that the obligation of the ship under this term is fulfilled when its crew or its stevedore's men are in a position to offer, and do offer, delivery to the consignee over the ship's side. Langham Steamship Co. v. Gallagher, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 348; 12 Asp. M.C. 109—K.B. D.

Liability for Damage to Ship through Negligent Discharge.]—A charterparty provided as follows: "Cargo to be loaded, stowed and discharged free of expense to steamer, with use of steamer's winch and winchmen if required":—Held, that this clause had not the effect of transferring the duty of discharging the cargo from the shipowner, on whom it rests at common law, to the charterer, so as to render the latter responsible for damage received by the ship in the course of discharge. Ballantyne & Co. v. Paton & Hendry, [1912] S. C. 246—Ct. of Sess.

Through Bill of Lading—Liability of Each Carrier for his Own Stage of Transit—Shipowner's Duty—Burden of Proof.]—Under a through bill of lading for the carriage of flour from Minneapolis, U.S.A., to Glasgow, signed by an agent "on behalf of carriers severally, but not jointly," each of whom was to be responsible only for his own stage of the transit and to mark the condition of the goods as received by him, and certify such condition and any deficiency or injury done to the goods to his successor, a small proportion of the flour was at New York, when it was loaded in the rain and much wetted, found to be "caked," and a large quantity found to be similarly injured on arrival at Glasgow:—Held, that the shipowner was liable for the damage done to the flour between New York and Glasgow. The burden of proof lies upon the shipowner, who, if he accepts goods as in apparent good order and condition, takes the responsibility of delivering them in the same condition, unless he shews that the damage (if any) was done before he received the goods or was caused by perils excepted in his part of the contract. Crawford v. Allan Line Steamship Co., 81 L. Custom of Port—Custom Limited to Particular Cargoes from Particular Ports.]—A steamer loaded a cargo of barley in sacks at a North Pacific port, under a charterparty which provided for discharge at a safe port or ports in the United Kingdom "according to the custom at port of discharge for steamers." The steamer was ordered to discharge at the port of Leith, where the consigners demanded delivery of the barley in the original sacks. The shipowners, however, claimed the right to discharge the cargo according to a custom which they alleged prevailed at that port with regard to cargoes of grain shipped on steamers from North Pacific ports, whereby the grain was bulked in the hold, from which it was hoisted in tubs to the deck and poured into sacks of a uniform size:—Held, on the evidence, that the alleged custom had been proved and was binding on the consignees. Strathlorne Steamship Co. v. Baird & Sons, Lim., [1915] S. C. 957—Ct. of Sess.

—— Port of Hull—Wheat in Bags—Loose Grain in Hold—Discharge—Distribution among Several Consignees.]—A cargo of wheat in bags was shipped on the plaintiffs' steamer from Australian ports to Hull by several consignors, in parcels, for several consignees, including both the defendant companies, and on the arrival of the steamer at Hull some of the wheat had escaped from the bags and could not be identified as having come from any particular parcel. The plaintiffs, in the course of discharge, caused any slack bags to be filled with the loose grain and delivered to each of the consignees his proper number of bags provisionally and subject to account, and at the close of the discharge ascertained the proportion which the total weight of the bags discharged bore to the total bill of lading weights, and in the case of any consignee who had received less than his proper proportion, made up the deficiency as far as possible out of the loose grain. In case of dispute the shipowner made out a pro rata statement, shewing all the proportions to be delivered. Although each of the defendant companies had received its proper number of bags the first defendant company alleged the delivery to them to be five tons short, and the delivery to the second defendant company to be the same amount in excess, of their proper respective quantities. In an action by the plaintiffs against the first defendant company for freight and in the alternative against the second defendant company for the return of wheat delivered to the second instead of to the first defendant company, the first defendant company counter-claimed against their co-defendants for wheat delivered to, and wrongly retained by, the latter. The Judge found, upon the evidence, that the plaintiffs, in making delivery as above described, had acted in accordance with a custom of the Port of Hull, and that by this custom any consignee who had provisionally received more than his proper share had received the excess to the use of those consignees who were still in deficiency and was under an obligation to deliver it to such consignees on demand. He also found that the pro rata statement was binding on all consignees. He accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiffs against the first defendant company and for the first defendant company on their counterclaim against their co-defendants:—Held, on appeal, that the Judge's decision must be affirmed, per Avory, J., on the grounds that there was evidence to support the Judge's finding as to the custom and that it was neither unreasonable nor uncertain and was therefore valid in law, and that any consignee having knowledge of the custom was under an implied contract to redeliver to any other such an amount as the proportional distribution required; and per Lush, J., on the ground that, whether there was sufficient evidence of a clear and uniform custom or not, the second defendant company had full cognizance of the method of dealing with wheat at the Port of Hull, and as they allowed loose grain which was the joint property of all the consignees to be placed in their bags, the law would raise an implied promise on their part that they would redeliver to consignees whose weight was short such a quantity as was shewn by the pro rata statement to be the proper quantity to be delivered. Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Leetham & Sons, Lim., 32 T. Landing Charges—London Clause—Ship Discharging at Riverside Wharf.]—On the construction of a bill of lading.—Held, that the London clause and the landing charges exigible thereunder by the ship only applied when she discharged her cargo in a dock, and did not apply when she discharged at a riverside wharf. Produce Brokers Co. v. Furness, Withy & Co., 106 L. T. 636; 12 Asp. M.C. 188; 17 Com. Cas. 165; 28 T. L. R. 329—Scrutton, J.

XI. AVERAGE.

See also Vol. XIII. 580, 2112.

Unseaworthiness — Burden of Proof.]—Though it is a principle of law that the onus of proving unseaworthiness lies upon those who allege it, effect must be given to such presumptions of fact, arising from the age of the vessel, the low classing or non-classing, the non-survey of the ship, the refusal to insure, admitted defects, and bad record of the vessel, as tend to shift the burden of proof. Lindsay v. Klein, 80 L. J. P.C. 161; [1911] A.C. 194; 104 L. T. 261; 11 Asp. M.C. 563—H.L. (Sc.)

Shipowners sued cargo owners for a contribution in general average:—Held, that the cargo owners were not liable, for in the circumstances the onus was on the shipowners of shewing that the ship was seaworthy at the commencement of the voyage, and they had failed to discharge that onus. Ib.

Sacrifice and Expenditure — Ship Entering Dock in Interests of Ship and Cargo—Ship Intentionally Striking Pier—Damage to Property of Third Person — Contribution from Cargo Owner.]—The plaintiffs' vessel, having been seriously damaged by stranding, was being towed to a place where she could be put on the ground for the greater safety of the ship and cargo. Before reaching that place, however, she was found to be leaking badly, and the master and pilot decided to take her into a dock close by, to enter which she had to pass between two piers. Both the master and pilot contemplated that she would necessarily strike one of the piers and do damage. She in fact struck the pier harder than was anticipated, and damaged both herself and the pier to a considerable extent. To enter the dock under those circumstances was held to be a reasonable and prudent thing to do in the interests of ship and cargo. The shipowners brought an action against the owners of the cargo to recover contribution in general average in respect of the damage to the ship, and also in respect of the damage done to the pier:—Held, that the taking of the ship into the dock was a general average act, that the damage done to the ship in so entering was a general average sacrifice, and that the expense incurred in making good the damage done to the pier, notwithstanding that the expenditure was incurred in making good the damage done to the property of a third person, was a general average expenditure, inasmuch as it was an expense which was foreseen as the natural consequence of the general average act, and that therefore the shipowners could recover contribution in respect of such general average loss from the cargo owner. Austin Friars Steamship Co. v. Spillers & Bakers, Lim., 84 L. J. K.B. 544; [1915] 1 K.B. 833; 20 Com. Cas. 100; 59 S. J. 205; 31 T. L. R. 147—Bailhache, J. Affirmed, 84 L. J. K.B. 1958; [1915] 3 K.B. 586; 20 Com. Cas. 342; 31 T. L. R. 535—C.A.

Held, further, that the common law rule that there is no contribution between joint tortfeasors does not apply in general average, the implied obligation on the part of the cargo owner and shipowner to bear between them in their respective proportions the consequence of every necessary and prudent act for the preservation of ship and cargo, even though that involves the committing of a trespass, being derived from the old Rhodian laws. Ib.

XII. SALVAGE.

1. Generally.

No Real and Sensible Danger — Onus of Proof.]—Before there can be a claim for salvage services, there must be an element of real and sensible danger or a reasonable apprehension of it on the part of the vessel against which the salvage is claimed; if there is an entire absence of this element, the claim of the salvor must fail. The onus of proving salvage services rests upon those who allege them. The Calyx, 27 T. L. R. 166—Evans, P.

Damage to Vessel Rendering Salvage Services.]—In salvage operations, the vessel asking for assistance has a duty cast upon her to accommodate, as far as possible, her own movements to those of the salving vessel, and to render assistance in the common enterprise. 2. Salvage or Towage.

See also Vol. XIII. 611, 2121.

Tug and Tow—Claim that Towage Altered to Salvage.]—In an action of salvage by a tug, engaged in performing a towage service, where the owners, master, and crew of the tug have not discharged the burden of proving that the alteration of the tug's services from towage to salvage was not due either to the inefficiency of the tug or to the negligence of her master and crew, neither the owners nor the master nor the crew can recover a salvage award, although negligence has not been pleaded by the defendants. The Maréchal Suchet, 80 L. J. P. 51; [1911] P. 1; 103 L. T. 848; 11 Asp. M.C. 553; 26 T. L. R. 660—Evans, P.

The tug G. was engaged to tow a sailing ship, which during the towage stranded and was got off by services in which the G., and other tugs belonging to the same owners as the G., were employed, as well as tugs of other owners and two lifeboats, all of whom claimed salvage. Under the towage contract the owners of the G. had stipulated in effect that they should not be responsible for any damage occurring to vessels while in tow of the tug, and that they should not be answerable for any damage by collision or otherwise to any vessel while in tow, whether from any accident or by any negligence of their servants or defect or imperfection in the tug or the machinery, and that the owners of the vessel should undertake all liability for the same. The owners of the ship in their defence to consolidated actions of salvage by the owners, masters, and crews of the tugs and other vessels, while admitting services rendered by the G. and other tugs of the same owners, denied any liability for salvage to these owners in respect thereof on the ground that the stranding was caused by inefficiency of the G., but they did not allege any negligence of her master or crew; they also counterclaimed against the owners of the G. for any salvage due from themselves in respect of services by other vessels. The Court found in effect that the stranding was owing either to inefficiency of the G., or to negligence of her master and crew, or to both combined. At the trial it was admitted by the owners of the G. that if they were not entitled to salvage in respect of the G., then they would not be entitled to it in respect of their other tugs; but it was contended that in any case the masters and crews of all their tugs were entitled to salvage, and especially of the tugs other than the G., as their services had been expressly engaged by the defendants :—Held, that, owing to the facts of the stranding, there was a burden on the owners of the G., when claiming as salvors, to prove both that they had performed the obligations of their contract, and that the towage was altered into salvage by circumstances which could not reasonably be expected or by inevitable accident; that they had not discharged this burden, and therefore could not recover salvage. Held, that the master and crew of the tug G. could not recover salvage as it was left uncertain whether the stranding was caused by their negligence. Held, that, as regards the other tugs belonging to the same owners as the G., their masters and crews were entitled to salvage for engaged services. Held, that the defendants could not recover on their counterclaim, as their plea that the stranding was owing to inefficiency of the tug was not established, but left in doubt; and that the terms of the contract afforded a defence to the counterclaim. Ib.

The ship stranded (as stated above) on the West Shingles Sand at the mouth of the Thames, and her crew having been taken off in heavy weather, thirteen hands on a volunteer lifeboat from Walton boarded her, and did a little discharging and took out a small anchor and kept off some small boats sent, as they alleged, to pillage the ship, and they remained on board when the crew returned about a day afterwards, though told they were not wanted, and did a little work :—Held, that the lifeboat's services did not amount to salvage. Ib.

Towage Contract—"No claim to be made for salvage"—Salvage Services Rendered after Termination of Towage Contract.]—By an agreement made between the plaintiffs, the owners of a tug, and the defendants, the owners of the Glenmorven, which had lost her rudder and had been taken into Vigo, the plaintiffs agreed to tow the Glenmorven from Vigo to the Tyne for 400*l.* The agreement contained these clauses : "No cure, no pay; no claim to be made for salvage." The plaintiffs' tug proceeded to tow the Glenmorven, but bad weather and other difficulties being experienced the master and the crew of the Glenmorven declined to proceed further, with the result, as the Judge found, that the contract of towage came to an end. Thereafter the tug rendered services in the nature of salvage to the Glenmorven :—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover in respect of the salvage services. The Glenmorven, 82 L. J. P. 113; [1913] P. 141; 29 T. L. R. 412—Evans, P.

Salvage of Tow by Tug—Contract between Shipowners and Tug Owners—Term of No Salvage Charges—Whether Cargo Owners Liable for Salvage Services.]—When a vessel containing cargo is being towed under a towage contract made between the owners of the tug and the owners of the vessel in tow, on the terms of "no cure, no pay; no salvage charges," and when, before the towage has come to an end, the vessel in tow is in danger and salvage services are rendered by the tug to the vessel and cargo, the tug-owners are entitled to recover against the owners of the cargo for salvage services. The Leon Blum, [1915] P. 90; 31 T. L. R. 2—Evans, P. Affirmed, 85 L. J. P. 1; [1915] P. 290; 59 S. J. 692; 31 T. L. R. 582—C.A.

3. Salvage or Pilotage.

See also Vol. XIII. 614, 2121.

Compulsory Pilot.]—It is desirable to keep pilots to their duties as pilots as far as one reasonably can, and not to countenance the idea that it is easy for a pilot to convert himself by reason of some additional risk into a salvor, and not to encourage pilots to become searchers after salvage. The defendants' steamship, which had lost her propeller near the Royal Sovereign lightship and had drifted ashore in Rye Bay and had some bumping, afterwards slipped off and lay to her anchors while a lifeboat stood by her. When the weather had moderated, she was taken in tow by two tugs. Off Dungeness the plaintiff, a compulsory pilot, boarded her and took charge of her to Gravesend. The plaintiff was told that the vessel had bumped badly and he feared leakage, but there was no leakage; and there was nothing in the weather, after he came on board, to increase the risk. During the towing from Dungeness there was some sheering, and the tow rope of one of the tugs parted, and a third tug was also engaged, and at Gravesend one of the tow ropes fouled the steamship's anchor, but she was moored safely to the buoys. The plaintiff claimed salvage. The defendants admitted that the lifeboat and the three tugs had rendered salvage services, but said that the plaintiff's services were pilotage services and denied his right to salvage :—Held, that nothing was required to be done or was in fact done by the plaintiff more than ought to be done by a pilot doing his ordinary pilotage work for pilotage reward, and that his claim to salvage must be disallowed, but without costs. The Bedeburn,

King's Ship—Right of Commander, Officers, and Crew to Reward.]—Salvage remuneration awarded to the commander, officers, and crew of a King's ship in respect of services rendered by them to the defendants' steamship. The Domira, 30 T. L. R. 521—C.A.

Ship Requisitioned by Admiralty — Claim for Salvage Services — Whether Consent of Admiralty Necessary.]—By section 557 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, "no claim for salvage services by the commander or crew or part of the crew of any of her Majesty's ships shall be finally adjudicated upon, unless the consent of the Admiralty to the prosecution of that claim is proved":—Held, that where a ship which has been requisitioned by the Admiralty renders salvage services, no claim for such services can be allowed in the absence of the consent of the Admiralty to the prosecution of the claim, inasmuch as such a ship, being in the sole employment of the Crown, is in the same position as a King's ship, although she is not the property of, or demised to, the Crown. The Sarpen, 31 T. L. R. 576—Bargrave Deane, J.

5. Award.

Loss of Fishing Profits—Damages Incurred.]—In awarding salvage remuneration to fishing vessels for services rendered to another vessel, loss of the estimated fishing profits caused by the services cannot be allowed as such, though the Court will take into account the fact of the loss in making its award. Actual damages incurred were awarded by the Court as items of salvage remuneration. The Fairport, 81 L. J. P. 108; [1912] P. 168; 106 L. T. 382; 12 Asp. M.C. 165—Bargrave Deane, J.

Freight under Charter—Inclusion in Value of Property Salved.]—A vessel belonging to the plaintiffs rendered salvage services to a vessel belonging to the defendants when the latter was bound to the Tyne to carry out a charter. By reason of the services the defendants vessel was able to earn her freight under the charter:—Held, in a salvage action, that the freight ought to be taken into account in arriving at the value of the property salved. The Kaffir Prince, 31 T. L. R. 296—Evans, P.

Appeal as to Amount—Grounds for Varying Amount.]—The steamship P. having broken down in the Red Sea in consequence of the disablement of her propeller, an agreement was entered into between her master and the master of the steamship A. for towage of the former steamship by the latter to Suez, the remuneration to be subsequently arranged. The A. accordingly towed the P. to Suez, a distance of 825 miles, at an average speed of 6½ knots per hour, the towing having been interrupted for about six hours by the parting of the hawsers. The value of the P. was 40,000*l.* and of her cargo and freight 229,705*l.*, and the value of the A. was 36,250*l.* and of her cargo and freight 51,750*l.* It was found that in the part of the Red Sea where the salvage services were rendered there was a current setting towards rocky shoals to the eastward, and that for that and other reasons the P. was in a position of some danger. The Judge having awarded the owners of the A. 10,000*l.*,—Held, that the amount of the award was excessive, and that it should be reduced to 6,000*l.* The Port Hunter, 80 L. J. P. 1; [1910] P. 343; 103 L. T. 550; 11 Asp. M.C. 492; 26 T. L. R. 610—C.A.

Several Sets of Salvors — Consolidated Action—Tender—Apportionment.]—In a consolidated salvage action where there is more than one set of plaintiffs claiming remuneration, the defendants, when making a tender in satisfaction of the claim, ought, if their servants were present and are able to give full information to them as to the merits of the salvage services, to apportion the amount tendered between the various sets of salvors. The Burnock, 110 L. T. 778; 12 Asp. M.C. 490; 30 T. L. R. 274—Bargrave Deane, J.

Salvage Action—Affidavit of Value.]—The affidavit of value in a salvage action ought not to be made on information and belief, but ought to be made by a person having actual knowledge of the value. The Orangemoor, 31 T. L. R. 190—Bargrave Deane, J.

XIII. TOWAGE.

See also Vol. XIII. 679, 2132.

Tug and Tow—Collision with Tow—Negligence of Tug—Contract making Crew of Tug Servants of Owners of Tow.]—A collision took place between the plaintiffs' vessel and a barge in tow owing to the negligent navigation of the tug. By the contract between the tug owners and the barge owners the master and crew of the tug became the servants of the barge owners during the towage. The tug master was employed and paid by the tug owners and was subject to dismissal by them alone. The sole control of the navigation of the tug and tow was with the tug:—Held, in an action by the plaintiffs against the tug owners and the barge owners, that, notwithstanding the terms of the contract, the master and crew of the tug were in fact the servants of the tug owners, and that therefore in law the tug owners, and not the barge owners, were responsible for the negligence of the master and crew of the tug. The Adriatic and The Wellington, 30 T. L. R. 699—Evans, P.

Condition Exempting Tug Owner from Liability for "Defect" in "Towing gear"—Defect Existing at Date of Contract—Defect in Attachments of Towing Hooks—Damage to Vessel Towed—Obligation of Tug Owners under Towage Contract — Effect of Exemption.]—By a verbal agreement of towage the defendants, who were tug owners, agreed to tow the plaintiff's steamer from Birkenhead to a dock at Liverpool, subject to the conditions that the tug owners were not to be responsible for any damage to the ship arising from (inter alia) "towing gear (including consequence of defect therein or damage thereto) and whether occasioned by the negligence, default, or error in judgment of the pilot, master, officers, engineers, crew or other servants of the tug owners." During the course of the towage, near the entrance to the dock, the towing gear of the tug carried away, the consequence being that the steamer struck a jetty at the entrance to the dock and was damaged. An action having been brought by the plaintiffs against the defendants for damages for alleged breach of the contract, there were findings of fact that the accident was due to the weakness of the rivets by which the angle bar to which the towing hooks of the tug were attached was fastened to the bulkhead; that at the time of the contract the tug was inefficient on this ground; that the inefficiency could have been ascertained by reasonable care and skill by the defendants; and that they had made no proper inspection of the tug before the contract was entered into:—Held, by the Court of Appeal (affirming the judgment of The President), that, apart from the conditions, the obligation of the defendants under the contract was to supply a tug as fit for the purposes for which it was hired as skill and care could make it; that the conditions did not in this instance exempt the defendants from that obligation, inasmuch as they were limited to defects in the towing gear arising during the period of the towage, and did not extend to defects existing at the commencement of the towage; and further (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting on this point), that the expression "towing gear" in the conditions did not include the rivets in which the defect had existed; and consequently that, having regard to the findings of fact, the defendants were liable. The West Cock, 80 L. J. P. 97; [1911] P. 208; 104 L. T. 736; 12 Asp. M.C. 75; 55 S. J. 329; 27 T. L. R. 301—C.A.

Quære, whether the obligation of the tug owner under the contract of towage amounts to an absolute warranty of the fitness and efficiency of the tug for the intended purpose. Ib.

Damage to Cargo—Tug and Tow—Implied Term — Indemnity.] — The plaintiffs, the owners of cargo on a barge, recovered judgment against the defendants, the owners of the tug towing the barge, for loss of their cargo owing to a collision in which the barge was sunk. The defendants had brought in the barge owners as third parties, alleging that it was an implied term of the contract of towage that the barge owners should indemnify them against such a liability. By the terms of the contract the defendants (the Manchester Ship Canal Co.) were "not to be responsible or liable for damage or injury to any ship vessel or craft, or the persons or goods on board any ship vessel or craft, of which the company may undertake the towage or docking . . . or which may be piloted by any of their servants, . . . or for any loss sustained or liability incurred by any one by reason of such damage or injury, or for any loss or liability incurred in consequence of any such ship vessel or craft colliding with or otherwise damaging any other vessel or thing, or for any loss or liability of any kind whatsoever arising from the towing docking or piloting, whatever may be the cause or causes of such damage injury loss or liability or under whatever circumstances such damage injury loss or liability may have happened or accrued, even though arising from or occasioned by the act omission incapacity negligence or default whether wilful or not of the company's servants or agents or any other persons, or any defects, imperfection or insufficiency of power in or any delay stoppage or slackness of speed of any tug or vessel her machinery or equipment engaged in towing or docking any ship vessel or craft, whether such defect imperfection or insufficiency of power be in existence at the beginning of or during the said towing or docking":—Held, that no such term was to be implied in the contract, and that the defendants were not entitled to an indemnity from the third parties. The Devonshire and The St. Winifred, 82 L. J. P. 61; [1913] P. 13; 108 L. T. 427; 12 Asp. M.C. 314; 29 T. L. R. 86—Evans, P.

Negligence of Tug — Towage Contract — Indemnity.] — When the plaintiffs' tug was towing the defendants' barge a collision took place between the barge and a steamship, and in an action by the owners of the steamship against the present plaintiffs and defendants the tug was found alone to blame and damages were awarded against the tug owners. The towage contract provided that "the tug owners will not be responsible for the acts or defaults of the master or crew of the tug, or of any of their servants or agents . . . nor for any damages, injuries, losses, or delay from whatsoever cause arising that may occur either to the vessel or vessels towed . . . or to any other ship or vessel . . . and the tug owners shall be held harmless and indemnified by the hirer against all damages, injuries, losses, and delay, and against all claims in respect thereof, even though the same be caused or have arisen directly or indirectly from any unseaworthiness, defects . . . or otherwise howsoever":—Held, that the above indemnity covered negligence and the plaintiffs were entitled to be indemnified by the defendants in respect of the damages and costs awarded against them in the collision action and of their own costs in that action. The Wellington, 85 L. J. P. 12; 32 T. L. R. 49—Evans, P.

"No claim for salvage"—Abandonment of Ship by Crew — Termination of Contract — Quantum Meruit — Salvage Reward.] — The plaintiffs, tug owners, contracted that their tug with another tug should tow the defendants' steamship, which had lost her rudder but could use her engines, and had her master and crew on board, from a Spanish port to the Tyne, for the sum of 400*l.*; "no cure, no pay; no claim to be made for salvage." The vessels met with bad weather and the plaintiffs' tug did but little towing, and when eight days out in the Bay of Biscay the master and crew of the steamship abandoned her and left in the other tug for a neighbouring port. The plaintiffs' tug then towed the abandoned steamship to Falmouth, and thence with the assistance of the other tug to the Tyne :—Held, that, owing to the abandonment, the contract came to an end by the fault of the defendants; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to a quantum meruit for their services till the abandonment, and to salvage reward for their subsequent services. The Glenmorven, 82 L. J. P. 113; [1913] P. 141; 29 T. L. R. 412—Evans, P.

XIV. COLLISION.

1. Negligence.

See also Vol. XIII. 685, 2138.

Collision Caused by Fault of Two Independent Third Parties.] — Two steamships came into collision at a narrow part of the river Clyde through no fault on the part of either of them. The collision was caused by one of the ships sheering across the river in her endeavours to avoid running down a tug with a string of barges in tow, which had emerged without warning from a dock in a shipbuilding yard and had steamed across the channel. In the dock in question a large cruiser was being fitted out at the time, and she had been moored by the shipbuilders in such a way that her stern projected for a considerable distance into the navigable channel of the river, in contravention of the by-laws of the Clyde Navigation Trustees. The owners of the two steamships brought actions against—first, the owners of the tug, and, secondly, the shipbuilders, claiming damages against the defenders, jointly and severally, for the injuries suffered in the collision :—Held, that, although the primary cause of the collision was the negligent navigation of the tug, yet, had the cruiser not been moored in this unauthorised position, the collision might have been avoided, and that consequently the shipbuilders were liable jointly and severally with the owners of the tug. Ellerman Lines v. Clyde Navigation Trustees, [1911] S. C. 122—Ct. of Sess.

Good Seamanship — Dangerous Bend in River—Vessel Proceeding against Tide—Duty to Wait.]—A collision occurred at a dangerous bend in a river, where a heavily laden steamship coming up on the flood tide had to make a sharp turn in the channel while she was caught by an eddy or cross stream, making it difficult to turn. The up-coming steamship when caught by the eddy failed to answer her helm, her tow rope to her tug broke, and she struck a steamship, coming down at speed, which met her in the bend :—Held, that the vessel coming down at speed against the tide was under a duty of good seamanship, whether it was the practice or not, to reduce her speed and wait so as not to meet the other vessel in the bend, and, having failed to do so, was alone to blame for the collision. The Ezardian, 80 L. J. P. 81; [1911] P. 92; 104 L. T. 400; 11 Asp. M.C. 602—Bargrave Deane, J.

Launch — Negligence of Vessel near the Launch — Election between Two Risks.] — A large vessel was about to be launched on the Mersey. The appellants' ketch lay near the launching place in a position of danger, from which, although repeatedly requested by the managers of the launch to do so, she refused to move, or to slip her anchor. To postpone the launch would have been attended with danger to life and property, as well as to the launch. The launch was effected; a collision followed, and both vessels were injured :—Held, on the facts, affirming the decision of the Court of Appeal (80 L. J. P. 121; [1911] P. 261), that the owners of the ketch were alone to blame, as the managers of the launch had elected to run the smaller of two risks. The Highland Loch, 81 L. J. P. 30; [1912] A.C. 312; 106 L. T. 81; 12 Asp. M.C. 106; 28 T. L. R. 213—H.L. (E.)

2. Presumption of Fault.

See also Vol. XIII. 707, 2140.

Moving and Stationary Vessels — Onus of Proving Fault—Compulsory Pilot.]—A ship proceeding up the Clyde on a dark foggy night in charge of a compulsory pilot collided with a vessel lying moored at a wharf. The owners of the latter vessel brought an action of damages against the owners of the colliding vessel in which, besides making specific averments of fault against the defenders, they maintained that the fact that their vessel had been run into while stationary raised a presumption of fault against the colliding vessel, and that the defenders could not obtain the protection of section 633 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, except by proof of some specific fault on the part of the compulsory pilot :—Held, that the pursuers had failed to prove that the collision had been caused by the fault of the defenders or those for whom they were responsible. Stephen v. Allan Line Steamship Co., [1911] S. C. 836—Ct. of Sess.

Observations—first, on the presumption of fault on the part of a moving vessel that has collided with a stationary vessel; and secondly, on the necessity of averring and proving specific fault on the part of a pilot before obtaining the protection of section 633 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. Ib.

Retrospective Application of Maritime Conventions Act, 1911.]—The Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, applies to any action of damage by collision, if proceedings were not taken until after the passing of the statute, although the collision occurred before the statute passed; and in such a case the statutory presumption of fault under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, s. 419, sub-s. 4, has no application. The Enterprise, 82 L. J. P. 1; [1912] P. 207; 107 L. T. 271; 12 Asp. M.C. 240; 28 T. L. R. 598—Bargrave Deane, J.

3. Liability.

See also Vol. XIII. 717, 2142.

Action in Rem — Extent of Liability — Appearance—Personal Action—Decree.]—In an Admiralty action in rem for damage, if the defendants, although foreigners, appear, the action becomes a personal action, and the defendants become liable to the full extent of the damage proved, subject to the statutory limitation of shipowners' liability; and accordingly, if judgment goes against them, they are not entitled to a special decree confining their liability to the value of their ship and freight and the costs of the action. The Dupleix, 81 L. J. P. 9; [1912] P. 8; 106 L. T. 347; 12 Asp. M.C. 122; 27 T. L. R. 577—Evans, P.

Doctrine in The Dictator (61 L. J. P. 73; [1892] P. 304) as to the effect of appearance to an action in rem, which was approved by the Court of Appeal in The Gemma (68 L. J. P. 110; [1899] P. 285), followed. Ib.

4. Damages.

See also Vol. XIII. 726, 2142.

Collision in River—Launch and Dredger—Contributory Negligence of Plaintiff—Consequential Damages—Common Law or Admiralty Action.] — An action of damage for collision in a river brought by the owner of a launch against the owners of a dredger with wings employed in dredging the river, is a common law and not an Admiralty action, so that the plaintiff, if his negligence has contributed to the collision, cannot recover damages in respect either of the collision or of subsequent damage arising to the launch without negligence in consequence of the collision. The Blow Boat, 82 L. J. P. 24; [1912] P. 217—Bargrave Deane, J.

Negligence—Wrongful Act Causing Death—Damage to Plaintiff Flowing from Death—Loss of King's Ship and Crew—Pensions Payable by Admiralty to Relatives of Drowned Seamen—Claim by Admiralty to Capitalised Amount of Pensions.]—In an action of damage by collision brought by the Lords of the Admiralty against the owners of a steamship which had through the negligence of those on board run into a submarine and sunk her with sixteen hands, one of the items of the plaintiffs' claim was for the capitalised amount of certain pensions and allowances payable by the Admiralty to relatives of the crew who were drowned:—Held, that the claim failed on the ground that at common law no civil action could be brought in respect of the death of a human being. The Amerika, 83 L. J. P. 157; [1914] P. 167; 111 L. T. 623; 12 Asp. M.C. 536; 58 S. J. 654; 30 T. L. R. 569—C.A.

Semble, pensions paid as a matter of grace, and not under a legal obligation, are not recoverable as damages. Ib.

Workmen's Compensation — Indemnity — Foreign Defendants — Service of Notice — "Damage done by any ship"—"British ship"—"May . . . be served."]—One of the crew employed on the plaintiffs' lightship obtained an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for injury by nervous shock due to fright at seeing the defendants' ship coming into his vessel, the subsequent collision being due to the negligence of defendants' servants. The plaintiffs claimed from the defendants in the collision action an indemnity against the award for the injury as damage done by their ship; but the plaintiffs had not served notice of claim for indemnity under section 6, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 19-24, on the ground that there was no provision for such service, as the defendants were foreigners resident abroad:—Held, that the plaintiffs could not recover any indemnity, because, even assuming that the member of the crew was entitled to an award, the fright was not "damage done by any ship" within section 7 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, and the claim was too remote; and that the defendants, not having been served with notice of claim for indemnity under section 6, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, were not bound by, or liable in respect of, the award. Semble, in determining whether a ship is a "British ship . . . of which the owner . . . resides . . . in the United Kingdom," within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, it is not material to consider whether the ship is to be recognised as a "British ship" under section 2, sub-section 2 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. Semble, in section 7, sub-section 1 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, "The notice of accident . . . may . . . be served on the master of the ship," the words "may be served" are not to be read as "shall be served." The Rigel, 81 L. J. P. 86; [1912] P. 99; [1912] W.C. Rep. 351; 106 L. T. 648; 12 Asp. M.C. 192; 28 T. L. R. 251—Bargrave Deane, J.

Two Vessels to Blame—Right of Contribution between Them — "Damage or loss" — Damages Paid to Owners of Third Vessel.]—The effect of the provisions of section 1 of the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, is that where two vessels are to blame for a collision, in which damage has been caused to an innocent third vessel, the owners of one of the vessels in fault can recover from the owners of the other of those vessels, as part of the "damage or loss" caused to them, the proportionate part of any sum recovered against them by way of damages by the owners of the third vessel. The Cairnbahn (No. 1), 83 L. J. P. 11; [1914] P. 25; 110 L. T. 230; 12 Asp. M.C. 455; 30 T. L. R. 82—C.A.

Two Wrongdoing Vessels — Right, as between Two Defendant Ships, of One of Them to Add Costs Paid to Plaintiff.]—An Admiralty action was brought by the owners of two barges against the owners of the steamship Cairnbahn, and subsequently the owners of the steam tug Nunthorpe, which was towing the barges, were added as defendants. The owners of the Cairnbahn likewise brought an action against the owners of the Nunthorpe.

Both actions were tried together. Judgment was given for the plaintiffs in the first action for the full amount of damages against the Cairnbahn alone owing to there being a contract of towage between the tug and the barges. In the second action the Judge held that both the Cairnbahn and the Nunthorpe were to blame, and ordered the two vessels in default to suffer the damages in moieties. He found that it was unreasonable for the owners of the Cairnbahn to defend the first action, and held that therefore they were not entitled for the purpose of the division into moieties to add to the damages the costs payable by them to the owners of the barges. He also laid down an Admiralty rule of practice disentitling the owners of the Cairnbahn to add the costs :—Held, by the Court of Appeal, without pronouncing upon the Admiralty rule of practice so laid down, that as the Judge had found that it was unreasonable for the owners of the Cairnbahn to defend the action brought against them by the owners of the barges, his decision as to the costs must be affirmed. The Cairnbahn (No. 2), 30 T. L. R. 309—C.A.

Value of Vessel—Vessel Sunk while under Charter to be Still in Force for Five Years.]—The plaintiffs' vessel, the Helvetia, was sunk by collision with the defendants' vessel in July, 1912. The Helvetia had a charterparty, dated 1909, which was to be in force from the spring of 1911 until 1917, unless the charterers cancelled it for any particular season :—Held, that the value of the Helvetia must be ascertained, as at the date in 1917 when the charterparty would expire, taking into account all the contingencies and the special terms of the charterparty. The Empress of Britain, 29 T. L. R. 423—Evans, P.

Steam Trawler Sunk — Claim for Loss of Future Fishing.] — The plaintiff's steam trawler was sunk by collision between it and the defendants' steamship, the latter vessel being alone to blame :—Held, that a claim by the plaintiffs for loss of fishing till they got a new vessel to replace the one that was sunk was not maintainable. The Anselma de Larrinaga, 29 T. L. R. 587—Bargrave Deane, J.

Sinking of Dredger — Loss of Use — Period for Computation of Damages.] — The plaintiffs' dredger was sunk by the defendants' steamship in the entrance to the Swansea Channel on February 4, 1912. She was raised on September 2, 1912, and was ready for use on February 6, 1913. It was impossible, until after she had been raised, to dredge where she was sunk, and a bank was formed by the sand silting down on her. After she was raised the plaintiffs hired another dredger :—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to damages, not merely for the period during which they had hired another dredger, but also for the period during which they had lost the use of their own dredger by reason of the fact that she was sunk. The Tugela, 30 T. L. R. 101—Evans, P.

Tug and Tow—Collision between Tow and Third Ship—Tug and Third Ship to Blame—Tow not to Blame—Action by Tow against Third Ship—Whole or Half Damage.]—There was no general rule in force in the Court of Admiralty which prevented an innocent ship injured in consequence of a collision with her, for which two other vessels were to blame, from recovering the whole of the damage sustained by her from both or either of the delinquent ships. The Devonshire, 81 L. J. P. 94; [1912] A.C. 634; 107 L. T. 179; 12 Asp. M.C. 210; 57 S. J. 10; 28 T. L. R. 551—H.L. (E.)

Where, as the result of a collision between a barge in tow of a tug and a third vessel, the barge sustains damage and the tug and third vessel are found to blame and the barge not to blame, the Admiralty rule as to division of loss does not apply, and the owners of the barge are entitled to recover from the owners of the third vessel the whole of the damage sustained by the barge. The Milan (31 L. J. P. 105; Lush. 388) explained and distinguished. Ib.

Remoteness — Primary and Substantial Cause—Loss of Use of Vessel—Strike of Workmen — Delay of Repairs.] — The plaintiffs' steamship was damaged by a collision for which the defendants were liable. Ship repairers contracted to do their utmost to repair the steamship in eighteen weather working days, but refused to guarantee a time owing to possible difficulties in regard to weather and labour troubles. A strike of workmen occurred which delayed the repairs for about nine weeks beyond the eighteen days. The plaintiffs claimed damages for loss of use of the vessel during the strike, and the defendants contended that these damages were too remote to be recovered. The defendants did not allege that the strike was illegal :—Held, that the defendants' negligence was the primary and substantial cause of the loss of use of the vessel during the whole time she was laid up for repairs; that strikes occur in the ordinary course of business, and that this strike was not such an independent act of third persons as to put an end to the continuity and efficiency of the former cause; and that these damages were the direct and immediate consequence of the defendants' negligence, and flowed from it directly and naturally, or in the usual and ordinary course of things, and were accordingly recoverable. H.M.S. London, 83 L. J. P. 74; [1914] P. 72; 109 L. T. 960; 12 Asp. M.C. 405; 30 T. L. R. 196—Evans, P.

Semble, that loss or damage which is clearly the direct and immediate consequence of a wrongful act is always proximate, and it is not necessary to enquire whether it also flows from the act directly and naturally, or in the usual and ordinary course of things. Ib.

Effect on Charterparty Hire—Bailees—Claim for Bill of Lading Freight.]—The steamship R. was let under charterparty by her owners to charterers, and was sub-chartered to the plaintiffs on the same terms except as regards dates, and while on a voyage carrying cargo under bills of lading was sunk by a collision with the defendants' steamship, for which the defendants were liable. The owners of the R.

had recovered damages in another action against the defendants for the hire which they would have earned under the charterparty, and had lost owing to the collision. The plaintiffs in this action claimed to recover from the defendants the freight under bills of lading for the voyage on which the R. was engaged at the time of the collision, after deducting both the hire under the sub-charter for the remainder of the voyage and the expenses which would have been incurred at the port of discharge. Bargrave Deane, J., on the Registrar's report, held that the meaning of the charterparty and sub-charter was that the owners of the steamship, though they permitted her to be used by the plaintiffs for the voyage, did not give up possession of her, but were the carriers of the cargo and were alone in a position to sue for the freight, and therefore the plaintiffs' claim must be disallowed: —Held, by the Court of Appeal, on the facts disclosed by a further report of the Registrar, that the bills of lading having been signed by the plaintiffs on their own behalf they had a sufficient interest to entitle them to bring the action. The Okehampton, 83 L. J. P. 5; [1913] P. 173; 110 L. T. 130; 18 Com. Cas. 320; 12 Asp. M.C. 428; 29 T. L. R. 731—C.A.

Both Ships to Blame—Damage to Cargo on one Ship—Action by Cargo Owners against other Ship—Amount of Damage Recoverable.] —Where a collision has taken place between two vessels for which both are to blame, the innocent owner of the cargo on one of the vessels which has sustained damage from the collision is entitled to recover from the owner of the other vessel one-half, but only one-half, of the amount of the damages sustained. The Drumlanrig, 80 L. J. P. 9; [1911] A.C. 16; 103 L. T. 773; 11 Asp. M.C. 520; 55 S. J. 138; 27 T. L. R. 146—H.L. (E.)

Making Good Damage in Proportion to Fault — Initial Fault — Costs.] — The defendants' steamship, coming down the coast in the North Sea and blowing her whistle for fog, heard on her starboard bow another steamship blowing her whistle for fog, and each vessel, after blowing and answering fog signals once or twice, changed her signal into two short blasts, but neither vessel stopped her engines, as she ought to have done. The plaintiffs' steamship, going up the coast and not blowing her whistle for fog, and being very nearly ahead, but a little on the port bow of the defendants' steamship, heard the other two steamships exchanging the signals of two short blasts, and was thereby misled into hard-a-starboarding her helm and putting her engines from slow to full speed ahead, instead of stopping her engines, as she ought to have done; and she came into collision with the defendants' steamship. The initial fault for the collision lay with the defendants' steamship in not stopping her engines on hearing the whistle of the steamship which she did not strike. Both plaintiffs' and defendants' steamships were disobeying the rules by going at an excessive speed:—Held, that both vessels were to blame; and that (on the principle of making good the damage in proportion to fault, under the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911) the defendants, as the initial fault lay with their vessel, should pay 60 per cent. of the total damage caused by the collision, and the plaintiffs should pay the other 40 per cent.; and that, as both vessels were very nearly equally to blame, there should be no order as to costs. The Rosalia, 81 L. J. P. 79; [1912] P. 109; 106 L. T. 351; 12 Asp. M.C. 166; 28 T. L. R. 287—Bargrave Deane, J.

Apportionment of Liability—Degree of Fault —Fault Causing or Contributing to Collision —Maritime Conventions Act, 1911.]—At the trial of an action of damage by collision the Judge found that both vessels were to blame, but that one was much more to blame than the other, and under section 1, sub-section 1 of the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, he apportioned the liability at four-fifths and one-fifth. The Court of Appeal, being of opinion that there was no evidence on which the blame could be with any certainty apportioned, directed that the liability should be apportioned equally. The Peter Benoit, 84 L. J. P. 87; 31 T. L. R. 227—C.A. Affirmed, 85 L. J. P. 12; 60 S. J. 88; 32 T. L. R. 124—H.L. (E.)

Per Pickford, L.J., and Bankes, L.J.: In construing section 1, sub-section 1 of the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, the fault to the degree of which the liability is to be apportioned must be read as meaning fault causing or contributing to the collision. Ib.

Right of Contribution—"Damage or loss" —Damages Paid to Owners of Third Vessel.] —The effect of the provisions of section 1 of the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, is that where two vessels are to blame for a collision, in which damage has been caused to an innocent third vessel, the owners of one of the vessels in fault can recover from the owners of the other of those vessels, as part of the "damage or loss" caused to them, the proportionate part of any sum recovered against them by way of damages by the owners of the third vessel. The Cairnbahn (No. 1), 83 L. J. P. 11; [1914] P. 25; 110 L. T. 230; 12 Asp. M.C. 455; 30 T. L. R. 82—C.A.

Right, as between Two Defendant Ships, of One of them to Add Costs Paid to Plaintiff.]— An Admiralty action was brought by the owners of two barges against the owners of the steamship Cairnbahn, and subsequently the owners of the steam tug Nunthorpe, which was towing the barges, were added as defendants. The owners of the Cairnbahn likewise brought an action against the owners of the Nunthorpe. Both actions were tried together. Judgment was given for the plaintiffs in the first action for the full amount of damages against the Cairnbahn alone owing to there being a contract of towage between the tug and the barges. In the second action the Judge held that both the Cairnbahn and the Nunthorpe were to blame, and ordered the two vessels in default to suffer the damages in moieties. He found that it was unreasonable for the owners of the Cairnbahn to defend the first action, and held that therefore they were not entitled for the purpose of the division into moieties to add to the damages the costs payable by them to the owners of the barges. He also laid down an Admiralty rule of practice disentitling the owners of the Cairnbahn to add the costs:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, without pronouncing upon the Admiralty rule of practice so laid down, that as the Judge had found that it was unreasonable for the owners of the Cairnbahn to defend the action brought against them by the owners of the barges, his decision as to the costs must be affirmed. The Cairnbahn (No. 2), 30 T. L. R. 309—C.A.

Collision of Steamship and Barge in Tow—Steamship and Tug in Fault—Rule as to Division of Loss—Damage to Barge—Damage to Cargo on Barge.]—The first plaintiffs were the owners of a tug and also bailees for hire of a barge in tow of the tug; and the second plaintiffs were the owners of cargo laden on the barge. A collision occurred between the defendants' steamship and the barge while in tow of the tug, for which the steamship was held to be three-fourths liable, and the tug one-fourth:—Held, that under the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, ss. 1, 9, sub-s. 4, the barge must be deemed to be in fault, as she was damaged partly by the fault of the servants of her owners, and the fact that those servants navigated from the tug and not from the barge did not affect the liability, and the first plaintiffs could only recover from the defendants three-fourths of the damage to the barge; secondly, that the doctrine of The Milan (31 L. J. P. 105; Lush. 388), except as to the proportions of the division of loss, was incorporated in section 1 of the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, and the second plaintiffs could recover only three-fourths of the damage to cargo from the defendants. The Devonshire (81 L. J. P. 94; [1912] A.C. 634) distinguished. The Umona, 83 L. J. P. 106; [1914] P. 141; 111 L. T. 415; 12 Asp. M.C. 527; 30 T. L. R. 498—Evans, P.

Consequential Damage — Negligence of Plaintiff—Rule of Common Law or Admiralty—Costs.]—In an action brought against the town council of the borough of Sandwich to recover the amount of the original and consequential damage sustained by the plaintiff's steam launch as the result of a collision between the launch and the defendants' dredger, it appeared that both the plaintiff and the defendants had been guilty of negligence in respect of the original collision, but that blame could not be thrown upon any one in particular in respect of the consequential damage:—Held, that the principles of the common law as to contributory negligence, and not the Admiralty rule as to both to blame, applied, so that, instead of the loss, arising out of the collision and the consequential damage, being divided between the plaintiff and the defendants, the plaintiff's action was barred by his contributory negligence in respect of the original collision, and therefore judgment must be entered in favour of the defendants with "public authority" costs. The Blow Boat, 82 L. J. P. 24; [1912] P. 217—Bargrave Deane, J.

Costs — Both Vessels to Blame — Different Degrees of Fault.]—Where in a collision action it is found that each vessel has been to blame, although in different degrees, the Court will, unless in special circumstances, apply in cases under the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, the old practice of making each vessel pay her own costs. The Bravo, 108 L. T. 430; 12 Asp. M.C. 311; 29 T. L. R. 122—Evans, P.

6. Limitation of Liability.

See also Vol. XIII. 740, 2151.

Hopper Barge—"Ship."]—A hopper barge, with a rudder and other gear, used for dredging purposes, but with no means of propulsion, and towed to sea and back by a tug, is a "ship" within section 742, and her owners can limit their liability under section 503 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. The Mac (51 L. J. P. 81; 7 P. D. 126) followed. The Mudlark, 80 L. J. P. 117; [1911] P. 116; 27 T. L. R. 385—Bargrave Deane, J.

Loss Occurring through "actual fault or privity" of Owner — Manager.]—A collision occurred between the Fanny and the Lily Green due to the former breaking adrift from her moorings; and in a collision action the Fanny was held solely to blame. The plaintiff, the owner of the Fanny, now sought to limit his liability under section 503 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. Bargrave Deane, J., held that the plaintiff, who was an old man of eighty years of age and had been confined to his house for eight years, was not entitled to limit his liability, on the ground that he was in fault in having appointed an incompetent person as manager. On appeal, held that there was no evidence that the manager appointed by the plaintiff was incompetent, and that the plaintiff was entitled to limit his liability. The Fanny, 56 S. J. 289; 28 T. L. R. 217—C.A.

Pass of Commissioners of Customs — "For the time . . . therein limited."]—By section 23 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, "Where it appears to the Commissioners of Customs . . . that by reason of special circumstances it would be desirable that permission should be granted to any British ship to pass, without being previously registered from any port in Her Majesty's dominions to any other port within Her Majesty's dominions, the Commissioners . . . may grant a pass accordingly, and that pass shall, for the time and within the limits therein mentioned, have the same effect as a certificate of registry." The Commissioners, purporting to act under this section, granted a pass to the plaintiffs' vessel "to make one voyage as a British unregistered vessel from the port of London to Immingham." While sailing under this pass, the vessel by her bad navigation caused three vessels, which belonged to some of the defendants, to come into collision, whereby all three sustained damage. The plaintiffs claimed to limit their liability in respect of this bad navigation of their vessel. Some of the defendants alleged that the pass was invalid, as no time was mentioned therein in accordance with the section, so that the vessel could not be recognised as a British ship, and the plaintiffs could not limit their liability :—Held, that the pass was valid, having been granted "for the time . . . therein mentioned" within the terms of the section—namely, for the time of the voyage—and that the plaintiffs were entitled to limit their liability. The Wills No. 66, 83 L. J. P. 162; 30 T. L. R. 676—Bargrave Deane, J.

7. Tug and Tow.

See also Vol. XIII. 754, 2156.

Negligence of Tug—Non-liability of Tow.]—In a case of a collision between a barge in tow of a tug, in which the tug was admittedly to blame,—Held (Lord Robson dissenting), as purely a question of fact, that the barge was not to blame, as she was entitled to expect that the tug would be reasonably and carefully navigated and to act upon that belief. Hopper Barge "W. H. No. 1" and The Knight Errant, 80 L. J. P. 22; [1911] A.C. 30; 103 L. T. 677; 11 Asp. M.C. 497—H.L. (E.)

Collision between Tow and Third Ship—Tug and Third Ship to Blame—Tow not to Blame—Action by Tow against Third Ship—Whole or Half Damage.]—There was no general rule in force in the Court of Admiralty which prevented an innocent ship injured in consequence of a collision with her, for which two other vessels were to blame, from recovering the whole of the damage sustained by her from both or either of the delinquent ships. The Devonshire, 81 L. J. P. 94; [1912] A.C. 634; 107 L. T. 179; 12 Asp. M.C. 210; 57 S. J. 10; 28 T. L. R. 551—H.L. (E.)

Where, as the result of a collision between a barge in tow of a tug and a third vessel, the barge sustains damage and the tug and third vessel are found to blame and the barge not to blame, the Admiralty rule as to division of loss does not apply, and the owners of the barge are entitled to recover from the owners of the third vessel the whole of the damage sustained by the barge. The Milan (31 L. J. P. 105; Lush. 388) explained and distinguished. Ib.

8. Compulsory Pilotage.

See also Vol. XIII. 763, 2158.

Payment of Salary in Addition to Pilotage Fees—Fault of Pilot—Responsibility of Shipowner.]—In a compulsory pilotage district the fact that a pilot duly licensed for that district is paid a salary or bonus by the owners of a line of steamships as one of their appropriated pilots, in addition to his ordinary pilotage fees, does not make the pilot the servant of the shipowners so as to make them responsible for the negligent navigation by him of one of their vessels. The Campania, 30 T. L. R. 608—Bargrave Deane, J.

Duty of Master and Crew to Render Assistance to Pilot—Right to Interfere—Extent of Right.] — A collision occurred in the river Humber between a Swedish steamship in charge of an English pilot under compulsion of law and an English steamship. Both vessels were going full speed in fog. At the trial of an action brought in respect of the collision the Judge found both vessels to blame, and he also held that the owners of the Swedish vessel could not avail themselves of the defence of compulsory pilotage on the ground that in his opinion the pilot had not received from the officers and crew all the assistance which he was entitled to. The facts relating to this matter were as follows : The master and the chief officer, who were Swedes, but could speak English, were on the bridge with the pilot. The look-out man was a Swede, and could only speak Swedish. He had already made several reports to the bridge since the pilot had been in charge, and shortly before he saw the other vessel looming through the fog he reported a long blast on the starboard bow. The pilot took no notice of the report. The master and the chief officer heard what was reported, but neither of them repeated or interpreted it to the pilot. Nor did they point out to him that he was disregarding the international rules by going full speed in fog and not stopping his engines on hearing a fog signal forward of the beam : —Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the above facts did not shew a failure on the part of the officers of the Swedish vessel to render the pilot all the assistance which he was entitled to, and therefore the owners were not precluded from availing themselves of the defence of compulsory pilotage. The Ape, 84 L. J. P. 81; 31 T. L. R. 244—C.A.

Decision of Bargrave Deane, J. (83 L. J. P. 86; [1914] P. 94), reversed. Ib.

Pilot's Misapprehension — Master's Look-out—Warning—Omission of Sound Signals—Reminder.]—A compulsory pilot was navigating a vessel for a white light and a green light nearly ahead, as if they were both on a vessel under way. Two minutes before the collision the master on the bridge appreciated the fact that the white light was that of a vessel at anchor, but did not warn the pilot of his misapprehension, and the vessels came into collision. The helm of the vessel was starboarded three times for the other vessel, but the pilot did not order the whistle to be blown in accordance with article 28 of the Collision Regulations, and the master did not remind him of it :—Held, that, though the pilot was in fault for the collision, the defence of compulsory pilotage failed—first, because, if the master's look-out had been careful, he would have known that the other vessel was at anchor long before he did, and when he knew it in time to avoid the collision he ought to have warned the pilot; and secondly, because the master ought to have reminded the pilot of the fact that he had not ordered any sound signal when starboarding, and if sound signals had been given, this would probably have led to some signal in reply, which would very likely have avoided the collision. The Elysia, 81 L. J. P. 104; [1912] P. 152; 106 L. T. 896; 12 Asp. M.C. 198; 28 T. L. R. 376—Evans, P.

When Compulsory.]—Although section 32, sub-section 2 of the Pilotage Act, 1913, provides that "a ship whilst being navigated within any closed dock . . . in a pilotage district shall notwithstanding anything in this Act be deemed to be navigating in a district in which pilotage is not compulsory," yet the effect of section 59, which provides that "any enactment, order, . . . or provision with reference to pilotage affecting any pilotage district in particular . . . shall remain in force . . . until provision is made by Pilotage Order . . . superseding any such enactment . . . or provision," is that any local Act requiring compulsory pilotage remains in force until it has been superseded in accordance with section 59. The Port Hunter, 31 T. L. R. 181—Bargrave Deane, J.

—— Collision when Pilot in Charge of Ship Outside Compulsory Pilotage Area.]—By section 633 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the owner or master of a ship is not answerable "for any loss or damage occasioned by the fault or incapacity of any qualified pilot acting in charge of that ship within any district where the employment of a qualified pilot is compulsory by law":—Held, that the exemption only applied if the accident took place in the defined and fixed area within which pilotage was compulsory. "Beechgrove" Steamship Co. v. Aktieselskabet Fjord of Kristiania, 85 L. J. P.C. 1; 32 T. L. R. 44—H.L. (Sc.)

Therefore, where a vessel, inward bound, took on board a pilot at the usual and proper place, but outside the limits of the river Clyde as defined by the Clyde Navigation Consolidation Act, 1858, within which pilotage was compulsory under the Act, and came into collision with another vessel before she had come within those limits.—Held, that she could not set up the defence of compulsory pilotage, notwithstanding that the pilot was, under the by-laws made in virtue of powers conferred by the Act, in sole charge of the vessel at the time of the collision. General Steam Navigation Co. v. British Colonial Steam Navigation Co. (37 L. J. Ex. 194; L. R. 3 Ex. 330; 38 L. J. Ex. 97; L. R. 4 Ex. 238) and The Charlton (8 Asp. M.C. 29) disapproved. Ib.

Ship Navigating within Compulsory Pilotage District—Ship Stopping Outside Port within Compulsory Pilotage District for Orders—Orders Taken to her by Boat Coming Out of Port—"Making use of any port in the district."]—Under section 11 of the Pilotage Act, 1913, "Every ship (other than an excepted ship) while navigating in a pilotage district in which pilotage is compulsory for the purpose of . . . making use of any port in the district . . . shall be either—(a) under the pilotage of a licensed pilot of the district; or (b) under the pilotage of a master or mate possessing a pilotage certificate for the district who is bona fide acting as master or mate of the ship." A ship, which was not an excepted ship, in the performance of her charterparty had to proceed to Dover to receive orders as to her port of discharge. She passed Dungeness, and proceeded to Dover, where she stopped for half an hour about a quarter of a mile outside the end of the Admiralty Pier, when a boat came out of the port with orders for her to proceed to Hamburg, to which port she immediately proceeded. The London pilotage district extends to Dungeness, and the port of Dover is within that district. Neither the master nor the mate of the vessel held a pilotage certificate for the district:—Held, that the ship, by stopping outside the port of Dover for orders, was making use of that port within the meaning of section 11 of the Pilotage Act, 1913, and was therefore bound, while navigating in the London pilotage district for which pilotage is compulsory for the purpose of making use of a port in that district, to be under the pilotage of a licensed pilot of the district. Cannell v. Lawther, Latta & Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1832; [1914] 3 K.B. 1135; 112 L. T. 84; 20 Com. Cas. 29; 12 Asp. M.C. 578; 30 T. L. R. 680—Bailhache, J.

Port of London.]—The master of a steamship belonging to the Port of London and outward bound from that port on a voyage with a cargo and passengers is bound to employ a licensed Trinity House pilot while the steamship is within the limits of that port; and consequently, if the steamship while within the Port of London in charge of such a pilot collides with and damages another vessel through the negligence of the pilot her owners are not liable. The Hankow (48 L. J. P. 29; 4 P. D. 197) approved. The Umsinga, 81 L. J. P. 65; [1912] P. 120; 106 L. T. 722; 12 Asp. M.C. 174; 56 S. J. 270; 28 T. L. R. 212—C.A.

Trinity House—Extra Coals—"Navigating in ballast"—"Stores."]—A steamship which sails for a loading port for a long voyage thence to a port of discharge, and which has in her only three-eighths of the tonnage of her dead-weight carrying capacity, this being made up partly by her tanks being partially filled with water ballast and partly by extra coals for her long voyage, carried in her bunkers and in part of her cargo space, is "navigating in ballast" within the Trinity House By-law approved by Order in Council of July 25, 1861; and is thereby exempted from compulsory pilotage within the pilotage jurisdiction of the Trinity House. The Tongariro, 82 L. J. P. 22; [1912] P. 297; 107 L. T. 28; 12 Asp. M.C. 235; 28 T. L. R. 336—Bargrave Deane, J.

Semble, the extra coals of the steamship are "stores" within the meaning of the clearance certificate. Ib.

Putting into the Humber—Bunker Coals—"Stores."]—The owners of a steamship which puts into the Humber for bunker coals and there, owing to the fault of her pilot, comes into collision with another vessel, cannot escape liability on the ground of compulsory pilotage, as bunker coals are "stores" within the meaning of section 24 of the River Humber Pilotage Act, 1832, which exempts from compulsory pilotage "any ship or vessel putting into the river Humber for the purpose of shelter, or of obtaining stores or provisions only." The Nicolay Belozwetow, 82 L. J. P. 37; [1913] P. 1; 107 L. T. 862; 12 Asp. M.C. 279; 29 T. L. R. 160—Evans, P.

The provisions in the Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Act, 1849, are subsidiary to those of the River Humber Pilotage Act, 1832, and the obligations of, and exemptions from, compulsory pilotage apply to Grimsby Docks as they did to Grimsby Roads before the Act of 1849 was passed. Ib.

Defence on Merits and on Compulsory Pilotage — Failure of Defence on Merits.]—The A., which was lying at anchor, was run into during a fog by the O. and damaged. In an action against the owners of the O. in respect of the damage the defendants pleaded that the collision, so far as they were concerned, was due to inevitable accident; they also pleaded the defence of compulsory pilotage. At the trial the defendants failed on the issue of inevitable accident, but succeeded on the defence of compulsory pilotage:—Held, that in the circumstances judgment should be entered for the defendants without costs. The Ophelia, 29 T. L. R. 656—Bargrave Deane, J. Affirmed, 30 T. L. R. 61—C.A.

9. The Regulations.

(Cases arranged under the several Articles of the Regulations of 1897.)

PRELIMINARY.

Scope of the Rules: Definitions.

See also Vol. XIII. 787, 2167.

Drifter—"Under way."]—A steam drifter, shooting her nets and sailing with a little mizen sail at about one knot an hour, and with steam up, but unable to go ahead or astern without fouling her propeller, is "under way" within the Preliminary Note to the Sea Regulations, 1897. She is "under steam" and therefore not a sailing vessel within that Note. The Pitgaveney, 79 L. J. P. 65; [1910] P. 215; 103 L. T. 47; 11 Asp. M.C. 429; 26 T. L. R. 473—Evans, P.

Article 9.

Fishing Boats.

See also Vol. XIII. 794, 2169.

Trawler—Proper Lights—Interval between Two Shoots of the Trawl — Trawler Going Ahead.]—The plaintiffs' trawling smack was carrying the proper lights for a sailing trawler with her trawl down, and having got her trawl up she hoisted her foresail, with the result that before again shooting her trawl she was making one and a half to two knots. A collision took place, during this interval, between the trawler and the defendants' steamer:—Held, that both vessels were to blame, as the trawler ought to have had her sailing lights up, and the steamer ought to have kept out of the way in view of the lights which the trawler was exhibiting. The Skrim, 30 T. L. R. 555—Bargrave Deane, J.

Drifter—"Vessel fishing with drift nets."]—A steam drifter shooting her nets and sailing with a little mizen sail at about one knot an hour and with steam up, but unable to go ahead or astern without fouling her propeller, is "under way" within the Preliminary Note to the Fishing Regulations, 1897. She is a "vessel fishing with drift nets" with nets partly in the water, within article 9 (b), and is bound to carry always in the proper positions the two white lights therein prescribed, and when she alters her heading the position of the lights should be changed accordingly, and no practice of fishermen for such a vessel while shooting her nets to carry her lights otherwise is any excuse. The Pitgaveney, 79 L. J. P. 65; [1910] P. 215; 103 L. T. 47; 11 Asp. M.C. 429; 26 T. L. R. 473—Evans, P.

Practice of Fishermen—Incumbered Fishing Vessel—"Special circumstances" Necessitating Departure from Rules — Statutory Presumption of Fault—Possibility of Contribution to Collision.]—The plaintiffs' sailing drifter was sailing at night in a strong breeze towards her fishing grounds, making about four knots, when she came into collision with the defendants' steam drifter. The steam drifter was shooting her nets and sailing with a little mizen sail at about one knot an hour, with steam up, but unable to go ahead or astern without fouling her propeller, and was carrying the two white lights prescribed by article 9 (b), but with the lower light not in the direction of the nets, but away from them, in contravention of the article, though intending after shooting to bring her head round to the nets, when the lower light would be in the right direction:—Held, that the steam drifter was an incumbered fishing vessel, and was relieved by "special circumstances" rendering a departure from the Rules necessary under article 27, from the duty to keep out of the way of a sailing vessel under article 20; and that the sailing drifter ought to have kept out of the way, and had a very bad or no look-out, and was alone to blame; for though the steam drifter had committed a breach of article 9 (b) by the position of her lights, and was therefore subject to the statutory presumption of fault under section 419 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, this breach could not by any possibility have contributed to the collision. The Tweedsdale (58 L. J. P. 41; 14 P. D. 164) and The Englishman (47 L. J. P. 9; 3 P. D. 18) followed. Ib.

Article 15.

Fog Signals.

See also Vol. XIII. 798, 2173.

Duty to Give Sound Siganals—Tug Fast but not Towing.]—When a tug is accompanying a steamship in a fog with the intention of towing her, and a towing rope is out between them, but there has been no towing, the tug is not a "vessel . . . towing," and the steamship is not a "vessel towed," so as to be bound to give fog signals accordingly under article 15, paragraph (e) of the Sea Regulations, 1897. The Sargasso, 82 L. J. P. 9; [1912] P. 192; 107 L. T. 204; 12 Asp. M.C. 202; 28 T. L. R. 444—Evans, P.

In such circumstances, if, which is doubtful, the tug is to be considered as a separate steam vessel from the steamship, so that each might sound a prolonged blast under article 15 (a), yet from the point of view of safe navigation and warning to others it is less confusing for the steamship to give the prolonged blast under that article, unaccompanied by any such signal from the tug. Ib.

In such circumstances, if the tug is ordered round from one bow of the steamship to the other she may properly blow a prolonged blast, even if there is no obligation on her to do so under article 15 (a). Ib.

Apportionment of Blame.]—In a fog collision, when one steamship was only to blame for excessive speed, and the other for bad look-out, excessive speed, and in other respects, the blame was apportioned one-third to the first vessel, and two-thirds to the second; and no costs were given. Ib.

Excessive Speed.]—When a fog is so thick that steamships can only see each other at one hundred yards, the speed of a steamship is excessive if it is such that she cannot stop in about her own length, and if she could have proceeded and have had steerage way at a lower speed than she had. Ib.

One Vessel at Anchor—Onus of Proof.]—Where in a fog there has been a collision between two vessels, one of which was at anchor, the vessel at anchor has not the onus of proving that her sound signals were audible in the approaching vessel. If the vessel at anchor sounded the regular signals, it is for the other vessel to shew some reason or excuse for the accident. The Valdes, 31 T. L. R. 144—Evans, P.

Breach of Article 16.]—A collision took place in a dense fog between the Children's Hope, a steam drifter, and the Ariadne, a steam trawler. The Children's Hope was stemming the ebb tide waiting for the fog to clear before going up the Humber to Grimsby. In order to stem the tide, which was running with the force of two or three knots, her engines were kept working slowly ahead, and she was duly sounding her whistle for fog. In these circumstances the whistle of the steam trawler Ariadne was heard on the port bow. The Children's Hope blew her whistle, but did not stop her engines, her excuse for not doing so being that there was a sailing vessel at anchor about a hundred yards astern of her, and that the tide would have taken her on to that vessel had she stopped. Shortly afterwards the Ariadne, which was outward bound, loomed in sight about two ship's lengths off, and almost at once her stem struck the port bow of the Children's Hope, doing damage. It was admitted that the Ariadne was to blame, but it was contended that the Children's Hope was also to blame for a breach of article 16 of the International Regulations in not stopping her engines on hearing the whistle of the Ariadne forward of her beam:—Held, that there were no circumstances justifying the non-observance by the Children's Hope of the provisions of article 16, and therefore that she was also to blame for collision. The Ariadne, 27 T. L. R. 304—D.

"Moderate speed" What is—"Navigate with caution."]—As a rule those in charge of a steam vessel in a fog, in order to go at a "moderate speed" within article 16 of the Sea Regulations, 1910, ought not to go so fast that the vessel cannot be pulled up within the distance which they can see. The Counsellor, 82 L. J. P. 72; [1913] P. 70—Bargrave Deane, J.

To alter the helm of a steam vessel on hearing the first whistle of another steam vessel ahead in a fog at sea, before doing anything to ascertain the position of the other vessel, is not to "navigate with caution" within article 16 of the Sea Regulations, 1910. Ib.

Watching Compass Bearing of Approaching Vessel.]—According to the defendants' case, those on board their steamship, while on a course for a lightship in the North Sea, observed first one white light, and afterwards a second white light, on the plaintiffs' steamship a long distance off and (as they alleged) right ahead, and taking the vessel to be a fisherman they afterwards starboarded to get on to their course for another lightship; when they had starboarded about two points, the plaintiffs' vessel blew a long blast, being then (as they alleged) two to two and a half points on their starboard bow and distant about a half to a quarter of a mile; and in spite of subsequent manœuvres a collision occurred, the plaintiffs' vessel just before the collision showing a dim red light. Those on the defendants' steamship had not watched the compass bearing from their vessel of the plaintiffs' steamship, and, as the Court found, until they altered their course the plaintiffs' steamship was on their port bow. The plaintiffs' steamship carried only one mast-head light, and what the second light was in fact was not ascertained, but the Court found that her red light was in a faulty condition:—Held, that the defendants' vessel was to blame for bad look-out, and because those on board had not obeyed the Preliminary to article 17 of the Sea Regulations by "carefully watching the compass bearing of the approaching vessel," which would have shewn that the plaintiffs' vessel was broadening on their port bow, and that there must be risk of collision if they starboarded; and that the plaintiffs' vessel was also to blame for the faulty red light. The President Lincoln, 81 L. J. P. 5; [1911] P. 248; 105 L. T. 442; 12 Asp. M.C. 41—Bargrave Deane, J.

Fog—Rules Applicable.]—Article 19 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea does not apply in cases where the two vessels are not visible to each other by reason of fog. In cases of fog, only the fog rules apply, the other rules being only applicable where the vessels are in sight of each other. The King, 27 T. L. R. 524—Bargrave Deane, J.

Steam Vessel Coming Out of Dock—Rules of Good Seamanship.]—Article 19 of the Sea Regulations applies in the case of a steam vessel coming out of dock, unless the circumstances are such as to displace its application. In the beginning, when a steam vessel is manœuvring out of dock, and another vessel is very close, it is impossible to apply article 19, and then the rules of good seamanship will govern the case. In coming out of dock, a vessel ought to navigate with the greatest possible caution. The Llanelly, 83 L. J. P. 37; [1914] P. 40; 110 L. T. 269; 12 Asp. M.C. 485; 30 T. L. R. 154—D.

A steamship was coming out of a lock of a dock in the river Mersey, shewing her masthead and red lights to vessels coming up, and those on board saw the masthead and green lights of a steamer lower down the river coming up against the ebb tide, and also two other steamers coming up outside of her; the nearest steamer blew two short blasts and starboarded, and the outcoming steamer, which could have remained in the bell mouth, blew one short blast and proceeded at such speed as she could to cross ahead of the three other steamers; the nearest steamer repeated her two short blasts, and afterwards, when she got to close quarters, reversed her engines, but came into collision with the outcoming steamer:—Held, that the outcoming steamer ought to have remained in the bell mouth till the nearest steamer had passed, and was three-fourths to blame for the collision; but that, reversing the decision of the Court below, the nearest steamer, when put in a difficult position did, by repeating her two short blasts, determine upon a course which might bring her into collision, and ought to have reversed her engines before continuing to starboard, and was one-fourth to blame. Ib.

Steam Trawler with Trawl Down—Triplex Light Shewn—Crossing Steamers—Duty as to Keeping out of Way.]—A steam trawler with her trawl down, and in this sense an incumbered vessel, and also exhibiting the proper light—the triplex light—prescribed by article 9 (d) of the Sea Regulations for a vessel so engaged, is under no obligation to obey the provisions of article 19 and to keep out of the way of a crossing steam vessel which is approaching her on her starboard side. The Tweedsdale (58 L. J. P. 41; 14 P. D. 164) and The Upton Castle (75 L. J. P. 77; [1906] P. 147) approved. The Craigellachie (77 L. J. P. 145; [1909] P. 1) dissented from. The Grovehurst, 79 L. J. P. 124; [1910] P. 316; 103 L. T. 239; 11 Asp. M.C. 440—C.A.

Steam Trawler "engaged in trawling"—Steamship Crossing—Effect of Exhibition of Triplex Light—Giving Way.]—By article 9 (d) 1 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, the exhibition of a triplex light is rendered compulsory on a steam vessel "engaged in trawling," and an intimation is thereby given to a crossing steam vessel that, as the trawler, by being incumbered, is unable to comply with article 19 of the same Regulations, and keep out of the way, the steam vessel must given way—The Grovehurst (79 L. J. P. 124; [1910] P. 316)—but that the trawler will, under article 21, keep her course and speed. The Ragnhild, 81 L. J. P. 1; [1911] P. 254; 105 L. T. 446; 12 Asp. M.C. 44—Bargrave Deane, J.

Where, therefore, a steam trawler was (as the Court found) duly exhibiting the triplex light, and those in charge did not stop on seeing a crossing steam vessel causing imminent risk by suddenly porting when close to, and a collision occurred,—Held, that the crossing steam vessel was alone to blame, for, in the circumstances, as a matter of seamanship, and, under the rules, as a matter of law, those in charge of the trawler were justified in keeping their course and speed. Ib.

Buoyed Channel—Suction—Fresh Evidence on Appeal.]—A collision took place off Cowes in the Isle of Wight, between a large ocean liner, in charge of a duly licensed pilot, and a cruiser of the Royal Navy. At the time of the collision the liner was proceeding from Southampton Water towards Spithead through the eastern buoyed channel to the south of the Ryde Middle Bank; and the cruiser was proceeding from the Solent towards Spithead through the same channel on a course somewhat to the southward of and converging towards that of the liner, which thus had the cruiser on her starboard side. Cross-actions of damage for collision having been brought,—Held, by Sir Samuel Evans, P., upon the evidence, that the vessels were crossing vessels, and that the liner, having the cruiser on her starboard side, should therefore by article 19 have kept out of the way of the latter; that the cruiser was not to blame; that the cause of the collision was the faulty navigation of the liner, which, however, was due solely to the negligence of her pilot and not to that of persons for whom her owners were responsible; and therefore that both actions failed. Appeals having been entered in both cases,—Held, by the Court of Appeal, which had allowed the owners of the liner to bring evidence that had not been available at the trial as to the finding on the sea bottom of wreckage from the cruiser, for the purpose of shewing that the place of collision was different from that fixed by the President, that, notwithstanding this fresh evidence, the conclusions of the President were correct, and that the appeals should be dismissed. The Olympic and H.M.S. Hawke, 83 L. J. P. 113; [1913] P. 214—C.A. See s.c. in H.L. infra.

Per Kennedy, L.J.: In certain special circumstances, although two steam vessels are visibly approaching one another on converging courses, the crossing rule, article 19, will not be held to regulate their respective duties towards each other. Such circumstances have been held to exist when the vessels were in a river—The Velocity (39 L. J. Adm. 20; L. R. 3 P.C. 44; 6 Moore P.C. (N.S.) 263); and though they could rarely, if ever, exist in the case of steam vessels on converging courses in the open sea, there seems to be no reason for confining them to the navigation of a river. Ib.

The effect of suction or interaction in bringing about a collision between two vessels proceeding along a shallow channel at high speed considered. Ib.

Concurrent Findings of Fact in Court Below — Additional Evidence on Appeal.] — Where there have been concurrent findings of fact in the Courts below the House of Lords will not, in ordinary cases, review those findings. But in a case in which additional evidence, which had not been before the Court of first instance, and tended to shew that the witnesses on both sides were mistaken as to a material fact, was admitted in the Court of Appeal, and, after the hearing in the Court of Appeal, the parties agreed that certain other evidence which had been before that Court was inaccurate in some particulars, the House of Lords allowed the whole case to be re-opened. The Pekin (66 L. If she was not an incumbered vessel, and if no departure from the Rules was necessary under article 27, she would be "a steam vessel proceeding" within article 20, and would have to keep out of the way of a sailing vessel. The Pitgaveney, 79 L. Single Ship and Squadron of Warships—Single Foreign Ship.]—A Spanish steamship belonging to the plaintiffs was proceeding in the North Sea on a course of N.21°W., and a squadron of five British cruisers steering N.27°E. were approaching abaft her port beam, three cruisers being in line and one smaller cruiser being on each side of the leading cruiser. The Board of Trade Notice, 1897, in effect warns single ships to keep out of the way of, and avoid passing through, a squadron of warships, but the plaintiffs' officers, being Spaniards, had not heard of this notice. The Spanish steamship hoisted the Spanish ensign in compliment to the cruiser, and kept her course and speed until just before the collision, purporting to act under article 21 of the Sea Regulations; and the second cruiser in line came into collision with her, the defendant, the navigating officer in charge of the cruiser, being negligent among other respects in not manœuvring to keep out of the way until too late. The Spanish steamship was charged with negligence in not keeping out of the way of the squadron and in not obeying the Board of Trade Notice. The plaintiffs' master and the defendant both testified at the trial that by the regulations which applied it was the duty of the Spanish steamship to keep her course and speed, and of the cruiser to keep out of the way:—Held, that in the circumstances the Spanish steamship was not negligent in keeping her course and speed under article 21 of the Sea Regulations; that, as regards the Board of Trade Notice, the plaintiffs' officers, being Spaniards and not having heard of the notice, were not negligent as regards it, and that, the defendant knowing that the other vessel was Spanish, the defendant was alone to blame. H.M.S. King Alfred, 83 L. J. P. 61; [1914] P. 84; 109 L. T. 956; 12 Asp. M.C. 401; 30 T. L. R. 102—Evans, P.

Steamships Approaching or Leaving Dock Entrance — Application of Collision Regulations — Crossing Rule.] — The appellants' steamship, which was bound to Barry Roads, Bristol Channel, for orders, expecting to receive them from the signal station, but failing to do so proceeded in an easterly direction across the entrance to the Barry Docks, keeping so close to the dock entrance as seriously to obstruct the entrance to the dock. Whilst so doing she came into collision with the respondents' steamship, which was coming out of the dock from between its breakwaters. The latter vessel had put her helm a-port as soon as she could safely do so, and had given one short blast, but the appellants' vessel, instead of keeping her course and speed and not obstructing the dock entrance, kept in the way by which alone the other vessel could pass out. Upon these facts the Judge in the Court below held that the appellants' vessel was alone to blame upon two grounds—first, that she had no right to be so close in to the entrance of the docks as to obstruct it; and secondly, that she had improperly neglected to keep her course and speed by reversing her engines in the path which she ought to and might reasonably have known the respondents' vessel was going to take; and was therefore to blame under the crossing rule—article 21 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897 :—Held, by the Court of Appeal (Lord Alverstone, C.J., and Kennedy, L.J.; Buckley, L.J., dissenting), that, assuming that the crossing rule applied, yet by reason of the appellants' vessel being so close in to the dock entrance the respondents' vessel was exonerated from blame under article 27 for not stopping and reversing her engines sooner, because if she had done so there was risk of the vessel being put upon the breakwater. Held also, by Kennedy, L.J., that in the peculiar circumstances of the case—the narrowness of the dock entrance, the neighbourhood of the breakwater, the setting of the tide, and the closeness of the appellants' vessel—no blame, either in respect of seamanship or as a breach of article 23, could justly be imputed to the respondents' vessel for not stopping and reversing earlier than she did. The Hazlemere, 80 L. J. P. 25; [1911] P. 69; 103 L. T. 890; 11 Asp. M.C. 536—C.A.

Lord Alverstone, C.J., expressed no opinion on the question how far the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, would apply in the case of a vessel coming out of dock under circumstances similar to those in which the respondents' vessel was placed. Ib.

Steam Trawler Trawling—Incumbered Fishing Vessel — Not Stopping Engines.]—The plaintiffs' steam trawler, trawling in the North Sea and shewing (as the Court found) her proper trawling lights, was approached on the starboard bow by the defendants' steamship, crossing her course and shewing masthead and red lights. The steamship starboarded and brought the vessels green to green, and so continued until just before the collision, when she ported and opened her red light again, and her starboard bow struck the starboard side of the trawler right aft at a fine angle. The trawler kept her course and speed, and did not stop her engines :—Held, that the steamship, whose duty it was to keep out of the way as she was crossing the course of an incumbered fishing vessel, was to blame for bad look-out and bad seamanship, and that the trawler, whose duty it was to keep her course and speed except perhaps at the last moment, was not to blame for not stopping her engines, both as a matter of seamanship and in respect of her obligations as an incumbered fishing vessel under article 21 of the Sea Regulations. The Ragnhild, 81 L. J. P. 1; [1911] P. 254; 105 L. T. 446; 12 Asp. M.C. 44—Bargrave Deane, J.

Crossing Ships—Duty to Give Way—Duty to Keep Course and Speed — Duty to Take Action to Avert Collision—Test to be Applied.]—A steam vessel on a course of N.26°W. sighted the masthead and then the green light of a steam vessel, which was on a course of S.74°E., about two points on the port bow, about six miles off. The vessels ultimately collided. The steam vessel on the N.26°W. course, whose duty it was to keep her course and speed under article 21, obeyed the article until shortly before the collision, when she slowed her engines and sounded a long warning blast, and shortly afterwards put her engines full speed astern and sounded three short blasts on her whistle. The steam vessel on the S.74°E. course, whose duty it was to keep out of the way under article 19 and avoid crossing ahead under article 22, starboarded and alleged she heard a short blast from the vessel on the N.26°W. course, when she put her engines full speed astern and sounded three short blasts on her whistle, keeping her starboard helm up to the collision. In an action for damages,—Held, that the vessel on the N.26°W. course, which, while admittedly keeping her course, eased her speed, was not to blame for doing so; for, it being difficult to decide when the precise moment has arrived at which the giving-way vessel should take action, the officer in charge must be allowed some latitude, and when it is shewn that he is carefully watching the other vessel and endeavouring to do his best to act at the right moment, he ought not to be held to blame even if it afterwards appears that he waited too long or acted too soon. Held, further, that the vessel on the S.74°E. course was to blame for attempting to cross ahead of the other vessel and for not indicating her course on her whistle when she starboarded and when she first reversed her engines. The Huntsman, 104 L. She is "under steam," and therefore not a "sailing vessel" within the Preliminary Note, and she is not "a sailing vessel fishing with nets" within article 26 of the Regulations so as to bind other sailing vessels to keep out of the way under that article. The Pitgaveney, 79 L. Vessels in Sight of One Another—"Course authorised or required by these Rules."]—The duty which article 28 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea imposes upon steam vessels in sight of one another to give appropriate sound signals "in taking any course authorised or required by these rules" is not limited to the case of a course which at the trial of a collision action is found by the Court to have been authorised or required by the Rules. It applies to the case of any course taken by a vessel purporting to act under any of the Rules with the intention of avoiding immediate danger. The Hero, 80 L. J. P. 66; [1911] P. 128; 105 L. T. 87; 27 T. L. R. 398—C.A. Affirmed, 81 L. J. P. 27; [1912] A.C. 300; 106 L. T. 82; 12 Asp. M.C. 108; 56 S. J. 269; 28 T. L. R. 216—H.L. (E.)

Crossing Vessels—In Sight of One Another—Keep-on Vessel—"Directing . . . course."]—A collision occurred between two steamships which approached on crossing courses from a long distance. The giving-way vessel neglected to alter her course to port or to slacken her speed or stop or reverse, and on a course of S.W.$\frac{1}{4}$W. magnetic approached without about a quarter of a mile of the other vessel (which was on a course of N.E. by E.$\frac{1}{2}$E. magnetic) so as to bear one and a half points on her port bow and cause risk of collision. The giving-way vessel at about this distance hard-a-starboarded, but gave no signal. The keep-on vessel ported, and then almost as one order put her engines full speed astern and hard-a-ported, but gave no signal: —Held, that the giving-way vessel was alone to blame; and that the keep-on vessel was not to blame for not signalling, as in one sense when she ported and hard-a-ported she was hardly "directing" her "course" within article 28, but was trying to run away from a vessel which had placed her in a difficulty, and her omission to signal in such circumstances could not be so strictly regarded as if she had been "directing" her "course" in the ordinary way of navigation; and that, without holding that such a vessel would be excused from signalling if that would make it easier for the other vessel to avoid collision, in the circumstances the omission of the keep-on vessel to signal did not contribute to the casualty. The Tempus, 83 L. J. P. 33; [1913] P. 166; 109 L. T. 669; 12 Asp. M.C. 396; 29 T. L. R. 543—Evans, P.

Alteration of Course—Sounding Whistle—Second Vessel Coming in Sight.] — In weather more or less foggy, the steamship M., proceeding to an anchorage, had to starboard her helm to clear a vessel at anchor. There was no other vessel in sight at the time, but directly afterwards the steam barge B. came in sight. The M. gave no signal when she directed her course to port under starboard helm:—Held, that while it was only necessary under article 28 of the Rules for Preventing Collisions at Sea for the M. to sound her whistle when directing her course to port or starboard with reference to a moving vessel, and therefore she was not wrong in omitting to sound her whistle when she starboarded for the anchored vessel, she ought to have sounded it when the B. came in sight, to indicate that her course was being directed to port. The Megantic, 31 T. L. R. 190—Bargrave Deane, J.

Tug Blowing Regulation Towing Signals—No Signal by Tow.]—The steamship M., in tow of two tugs, and with no steam on her main engines, was proceeding up the Humber and was about to turn in the river when she was run into by the steamship A. It was a dark night and the weather was hazy. The M.'s head tug was blowing the regulation towing signals, but no whistle signals were being sounded on the M. herself, who had only got steam on her donkey boiler to work the winches:—Held, that the rules of good seamanship did not require the M. to sound her whistle, as to do so would be misleading to other vessels, as it might lead them into the belief that she had steam on her main engines; and, further, as she and her tugs had not commenced to turn, although they were preparing to do so, it would have been wrong for the turning signal to have been given. The Marmion, 29 T. L. R. 646—Bargrave Deane, J.

Failure to Hear Fog Signals—Evidence of Defective Look-out.]—Where in an action of damage by collision in a fog the Judge at the trial found that there had been a defective look-out on the part of one of the vessels because those on board failed to hear fog signals sounded by the other vessel, the Court of Appeal refused to interfere with such finding. The Curran, 79 L. 10. LOCAL RULES.

a. Manchester Ship Canal.

Fog—Vessel Moored—Signal.]—There is no rule in the Manchester Ship Canal that a vessel moored alongside one of the lie-bys in a fog shall give any signal to indicate her presence as a warning to other vessels; and the rules of good seamanship do not require her to give a signal in the absence of circumstances shewing that those on board knew, or ought to have known, that another vessel was approaching to moor there. The City of Liverpool, 29 T. L. R. 139—Evans, P.

b. Mersey.

See also Vol. XIII. 829, 2194.

Vessel Coming out of Dock into River.]—The regulations for preventing collisions at sea apply in the Mersey, but where one of two steam vessels "crossing so as to involve risk of collision" is a vessel coming out of dock, it is impossible to apply article 19 before a certain time in the course of her manœuvres, and the two vessels must navigate in accordance with the rules of good seamanship (article 29). Semble, it depends on the distance the one vessel has got from the dock and on the distance the other vessel is from her when there becomes "risk of collision," whether article 19 is applicable or not. The Sunlight (73 L. J. P. 25; [1904] P. 100) considered. The Llanelly, 83 L. J. P. 37; [1914] P. 40; 110 L. T. 269; 12 Asp. M.C. 485; 30 T. L. R. 154—D.

Vessel Turning in River.] — The Mersey Rules, which consist of the International Regulations with some modifications and alterations, are deficient in not providing a rule, such as exists in the Thames, prescribing the signal to be given by a vessel turning in the river. A mere repetition of the helm signal, indicating that the vessel is under a particular helm, is not a sufficient indication to other vessels that she is turning round under that helm. The Adriatic, 30 T. L. R. 593—Evans, P.

Vessel being Overtaken — Close Waters — Rule as to Keeping Course and Speed—Duty of Following Vessel.]—The rule as to keeping course and speed, while a perfectly good rule in open waters, cannot always be applied in close waters such as the Mersey, and each case must depend on its own circumstances. In a river like the Mersey a following vessel must watch the vessel ahead and observe what course she is taking with regard to other vessels. The Wooda, 31 T. L. R. 222—Bargrave Deane, J.

c. Tees.

Limits of River Tees.] — Although by the Tees Conservancy by-laws the river is defined to mean the parts of the river Tees within the jurisdiction of the Commissioners, and the jurisdiction of the Commissioners extends far beyond the Fairway buoy, the river Tees itself does not extend so far as the Fairway buoy. The Peter Benoit, 84 L. J. P. 87; 31 T. L. R. 227—C.A. Affirmed, 85 L. J. P. 12; 60 S. J. 88; 32 T. L. R. 124—H.L. (E.)

Speed Over the Ground—Strict Observance.] —Although rule 27 of the Tees by-laws provides that "whenever there is a fog no steam vessel shall be navigated in any part of the river at a higher rate of speed than three statute miles per hour over the ground," the larger type of vessels which now call at Middlesbrough may find a difficulty in obeying the rule at certain states of the tide, and, having regard to the duty to other vessels to keep steerage way, if a vessel has a right to be under way at all and her speed is not greater than is right under the circumstances, the Court may consider that the vessel is not to blame for the non-observance of the rule. The port authority might well consider whether the rule should prescribe speed through the water instead of over the ground. The Dettingen, 30 T. L. R. 589—Evans, P.

Bend in River — Vessel Approaching with Tide—Duty to Blow Warning Blasts—Vessel Rounding Bend against Tide—Speed—Good Seamanship.] — A tug towing the plaintiffs' barge and going with the tide, having stopped just before, approached a sharp bend in Bow Creek, river Thames, without blowing a warning blast to any vessel which might be coming down, as was alleged to be the practice, and the barge came into collision with defendants' tug, which came round the bend at some speed towing another barge:—Held, that, although she had stopped just before and apart from any question of practice, it was the duty under the rules of good seamanship for the tug towing the plaintiffs' barge to blow a warning blast or blasts on approaching the bend, and not having done so she was to blame for the collision; and that the defendants' tug, which rounded the bend against the tide, was also to blame for going too fast under the circumstances. The Kennet, 81 L. J. P. 82; [1912] P. 114; 105 L. T. 880; 12 Asp. M.C. 120—D.

Steamship Aground in the Thames — Signals.]—A vessel proceeding up the Thames grounded. She sounded four short blasts on her whistle to signify that she was not under command, but, before she could put up the lights required by article 30 of the Thames Rules she was run into by a steamship which had been coming up the river about a quarter of a mile astern of her. In a damage action,—Held, that the steamship which got aground was not to blame for not putting up the lights required by article 30, as that rule was not applicable and there was not sufficient time in which to put them up before the collision, and she had sounded a four-blast signal signifying that she was not under command; and further, that the overtaking ship was alone to blame for not keeping out of the way and for bad look-out. The Bromsgrove, 82 L. J. P. 2; [1912] P. 182; 106 L. T. 815—Bargrave Deane, J.

Observations on the want of a signal to be made by vessels temporarily aground in the Thames. Ib.

Sound Signals—"Steam vessel . . . turning round."]—When a steam vessel is turning round in the river Thames, after having given the appropriate signal of four short blasts under rule 40 of the Thames By-Laws, that signal supersedes for the time other signals as to the orders given to the engines, so that she is not required while going ahead and astern to give a signal of three short blasts under rule 42 when her engines are put full speed astern The Harberton, 83 L. J. P. 20; [1913] P. 149; 108 L. T. 735; 12 Asp. M.C. 342; 29 T. L. R. 490—Evans, P.

The defendants' steam vessel, being about to turn round at night time in the river Thames, sounded the appropriate signals of four short blasts followed by one short blast, in accordance with rule 23 of the Port of London River By-laws, 1914, to indicate that she was going to turn with her head to starboard, and these signals were repeated when the lights of the plaintiffs' steam vessel were seen coming down the river. In the course of turning the engines of the defendants' vessel were put full speed astern, and she moved bodily astern about 370 feet, but she did not sound the three short blasts signals, under rule 27, to indicate that her engines were working astern. The two vessels came into collision:—Held, that the turning signal was not sufficient indication, particularly at night, that a vessel was moving bodily astern to a substantial extent, and that while the plaintiffs' vessel was to blame for bad look-out and failure to stop and reverse her engines, the defendants' vessel was also to blame, as the neglect to sound the three short blasts was the primary cause of the collision. The Harberton (83 L. J. P. 20; [1913] P. 149) distinguished. The Ancona, 84 L. J. P. 183; [1915] P. 200—Bargrave Deane, J.

"Master"—"Shall be on the bridge."]—Article 14 of the Thames By-laws, 1898, which provides that "the master of every steam vessel navigating the river shall be . . . on the bridge," must be construed with regard to the definition of "master" in article 4 as "the owner, master or other person . . . having or taking the command, charge or management of the vessel." And when a vessel is in charge of a compulsory pilot, article 14 does not forbid the voluntary but temporary absence of the master of the vessel from the bridge, when another competent officer is stationed there, and there are no special circumstances of difficulty, and no special matters within his knowledge of which he ought to be ready to inform the pilot. The Umsinga, 80 L. J. P. 90; [1911] P. 234; 27 T. L. R. 439—Evans, P.

Steam Vessel Running Aground—Anchor Lights—Whistle Signals.]—As regards the Thames Rules, 1898—article 30 (by which a vessel of a certain size when at anchor, and a similar vessel if aground in or near a fairway, is required to exhibit two white lights) applies to vessels anchored or on the ground permanently near the fairway, and not to a vessel which is temporarily aground. Article 40 (which directs that, when a steam vessel in other than certain circumstances is turning round or for any reason is not under command and cannot get out of the way of an approaching vessel, she shall signify the same by four blasts) applies to a steamer with gear out of order or engines broken down or something of that sort, and not to a steamer which has temporarily run aground. The Bromsgrove, 82 L. J. P. 2; [1912] P. 182; 106 L. T. 815; 12 Asp. M.C. 196—Bargrave Deane, J.

Semble, vessels in the Thames are not bound to carry anchor lights ready lighted on deck in case they run aground, and therefore anchor lights cannot be put up in a moment on a vessel which runs aground. Ib.

Meeting Vessels.]—Article 17 of the Thames By-laws is not confined to the case of steam vessels meeting steam vessels rounding the points mentioned in the article. It applies to the case of a steam vessel meeting a sailing vessel. The Ursula Fiseher, 29 T. L. R. 529—Evans, P.

Custom in Thames to Keep to North Side Going up and Vice Versa—Port to Port Rule.]—On August 30, 1912, there was no rule in the Thames that steamships should keep to the north side going up, and the only rule was that if there was a risk of collision ships should go port to port—if there was no risk there was no rule to prohibit starboard to starboard. Decision of the Court of Appeal (30 T. L. R. 88) affirmed (Lord Parmoor dissenting on the facts). Ib.

Ambiguity of River Rule — "Light or lights"—"Vessel of 150 feet or upwards."]—The part of article 30 of the Thames Rules, 1898, which provides, "A vessel of 150 feet or upwards aground in or near a fairway shall carry the above light or lights," is not ambiguous as regards a vessel of above 150 feet, and such a vessel must carry the two lights. And, as the Thames rule applies to her, article 11 of the Collision Regulations, 1910, which would interfere with that rule, does not apply to her. The Bitinia, 82 L. J. P. 5; 29 T. L. R. 99—C.A. Action for Loss of Life—Limitation of Time—Claim against Vessel.]—The time for bringing an action for damages for loss of life under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, limited by section 3 of that Act to one year, is extended to two years under section 8 of the Maritime Conventions Act, 1911, when the action is to enforce a claim or lien against a vessel or her owners. The Caliph, 82 L. J. P. 27; [1912] P. 213; 107 L. T. 274; 12 Asp. M.C. 244; 28 T. L. R. 597—Bargrave Deane, J.

b. Pleadings.

General Allegation of Negligence—Application for Particulars—Failure to Give Particulars—Application Struck out.]—A vessel at anchor was run into and damaged by a vessel in motion. In an action for damage, the owners of the vessel at anchor delivered a statement of claim in which they alleged that those on the vessel colliding with them did not take proper and seamanlike measures to keep clear. A summons for particulars of the measures which should have been taken was dismissed by the Registrar. The defendants appealed to the Judge in chambers. On appeal,—Held, that as the plaintiffs could give no particulars the allegation should be struck out, the Judge at the trial having power to deal with any negligence proved but not pleaded. The Kanawha, 108 L. T. 433; 12 Asp. M.C. 317—Bargrave Deane, J.

Preliminary Act—Contents.]—The intention of paragraph 11 of the preliminary act in a collision case is that the combinations of lights, subsequent to those described in paragraph 10 as first seen, should be stated; so that, after stating in paragraph 10 that the masthead and both side lights of a steam vessel were first seen, the party should state in paragraph 11 that afterwards the masthead and red lights only were seen, and then the masthead and green only, if this was the case; and in such circumstances it is not proper to answer in paragraph 11 that no other lights were seen. The Monica, 81 L. J. P. 92; [1912] P. 147; 106 L. T. 349; 12 Asp. M.C. 164; 28 T. L. R. 154—Evans, P.

—— Equivalent to Admissions of Fact.]—Per Fletcher Moulton, L.J.: Statements in a preliminary act are not mere pleading allegations, but amount to admissions of fact which the party making them ought not to be allowed to depart from except under most special circumstances. The Seacombe; The Devonshire, 81 L. In damage actions resulting from collisions in rivers in which the colliding vessels are on a fixed course as opposed to a course which has to be constantly changed, either the magnetic or the true course, and not the compass course, should be pleaded in the preliminary act. The Rievaulx Abbey, 102 L. T. 864; 11 Asp. M.C. 427—Evans, P.

—— Action for Damage—"Vessel"—Landing Stage—Repeal of Rule—Effect of Repeal on Practice under Rule.]—A floating landing stage permanently fixed to a river side except in so far as it is capable of rising and falling with the tide is not a "vessel" within the meaning of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Order XIX. rule 28; and therefore, in an action for damage by collision between a steamship and such a landing stage, the parties cannot, under that rule, be ordered to file preliminary acts. The Craighall, 79 L. J. P. 73; [1910] P. 207; 103 L. T. 236; 11 Asp. M.C. 419—C.A.

Even assuming that under the Rules of the High Court of Admiralty, 1859, a practice existed according to which preliminary acts might be ordered in cases of collision other than collision between vessels, inasmuch as these Rules have been repealed by the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1883, Introduction and Appendix O (22), that practice has also been repealed and has not been continued in force by Order LXXII. rule 2 of the Rules of 1883. Observations in Busfield, In re; Whaley v. Busfield (55 L. J. Ch. 467; 32 Ch. D. 123), applied. Ib.

c. Mode of Trial.

Action for Loss of Life—Action in Rem—Admission of Liability—Trial by Judge and Jury—Discretion.]—An action in rem having been brought against a ship to recover damages for loss of life caused by a collision at sea, the owners filed an admission of liability, praying a reference to the Registrar and Merchants to assess the damages. The plaintiffs took out a summons for an order giving them leave to enter interlocutory judgment and to have the damages assessed by a sheriff's jury. The Judge made an order that the action should be tried by a Judge with a jury in the Admiralty Division:—Held, that the order was within the discretion of the Judge, and was one with which the Court of Appeal ought not to interfere. The Kwasind, 84 L. J. P. 102—C.A.

d. Bail.

Excessive Bail—Bail Fees.]—Where excessive bail had been demanded by the plaintiffs in a collision action, the Court, on the application of the defendants, ordered the plaintiffs to pay the fees in respect of the bail in excess of the proper amount of bail that should have been demanded. The Princess Marie José, 109 L. T. 326; 12 Asp. M.C. 360; 29 T. L. R. 678—Bargrave Deane, J.

e. Discovery.

Inspection of Books before Trial—Collision—Sunken Lightship—Value of Lightship.]—The plaintiffs' lightship having been sunk in collision with the defendants' steamship, the plaintiffs brought an action in rem against the defendants for damage. The defendants admitted liability, and the only question was as to the amount of the damage. The action was referred to the District Registrar for trial. While the reference was pending, the defendants, with a view to ascertaining the value of the lightship at the date of the collision, took out a summons under Order XXXI. rule 18 (1) for inspection of the plaintiffs' books shewing the initial cost and annual depreciation in value of the lightship. The plaintiffs resisted the application on the ground that it would be inconsistent with the practice in the Admiralty Division to allow inspection of the books before they were produced at the reference. The District Registrar refused the application, and his decision was affirmed by Bargrave Deane, J.:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the defendants were entitled to the inspection asked for. The Pacuare, 81 L. J. P. 143; [1912] P. 179; 107 L. T. 252; 12 Asp. M.C. 222—C.A.

f. Costs.

See also Vol. XIII. 855, 2201.

Denial of Negligence—Alternative Defence of Compulsory Pilotage—Single Issue—Discretion of Court.]—In an action of damage by collision the defendants pleaded that the collision was an inevitable accident, and alternatively that if it was caused or contributed to by any negligence on board their vessel the negligence was that of a compulsory pilot. The Court of first instance held that the collision was due to the negligence of the pilot, and that the defendants ought not to pay costs; but that in the circumstances of the case there ought to be no costs. The defendants, by leave, appealed on the question of costs, and contended that they were entitled to have the action dismissed with costs:—Held, that the Court could not lay down any general rule beyond that already laid down—that if there is but one issue in the action the successful party is prima facie entitled to costs, and that the Judge must consider the special circumstances of each case and exercise his discretion accordingly; that as the defendants had denied negligence on the part of any one there was not a single issue in the case: and that the Judge in the Court of first instance had exercised his discretion, which the Court of Appeal could not review. The Ophelia, 83 L. J. P. 65; [1914] P. 46; 110 L. T. 329; 12 Asp. M.C. 434; 30 T. L. R. 61—C.A.

Steamer Plying on Voyage with Passengers on Inland Waters — Certificate of Survey — "Vessel used in navigation."] — By section 271, sub-section 1 (b) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, every passenger steamer carrying more than twelve passengers "shall not ply or proceed to sea or on any voyage or excursion with any passengers on board" without a Board of Trade certificate as to survey. By section 267 a passenger steamer is a steamship. By section 742 a ship includes a "vessel used in navigation not propelled by oars." A launch, which carried more than twelve passengers and was not propelled by oars, plied for hire along a river and a canal up to, but not beyond, some lock gates, and back again. Along the same water sea-going vessels were taken to points beyond the lock gates:—Held, that as the launch was used in waters upon which, in ordinary parlance, navigation could reasonably be said to take place, it was a "vessel used in navigation" and a "ship" within section 742, and therefore was subject to the provisions requiring a certificate under section 271, sub-section 1 (b). Reg. v. Southport (Mayor) and Morris (62 L. Passenger's Contract Ticket — Form Approved by Board of Trade—Addition of Clause not Approved by Board of Trade—Exemption of Shipowner from Liability for Negligence.] —The defendants issued in respect of a passage across the Atlantic a steerage passenger's contract ticket, which contained on the face thereof all that was contained in the form of steerage passenger's contract ticket then recently approved by the Board of Trade. That form, which was in substance an unqualified contract of carriage from the port of embarkation to the port of arrival in a particular ship, included a direction that a contract ticket should not contain on the face thereof any condition, stipulation, or exception not contained in that form. The contract ticket issued by the defendants also contained the following additions, which had not been approved by the Board of Trade: At the foot of the ticket were printed the words "See back," and on the back were printed, under the heading "Notice to Passengers," certain conditions, one of which purported to exempt the defendants from liability for loss or damage even though caused by negligence of the defendants' servants. The ship in which the passenger was being carried came into collision with an iceberg and foundered in consequence of the negligence of the defendants' servants, and the passenger was drowned. In an action under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, to recover damages in respect of the death of the passenger,—Held (Buckley, L.J., dissenting), that the contract ticket was not in a form approved by the Board of Trade within the meaning of section 320, sub-section 2 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and that that sub-section precluded the defendants from relying on the condition exempting them from liability. Ryan v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co.; O'Connell v. Same; Scanlon v. Same; O'Brien v. Same, 83 L. Port of London — Registration of Craft — Sailing Barge — "All lighters, barges, and other like craft."]—A sailing barge trading regularly between London and a place outside the limits of the Port of London as described in the Fifth Schedule to the Port of London Act, 1908, is a "barge" within the words "all lighters, barges, and other like craft" in section 11, sub-section 2 (f) of that Act, and must therefore, under that section and the Port of London (Registration of River Craft) By-laws, 1910, be registered with the Port of London Authority as a "barge," notwithstanding that it has also been registered as a "ship" under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. Smeed, Dean & Co. v. Port of London Authority, 82 L. Port Rates—Exemption—"Goods imported for transhipment only"—Goods Imported for Conveyance by Sea to any other Port Coastwise—Goods Transhipped in Port of London for Rochester.]—Goods imported from beyond the seas into the Port of London for transhipment only, and which are duly certified as intended for transhipment, and which are in fact transhipped into sailing barges and conveyed down the river Thames to the Port of Rochester on the Medway, are, under section 13 of the Port of London Act, 1908, and section 9 of the Port of London (Port Rates on Goods) Order, 1910, exempt from the port rates imposed by the Port of London Authority, inasmuch as they are goods imported from beyond the seas for the purpose of being conveyed by sea only to another port coastwise, the definition of "coastwise" in subsection 5 of section 13 of the Port of London Act, 1908, not being imported into section 9 of the Provisional Order, 1910, and the term "conveyed by sea only" being used in contradistinction to conveyance by land and not in contradistinction to conveyance by river. British Oil and Cake Mills v. Port of London Authority, 83 L. —— Exemption—"Goods imported for transhipment only"—Oil Imported in Bulk by Particular Steamer—Oil Certified for Transhipment—Oil Mixed with other Oil—Identification of Oil—Goods "shipped again as soon as practicable."]—Under section 13 of the Port of London Act, 1908, and section 9 of the Port of London (Port Rates on Goods) Order, 1910, "goods imported for transhipment only" into the Port of London are exempt from port rates levied by the Port Authority. The expression "goods imported for transhipment only" is defined in section 9 of the Provisional Order, 1910, as meaning goods imported from beyond the seas or coastwise for the purpose of being conveyed by sea only to any other port, which are certified and proved within a certain period of the report of the ship at the Custom House to have been intended for transhipment, and which shall have been shipped again as soon as practicable for conveyance by sea to some other port. The certificate stating that the goods are intended for transhipment must contain particulars of the description, quantity, destination, route, and mode of conveyance of such goods. The certificate stating that the goods have been shipped again as soon as practicable must contain such particulars as the Port Authority may require. The plaintiffs imported oil in bulk from abroad in ocean tank steamers. That portion of the oil which was intended for transhipment to various ports was discharged into tanks in London, some of the oil being discharged into a tank that was empty, some of the oil into a tank containing oil brought by previous steamers, and also intended for transhipment, while some of the oil intended for transhipment was discharged into a tank containing oil intended for distribution in the London district and not intended for transhipment. The plaintiffs delivered to the defendants inwards port rates exemption certificates stating that the oil was intended for transhipment, and giving the particulars required by statute as to the tons of oil intended to be transhipped and its destination. One of the certificates, under the head of "Name of Export Steamer," gave the names of three steamers bracketed together, as it was not known which of the steamers would be available. The plaintiffs delivered to the defendants outwards port rates exemption certificates in respect of the oil transhipped and claimed exemption from port rates thereon. The defendants refused to admit the right of the plaintiffs to exemption in respect of the oil intended for transhipment upon the ground that the oil lost its identity upon being discharged into the tanks; that it was impossible to identify the oil transhipped with the oil set out in the inwards certificate; that the name of the export steamer was not sufficiently stated, and that the oil had not been transhipped as soon as practicable:—Held, that the oil intended for transhipment did not cease to be entitled to exemption through being discharged into tanks containing other oil, even though it was mixed with oil not intended for transhipment, provided that the plaintiffs could show that the quantity of oil intended for transhipment had in fact been transhipped, and that it was not necessary to set out specifically the name of the export vessel in the inwards certificate. Held, further, that in order to comply with the words "shipped again as soon as practicable" in section 9 of the Provisional Order, 1910, the transhipment must be carried out as soon as practicable, having regard to the ordinary course of navigation and the facilities of procuring a ship, and that the words did not refer to the convenience of the merchant's business. Anglo-American Oil Co. v. Port of London Authority, 83 L. Duty of Harbour Trustees—Buoying Navigable Channel—Liability for Buoy being Displaced—Notice Disclaiming Responsibility.]—The trustees of a natural harbour, where pilotage was not compulsory, placed a buoy to mark a shoal close to the navigable channel. Owing to the insufficient weight of the sinker, the buoy was liable to be dragged out of position by vessels using the harbour, and in consequence of this risk it was the practice of the harbour master to verify the position of the buoy each morning. The trustees exhibited a notice on shore to the effect that "masters of vessels . . . making use of the buoys and moorings . . . do so at their own risk." A ship entering the harbour at night, with the leave of the harbour master and in charge of a local pilot, grounded on the shoal, owing to the buoy having been displaced after its position had been checked the previous morning. It was not proved that the pilot knew either that the buoy was liable to be displaced, or that it had in fact been displaced on that occasion. In an action of damages by the shipowners against the trustees,—Held, first, that, although the trustees of a natural harbour were under no obligation to mark the navigable channel by means of buoys, yet, if they chose to do so, they were bound to exercise reasonable care to insure that the buoys should be kept in position, and that, in the circumstances, the trustees had failed in this duty; secondly, that the notice disclaiming responsibility did not relieve them of their liability for this failure; and thirdly, that while the pursuer's claim would have been barred if the pilot had been guilty of contributory fault, the pilot, in the circumstances, was not to blame in respect that, even if he had known that the buoy was occasionally displaced, he was entitled to assume, in the absence of express warning, that it was in its proper place, and damages awarded. Aktieselskabet Dampskibet Forto v. Orkney Harbour Commissioners, [1915] S. Dockyard Port—Navigable Water—Rights of Public—Rights Incidental to Navigation—Right to Moor Coal Hulk—Dockyard Port of Portland.]—A coal merchant has not, as incidental to the right which he possesses in common with all other members of the public of navigating in a public navigable water, a right to moor permanently in such water a coal hulk for the purpose of supplying coal to steamers navigating there. Denaby and Cadeby Main Collieries v. Anson, 80 L. J. K.B. 320; [1911] 1 K.B. 171; 103 L. T. 349; 11 Asp. M.C. 471; 54 S. J. 748; 26 T. L. R. 667—C.A.

Where such navigable water is a "dockyard port" within the meaning of the Dockyard Ports Regulation Act, 1865, as to which an Order in Council has been made under the Act placing merchants and other private vessels under the direction of a harbour master, and conferring no right to moor a coal hulk in the harbour, a coal merchant who moors such a hulk in the harbour is bound to remove it on being required to do so by the harbour master. Rex v. Russell (5 L. Preferential Right to Occupy Berth — Wrongful Action of Other Ship in Occupying Berth—Damages.]—A shipping company had by agreement with a dock company a preferential right to occupy a certain berth on Wednesday and Saturday in each week and were to use no other berth in the particular port. The agreement (inter alia) provided that in the event of any accident beyond the control of the dock company causing loss or delay to the shipping company the latter's remedy was to be the right to use some other berth, and that the dock company should not be liable to make good or pay compensation for any such loss or delay. On Saturday, October 28, 1911, when the shipping company's steamer, the Portia, arrived, the particular berth where she should have gone was occupied by a Dutch company's steamer which had proceeded to and remained at that berth against the orders of the dock company. By reason of shortness of water the Dutch steamer could not be removed to allow the Portia to occupy the berth. The Portia, by the directions of the dock company, went into an inner dock, and was detained there several days owing to shortness of water, and in consequence she lost a complete round voyage. The shipping company sued the dock company for damages for the delay caused to the Portia, and the dock company sued the Dutch company to recover any damages they might be called upon to pay to the shipping company:—Held, first, that the dock company were liable in damages to the shipping company inasmuch as by the agreement the dock company had contracted to use, and they had not in fact used, their best endeavours to ensure that the shipping company should have the use of the berth on the particular day, and further that the wrongful occupation of the berth by the Dutch steamer was not an "accident beyond the control of the dock company" within the meaning of the expression in the agreement, as they had not done their utmost to prevent the Dutch steamer occupying the berth; secondly, that the Dutch company having committed a trespass were liable to the dock company in damages, but as the Portia did not go into the inner dock on the orders of the Dutch company's captain, that company was not liable in respect of the whole of the detention of the Portia; and thirdly, that the Dutch company were not liable to the dock company in respect of the latter's costs in defending the action against them by the shipping company, inasmuch as it was not reasonable for the dock company to defend that action. South Wales and Liverpool Steamship Co. v. Nevill's Dock Co., 108 L. "Dock dues" — Construction of Charterparty.]—A charterparty provided that, "if the cargo or any part thereof is discharged in one of the docks in the River Thames, each consignee is to pay two-thirds of the dock dues payable in respect of the space occupied by his portion of the cargo to be discharged in such dock":—Held, that this provision meant that all proper charges which could be and were imposed by the dock authority in respect of entrance into and use of the dock by the vessel were included in the words "dock dues," and therefore these words included payments charged by the Port of London Authority as and for rent. The Katherine, 30 T. L. R. 52—D.

Cnarges — Warehouse Rates and Rents — Prize Cargoes—Proposed Higher Rates—Right to Differentiate.]—By the Bristol Docks Acts the Bristol Corporation acquired certain docks and were empowered to charge reasonable warehouse rates and rents, the Act of 1881 providing by section 8 that all rates on the same description of articles should be charged without partiality and without regard to the person to whom they belonged. The Acts incorporated the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, which by section 30 makes it illegal for the Corporation to differentiate their warehouse rates and rents as between various owners or persons interested in cargoes:—Held, that each of the above provisions precluded the Corporation from charging higher warehouse rates and rents in the case of prize grain cargoes taken into store under the order of the Board of Trade or the Admiralty Marshal than in respect of the same description of goods belonging to other persons. The Clarissa Radcliffe, 31 T. L. R. 98—Evans, P.

Weighing and Measuring Goods—Rights of Port of London Authority in Surrey Commercial Dock.]—Section 81 of the Harbours, Docks, and Piers Clauses Act, 1847, provides that "Where under the special Act the undertakers shall have the appointment of meters and weighers, the undertakers may appoint and license a sufficient number of persons to be meters and weighers within the limits of the harbour, dock, and pier, and remove any such persons at their pleasure, and may make regulations for their government, and fix reasonable rates to be paid, or other remuneration to be made to them for weighing and measuring goods." Section 82 provides that "When a sufficient number of meters and weighers have been appointed by the undertakers, under the powers of this and the special Act, the master of any vessel, or the owner of any goods shipped, unshipped, or delivered within or upon the harbour or dock or pier, shall not employ any person other than a weigher or meter licensed by the undertakers, or appointed by the Commissioners of Her Majesty's Customs, to weigh or measure the same," under a penalty not exceeding five pounds, and it was also declared that the weighing or measurement of any such goods by a person other than a meter or weigher duly licensed or appointed should be deemed illegal. Under the terms of the special Act contained in section 115 of the Surrey Commercial Dock Act, 1864, and section 3 of the Port of London Act, 1908, the plaintiffs have the right to appoint and license meters and weighers within the limits of the Surrey Commercial Docks. The Surrey Commercial Dock Co. and the plaintiffs have had persons described as grain weighers, some on their permanent staff and some temporarily employed, who in fact weigh grain, but no special regulations for their government have been made, and the weighers have been usually employed when the dock performs the operation of discharging. No special rate has been fixed and published by the Port Authority, as required by section 113 of the Surrey Commercial Dock Act, 1864, for weighing a cargo not worked by the plaintiffs. In 1904 the T. Line of steamers entered into an agreement with the Surrey Commercial Dock Co. for the hire of berths and quay space at the Surrey Commercial Docks. Under that agreement they brought into the Surrey Docks hopper elevators which were used in discharging grain from vessels in the docks, and which also weighed the grain. In 1908 the defendants, who had acquired the T. Line, entered into an agreement with the Surrey Commercial Dock Co. by which the berths and quay space in the Surrey Docks were let to them for three years. Under that agreement the defendants were entitled to use their elevators for discharging and weighing cargoes of grain from vessels in the docks. The Surrey Commercial Docks were transferred to the plaintiffs, the Port of London Authority, in 1909. On the expiration of the above-mentioned agreement at the end of 1910 a dispute arose, the plaintiffs claiming that they had the sole right of discharging ships in the Surrey Commercial Docks. The plaintiffs eventually brought this action, in which they claimed a declaration that they had the sole right of weighing and measuring goods shipped, unshipped, or delivered in the Surrey Commercial Docks and of providing the machines for weighing, and also an injunction to restrain the defendants from weighing and measuring any goods shipped, unshipped, or delivered within the docks, and from using their elevators in the docks:—Held, that the plaintiffs on fixing, with the proper formalities, rates to be paid for weighing have the sole right of weighing and measuring goods shipped or unshipped in the Surrey Commercial Docks, but that they have not the sole right of providing weighing machines for such weighing. Port of London Authority v. Cairn Line, 82 L. Unevenness of Block Caps—Damage to Ship — Exemption in Contract from Liability for Damage—Liability of Dock Owner.]—A contract for the use of a graving dock by a ship embodied the graving dock regulations of the defendants, the owners of the dock. Clause 9 of the regulations provided that "The owner of a vessel using the graving dock must do so at his own risk, it being hereby expressly provided that the company are not to be responsible for any accident, or damage, to a vessel going into, or out of, or whilst in the graving dock, whatever may be the nature of such accident, or damage, or howsoever arising." The regulations also provided that the defendants would supply block caps, subject to the usual charges. The ship sustained bottom damage while in the graving dock, owing to the unevenness of the block caps supplied by the defendants:—Held, that by reason of clause 9 the defendants were exempt from liability for the damage sustained by the ship. Travers & Sons, Lim. v. Cooper (83 L. Overhang—Too Few Blocks—Unusual Construction — Duty of Shipowners.] — While in the defendants' dry dock the plaintiffs' steamship, which had a forward overhang of about 62 ft., fell to port and damaged her side owing to there being an insufficient number of blocks at the forward end. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants for negligence the defendants contended that the blocks would have been sufficient for a normally constructed vessel of the same size, but that the vessel was of unusual construction and the plaintiffs ought to have warned them of the hidden danger:—Held, that the overhang of the vessel did not make her a vessel of unusual construction, and the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed. Semble, if a vessel is of unusual construction it is the duty of the shipowners to inform the dock owners, and it is not the duty of the dock owners to make enquiries. The Lancastrian, 32 T. L. R. 117—Evans, P.

XVIII. WRECKS.

Damage to Oyster Beds — Owner Placing Wrecked Vessel Ashore — Harbour Master — Negligent Orders—Liability of Conservators.]—A vessel, wrecked in a navigable river, was raised by her owner (one of the defendants) and was placed on an oyster fishery ashore, doing damage to the oysters. The harbour master, servant of the other defendants, the conservators of the river, was in charge of the operations, the defendant owner obeying his orders, and the harbour master was negligent in giving such orders, as he ought to have known of the oyster fishery. Notice that the wrecked vessel was on the fishery was given to the defendant owner, who was in possession of the vessel, and to the harbour master; but the vessel remained there for a considerable time under repair, doing further damage. In an action by the plaintiff, lessee of the oyster fishery, to recover damages for negligence,—Held, that the conservators were liable for the whole of the damage, as the harbour master was negligent in placing the wrecked vessel on the oyster beds, and it was his duty to have had her moved from there; but that the owner was not liable, as he placed her there by the orders of the harbour master, who had authority to give such orders, and that he had no right without further orders from the harbour master, whose responsibility still continued, either to remove the wrecked vessel from there or to place her elsewhere. The Bien, 80 L. Sunken Vessel—Obstruction to Navigation of Mersey—Right of Mersey Docks Board to Destroy Vessel—Conditions Precedent.]—Section 11 of the Mersey Docks Act, 1874, as amended by section 29 of the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board Act, 1889, enables the Mersey Docks and Harbour Board to raise, destroy, or remove any wrecks of vessels, or any vessels sunk or stranded in any dock or elsewhere within the port of Liverpool which are "in the judgment of the marine surveyor . . . of the Board . . . such judgment being recorded in writing signed by him and deposited with the secretary of the Board," an obstruction to safe and convenient navigation:—Held, that it is not a condition precedent to the exercise by the Board of their statutory power to raise, destroy, or remove a sunken or stranded vessel that the judgment of the marine surveyor that the vessel is an obstruction to safe navigation should first have been recorded in writing and deposited with the secretary of the Board. It is sufficient to enable the Board to exercise their powers that the marine surveyor honestly comes to the conclusion that the vessel must be raised, destroyed, or removed, and that within a reasonable time after the forming of his judgment to that effect he puts it in writing and deposits it with the secretary of the Board. Jones v. Mersey Docks and Harbour Board, 108 L. T. 722; 18 Com. Cas. 163; 12 Asp. M.C. 335; 29 T. L. R. 468—Scrutton, J.

Expenses of Removal—One Vessel Sunk by Negligence of the Other—Obstruction to Navigation—Liability of Owners of Wrongdoing Vessel.]—By the negligent navigation of the defendants' steamship a barge was sunk in the deep-water channel of a port for which the plaintiffs were the harbour authority, and was abandoned by its owners, and constituted an obstruction to the channel, and a public nuisance. The plaintiffs, in exercise of their statutory duties, incurred expenses in dispersing the wreck and otherwise, and claimed to recover these expenses from the defendants:—Held, that, both by reason of their breach of duty or negligence and by reason of a public nuisance occasioned by their wrongdoing, the defendants were liable to repay to the plaintiffs the amount of the expenses incurred by them. The Ella, 84 L. J. P. 97; [1915] P. 111; 30 T. L. R. 566—Evans, P.

—— Obstruction in Canal—Expense caused to Canal Owners—Action against Purchaser of Wreck — Amount Recoverable.] — Owing chiefly to negligence of the defendants' servants a steamship of the defendants came into collision with another steamship and sank in the plaintiffs' canal. The plaintiffs employed tugs to assist vessels past the wreck, and after removing it sold it to a purchaser, who refused to carry out his bargain. The plaintiffs then sued the purchaser and obtained judgment with costs. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants to recover the expenses incurred through the sinking of the defendants' steamship:—Held, that as the plaintiffs had acted reasonably in employing the tugs and in suing the purchaser, there must be included in the expenses which they were entitled to recover the expense of employing the tugs and such costs of the action against the purchaser as had been necessarily incurred, though they had not been allowed on taxation. The Solway Prince, 31 T. Admiralty Jurisdiction — "Goods carried into any port in England"—Bill of Lading—Arbitration Clause.]—A case of gold coin belonging to the plaintiffs was shipped on board the defendants' German steamship at Hamburg for delivery at a port in South America. The bill of lading gave leave for the vessel to call at other ports, which included Southampton; and also, by clause 14, provided that disputes "concerning the interpretation" of the document were to be decided in Hamburg according to German law. The vessel called at Southampton on the outward voyage, failed to deliver the case on arrival in South America, and called again at Southampton on her return voyage, when the plaintiffs arrested her and brought their action in rem in the Admiralty Division. The defendants alleged that the claim was covered by the exceptions in the bill of lading:—Held, first, that the case was "carried into" a port in England within the meaning of section 6 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, and that the Admiralty Division had jurisdiction in the action; but secondly, that the action involved a dispute "concerning the interpretation" of the bill of lading under clause 14, and must therefore be stayed under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889. The Cap Blanco, 83 L. County Court—Jurisdiction—"Collision."]—The County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, s. 3, provides that County Courts having Admiralty jurisdiction shall have jurisdiction as to any claim for "damage by collision":—Held, that this jurisdiction is confined to collision between ships, and does not extend to damage by a ship to a floating gas buoy, which is not a ship. The Normandy (73 L. Appeal from County Court — Extension of Time for Depositing Security — Mistake of Solicitors—Discretion.]—Under section 27 of the County Courts Admiralty Jurisdiction Act, 1868, it is not "sufficient cause" to entitle the Court to allow an appeal to be prosecuted that the appellants' solicitors have, under a mistaken impression that it was unnecessary, omitted to deposit security for the appeal within the proper time. The Gratia (No. 1), 28 T. L. R. 49—D.

—— Filing of Notice of Appeal before Service on Adverse Solicitor.]—In an appeal to the Admiralty Division from a County Court the appellants filed their notice of motion in the Registry before serving the respondents' solicitor with a copy of the notice. On the appeal coming on, the preliminary objection was taken by the respondents that the Court could not entertain the appeal on the ground that the appellants had not complied with the provisions of Order LII. rule 10 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, which require that a copy of the notice of motion shall be served on the adverse solicitor before the original is filed in the Registry:—Held, that even if Order LII. rule 10 applied, the case was one in which the Court should, in the exercise of its discretion, hear the appeal on the ground that sufficient notice had been given to the respondents. Whether the words "in Admiralty actions" in Order LII. rule 10 are intended to include appeals dealt with by Order LIX. quære. The Gratia (No. 2), 28 T. L. R. 474—D.

Warrant against Freight whether Issuable Separately—Freight Already Paid—Access to Cargo — Service of Writ and Warrant.]—A warrant cannot issue against freight separately from ship or cargo, or against the proceeds of the freight already paid to the owners of the ship by the owners or consignees of cargo; and there is no power in an action in rem to issue either the writ of summons or the warrant to arrest cargo and freight unless there is access to the cargo, except that in the case where access is refused service may be effected on the custodian. The Kaleten, 30 T. "Open cover" — Loss — Refusal to Sign Policy—New Contract on New Consideration—Contract for Sea Insurance not Expressed in Policy—Action for Payment—Penalty for Payment on Contract not Expressed in Policy—Stamp.]—The plaintiffs, a marine insurance company, re-insured certain risks by means of an "open cover" with the defendant, an underwriter at Lloyd's. They became liable for a loss, and put forward a policy in respect thereof for the defendant to sign. He refused to do so on the ground that the plaintiffs had not made all the declarations which they should have done. But he agreed orally that if an independent person, having examined the plaintiff's books, certified that all the declarations had been made, he would sign the policy and pay the loss. The certificate did so certify, but the defendant refused to pay, and the action was brought for breach of the oral agreement to do so. The defendant contended—first, that if he paid he would be guilty of an offence and be liable to a penalty under section 97 of the Stamp Act, 1891, in that he would be paying a sum of money upon a loss relative to sea insurance, which insurance was not expressed in a policy of sea insurance duly stamped; and secondly, that the oral agreement was a contract of sea insurance and invalid under section 93 because not expressed in a policy of sea insurance :—Held, that these contentions were correct, and that the plaintiffs could not recover. Genforsikrings Aktieselskabet v. Da Costa, 80 L. J. K.B. 236; [1911] 1 K.B. 137; 103 L. T. 767; 16 Com. Cas. 1; 11 Asp. M.C. 548; 27 T. L. R. 43—Hamilton, J.

Construction — Loss under Two of Three Existing Policies — Intention of Assured — Right to Recover.] — The plaintiffs executed three policies of insurance on the ship Kynance dated May 6 and 11, and August 4, 1910. The first two policies related to her voyage from Newcastle, N.S.W., to the west coast of South America, and the third policy related to the homeward voyage from the west coast. The risk under the third policy was "to commence from expiration of previous policy." On August 9, 1910, the plaintiffs re-insured the ship with the defendant for a voyage "at and from Valparaiso and/or any port or ports, place or places on the west coast of South America" to the United Kingdom, Continent, or United States. The ship was lost on the west coast in circumstances which, while rendering the plaintiffs liable under the first two policies, brought the loss within the general words of the re-insurance policy. The defendant contended that the general words must be limited by the intention of the plaintiffs as shewn by the instructions given by them to their brokers when effecting the re-insurance, and that the plaintiffs only intended by the re-insurance to cover their risk under the policy of August 4, 1910:—Held, on the facts, that it was not the intention of the plaintiffs to cover the risk under the policy of August 4, 1910, only; but that in any event it was not open to the plaintiffs under section 26, sub-section 3 of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, or otherwise, to narrow down the natural and prima facie meaning of the contract contained in the re-insurance policy, so as to make it cover the risk under one only of the three original policies, to each of which it was equally applicable, by proof of such an intention on the part of the plaintiffs uncommunicated to the defendant. Reliance Marine Insurance Co. v. Duder, 81 L. Commencement of Risk — Intention of Assured—Right of Assured to Recover.]—A ship was insured by certain policies issued by the plaintiffs, who were underwriters at Lloyd's, for a voyage "from Newcastle, N.S.W., to port or ports, place or places of call, and/or discharge backwards and forwards and forwards and backwards in any order or rotation on the West Coast of South America" at a premium of 70*s.* per cent., cargo screened coal or held covered. The ship was valued at 12,000*l.*, and the risk was to continue for thirty days after arrival at final port of discharge, or until sailing on next voyage, whichever might first occur. The ship was also insured by a Lloyd's policy issued by the plaintiffs for a voyage "at and from Valparaiso and/or port or ports and/or place or places in any order or rotation on the West Coast of South America" to the United Kingdom or Continent of Europe, or the United States, at a premium of 80*s.* per cent., "warranted nitrate or held covered at a premium to be arranged." The ship was valued in this policy at 10,000*l.*, and the risk was to commence from the expiration of the previous policy. The plaintiffs then re-insured the ship with the defendant for a voyage "at and from Valparaiso and/or port or ports and/or place or places in any order or rotation on the West Coast of South America" to the United Kingdom, Continent of Europe, or the United States against the risk of total and/or constructive total loss of the vessel only, at a premium of 40*s.* per cent., "being a re-insurance applying to policy or policies underwritten by Lloyd's underwriters subject to the same clauses and conditions as original policy or policies, and to pay as may be paid thereon." The ship was "valued at 10,000*l.* or as in original policy or policies," and the policy contained the clause "warranted nitrate or held covered at a premium to be arranged." The vessel was chartered to load a cargo of coal at Newcastle, N.S.W., and under the charterparty the charterers directed her to discharge the cargo at Valparaiso, and bills of lading were issued making it deliverable at that port. She was then to proceed under a second charterparty to Tocopilla to load a nitrate cargo for a European port. When the vessel reached Valparaiso it was agreed between the owners and the charterers under the first charterparty that instead of delivering the whole of the cargo of coal at Valparaiso she should proceed with 800 or 900 tons of coal still on board and deliver same to charterers at Tocopilla. This arrangement relieved the captain from the necessity of taking ballast on board for the voyage from Valparaiso to Tocopilla. On the voyage to the latter port the vessel stranded and became a total loss. The plaintiffs had paid the owners of the ship for a loss under the policies on the first voyage. In an action on the policy of re-insurance,—Held, that the policy of re-insurance, inasmuch as it was in respect of a named cargo and of a named value, was intended to cover the homeward voyage from Valparaiso to the United Kingdom and not to cover the cross-voyage from Newcastle to the West Coast of South America, and that therefore the defendant was not liable, it having been held by Mr. Justice Scrutton in Kynance Co. v. Young (27 T. L. R. 306; 16 Com. Cas. 123) that the vessel was lost on the cross-voyage. Held, further, that evidence extrinsic to the policy—namely, of the slip, the plaintiffs' books, and the evidence of the defendant—was admissible to identify the policy which was being re-insured, and to shew that the policy was intended to be a policy on the homeward voyage, the intention to insure a particular voyage having been communicated to the defendant. Janson v. Poole, 84 L. J. K.B. 1543; 20 Com. Cas. 232; 31 T. L. R. 336—Sankey, J.

Steamers not yet Built—From what Time Policy Runs—Ratification of Policy.]—A slip was initialled by M. on behalf of his names in January, 1911, for the insurance of the steamers Olympic and Titanic for twelve months from delivery by the builders, and the plaintiffs, acting on the instructions of M., obtained the re-insurance of part of the risk under that slip. The Olympic was delivered on May 18, 1911. In January, 1912, a fresh slip was initialled by M. on behalf of his names to cover the steamers for twelve months from the expiration of the original policy or slip. In April, 1912, the Titanic was delivered and M. insured a policy on her, thinking that he was doing so under the slip of January, 1911, while the brokers for the shipowners thought that he was acting under the slip of January, 1912, and M. requested the defendants to issue the re-insurance policy. On April 15, 1912, the Titanic was lost, and later the defendants issued the re-insurance policy, which was expressed to re-insure the risk taken by M.'s names under the slip of January, 1911, and not under that of January, 1912. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants on the re-insurance policy,—Held, that when one slip included more than one steamer, the policy ran from the time when the first steamer came on the risk, and the original slip of January, 1911, remained in force till May 18, 1912, that the original policy of April, 1912, was issued under the slip of January, 1911, and not under that of January, 1912, that the re-insurance slip was a contract to issue a policy in the usual form covered by the slip, and that the re-insurance policy should be rectified so as to enable the plaintiffs to claim under it, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. Emanuel & Co. v. Weir & Co., 30 T. L. R. 518—Bailhache, J.

Policy "subject to same clauses and conditions as original policy . . . and to pay as may be paid thereon"—Two Slips.]—In January, 1911, a firm of D. & W. initialled a slip agreeing to insure the Olympic and Titanic for twelve months from delivery. Shortly afterwards D. & W. re-insured part of this risk with the plaintiffs. In December, 1911, the defendant initialled a slip for re-insuring a portion of the plaintiff's risk for "twelve months from expiration or delivery, clauses and conditions as original." In January, 1912, the Titanic not having yet been delivered, D. & W. initialled another slip in the following terms: "Olympic, Titanic, twelve months from expiry." No intimation was given to D. & W. or to the plaintiffs' agent that this was intended to be anything else but what it purported to be—namely, a renewal for a further twelve months after the expiry of the first twelve months; but before a policy was issued an intimation was sent to some of the underwriters explaining that the insurance, so far as concerned the Titanic, would commence from the delivery of the ship; no such notice was, however, sent to D. & W. or to the plaintiffs' agent. A policy was issued by D. & W. on April 3, 1912, insuring the Titanic for 2,500*l.* from April 2, 1912; by a policy dated April 10, 1912, the plaintiffs re-insured D. & W.'s risk to the extent of 400*l.*; and on April 11, 1912, the defendant underwrote a policy re-insuring the plaintiffs' risk to the amount of 80*l.* This policy contained the following clause: "Being a re-insurance for account the Scottish National Insurance Company (Limited) subject to the same clauses and conditions as original policy or policies and to pay as may be paid thereon." The Titanic having been lost on April 15, 1912, the plaintiffs paid D. & W. under the policy of April 10, and now sought to recover from the defendant under the policy underwritten by him on April 11, 1912. The defendant contended that the policy of April 10 was not the original policy mentioned in the policy of April 11, and that there was no original policy, and, further, that the initialling of the second slip had the effect of cancelling the slip of January, 1911:—Held, that D. & W. were always under a contract of insurance of the Titanic for the first twelve months by virtue of the slip they initialled in January, 1911; that the plaintiffs agreed to re-insure D. & W. up to 400*l.* in January, 1911, and remained under this liability; that the defendant agreed to re-insure the plaintiffs against their liability to the amount of 80*l.* by initialling the slip of December, 1911, and that he signed the policy of April 11, 1912, in pursuance of that contract, and therefore that he was liable to the plaintiffs. Scottish National Insurance Co. v. Poole, 107 L. T. 687; 18 Com. Cas. 9; 12 Asp. M.C. 266; 57 S. J. 45; 29 T. L. R. 16—Bray, J.

Re-insurance against Total or Constructive Loss only—"To follow hull underwriters in event of a compromised or arranged loss being settled"—Claim for Constructive Total Loss or Alternatively for Partial Loss Compromised by Hull Underwriters.]—The defendants re-insured the plaintiff by a policy which contained the following clause: "Being a re-insurance and to pay as per original policy or policies, but the insurance is against the risk of the total or constructive total loss of the steamer only, but to follow hull underwriters in event of a compromised or arranged loss being settled." An action was brought by the owner of the insured ship against the hull underwriters claiming for a constructive total loss and in the alternative for a partial loss, and that action was compromised, nothing being said as to whether the underwriters were settling the claim as for a constructive total loss or as for a partial loss. In an action on the re-insurance policy,—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, inasmuch as there having been a claim for a constructive total loss against the hull underwriters which had been compromised, there was, within the meaning of the clause in the re-insurance policy, "a compromised or arranged loss," notwithstanding that there had also been an alternative claim against the hull underwriters for a partial loss. Street v. Royal Exchange Assurance, 111 L. Constructive Total Loss — Compromise of Claim under Original Policy—Right of Re-insurers to Benefit of Compromise.] — The plaintiffs, who had insured the Katina against total and/or constructive total loss only, re-insured the risk with the defendants. The re-insurance policies did not contain the usual clause "to pay as may be paid thereon." During the currency of the policies the Katina stranded, and her owners gave notice of abandonment, alleging that she was a constructive total loss. The plaintiffs declined to accept the notice of abandonment, whereupon the owners sued them, but that action was compromised by the plaintiffs paying to the owners 66 per cent. only of the loss. The defendants were asked to agree to this compromise, but they declined to do so, alleging that there was no constructive total loss in fact. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendants on the re-insurance policies it was found, as a fact, that the Katina was a constructive total loss: —Held, that a contract of re-insurance is a contract of indemnity only; and that therefore, as the defendants were entitled to the benefit of the compromise made by the plaintiffs with the owners, the plaintiffs could only recover from the defendants 66 per cent. of the loss; the plaintiffs, however, were entitled to add to their claim against the defendants the costs of obtaining the compromise with the owners. Uzielli & Co. v. Boston Marine Insurance Co. (54 L. Non-disclosure of Material Fact — Policy "subject without notice to the same clauses and conditions as the original policy" — Liability of Re-insurer.] — The plaintiffs insured the hull of a steamship on a time policy for 500*l.* at a premium of 6 per cent. The policy contained a clause that the ship had the option to navigate the Canadian lakes, and an additional premium of 3 per cent. was paid in respect thereof. The defendants re-insured 250*l.* on the risk at the same premium of 6 per cent., but no mention was made at the time the re-insurance was effected of the option to navigate the lakes or the additional premium. The defendants' policy was stated to be "subject without notice to the same clauses and conditions as the original policy." While in the lakes the ship sustained damage in respect of which the plaintiffs paid 117*l.* 13*s.* on their original policy. The plaintiffs claimed 58*l.* 16*s.* 6*d.*, the proportion due from the defendants, but the defendants repudiated liability on the ground that a material fact had been concealed from them, and their policy of re-insurance was thereby rendered invalid: —Held, that although the option to navigate the lakes was a material fact that ordinarily should have been disclosed when the re-insurance was effected, the defendants had agreed to be bound by the terms of the original policy without notice, and were therefore liable. Property Insurance Co. v. National Protector Insurance Co., 108 L. Policy Covering Voyage "to port or ports place or places of call and/or discharge"—One Port of Discharge Named in Charterparty — Total Loss while Vessel Proceeding to Second Port with Part of Original Cargo—Right of Assured to Recover.]—By a policy of insurance the plaintiffs insured their ship for a voyage from Newcastle (N.S.W.) "to port or ports, place or places of call and/or discharge backwards and forwards and forwards and backwards in any order or rotation on the West Coast of South America, and while in port for 30 days after arrival, however employed, or until sailing on next voyage, whichever may first occur." The vessel was chartered to load a cargo of coal at Newcastle (N.S.W.), and under the charterparty the charterers directed her to discharge the cargo at Valparaiso, and bills of landing were issued making it deliverable at that port. She was then, under a second charterparty, to proceed to Tocopilla to load a nitrate cargo for a European port. When the vessel reached Valparaiso it was agreed between the plaintiffs and the charterers under the first charterparty that, instead of delivering the whole of the cargo of coal at Valparaiso, she should proceed with 800 or 900 tons of the coal still on board and deliver same to the charterers at Tocopilla. This arrangement also relieved the captain from the necessity of taking ballast on board for the voyage from Valparaiso to Tocopilla. On the voyage to the latter port the vessel stranded, and became a total loss:—Held, that it was competent for the plaintiffs and charterers to vary the mode of performing the charterparty by discharging the cargo of coal at two ports, instead of one, and that the loss was covered by the policy. Policy Covering Transit — Steel Casting — Conclusion of Transit — Damage — Action on Policy.]—The plaintiffs, a Hamburg shipping company, ordered a new cast-steel stern frame for a steamer and had a policy of marine insurance effected on it with the defendant and other underwriters at Lloyd's. The policy was expressed to be "against all risks, especially including breakage and damage done and received through loading and discharging, irrespective of percentage." It was further provided by clauses attached to the policy that it should include "all risks of craft and/or raft and/or of any special lighterage without recourse against lighterman . . . of fire, transhipment, landing, warehousing, and reshipment if incurred, and whilst waiting shipment and/or reshipment, and all other risks and losses by land and water from the time of leaving the warehouse at point of departure until safely delivered into warehouse or other place for which the goods have been entered or in which it is intended they shall be lodged, whether previously discharged or landed elsewhere within the port or place of destination or not." The casting was shipped from West Hartlepool to Hamburg and discharged on the quay on June 14. At that time the steamer on which the stern frame was to be fitted was at Port Said, but she was expected at Hamburg. Arrangements were made on June 27 with the Vulcan Works Co. to fit the frame, and this company transported it in a lighter to their quay. While it was being lifted from the lighter to their quay it struck the quay wall and was so damaged as to be useless. The plaintiffs claimed that there had been a total loss by a peril insured against :—Held, that the casting was not in transit at the time when the loss occurred, and therefore the plaintiffs could not recover on the policy. Deutsch-Australische Dampfschiffs-Gesellschaft v. Sturge, 109 L. III. NATURE OF RISK.

Percolating Water.]—Opium was placed in a wooden hulk which was in a rotten condition and which was moored in a river. The opium, on which a time policy against marine risks had been effected, was damaged by sea water percolating through some copper sheathing which covered up a weak place in the hulk :—Held, that the opium was not covered by the policy, the damage, though proximately due to sea water, not being due in any sense to a peril of the sea. Sassoon & Co. v. Western Assurance Co., 81 L. Perils "of the seas . . . and all other perils, losses, and misfortunes" — Institute Time Clauses Attached to Policy—"In port and at sea, in docks" — Inchmaree Clause — Ship Loading in Dock — Accident through Breaking of Machinery of Floating Crane.] — A steamer was insured by a time policy against perils "of the seas" and "all other perils, losses, and misfortunes." The policy included "the conditions of the Institute Time Clauses as attached." Clause 3 of the attached clauses provided as follows : "In port and at sea, in docks and graving docks . . . in all places, and on all occasions, services, and trades whatsoever and wheresoever. . . ." Clause 7 provided as follows : "This insurance also specially to cover . . . loss of, or damage to hull or machinery . . . through any latent defect in the machinery or hull." The steamer while lying in dock was taking on board a boiler weighing thirty tons from a floating crane. The boiler as it descended caught upon the coamings of the hatch, and the pin of the shackle attached to the rope by which the boiler was being lowered broke and the boiler fell into the lower hold and damaged the ship :—Held (Phillimore, L.J., dubitante), that the loss was not covered by the general words in the body of the policy, as it was not due to a peril, loss, or misfortune of a marine character, or of a character incident to a ship as such; nor by clause 3 of the attached clauses, as that clause could not be read as enlarging the class of risks covered by the policy; nor by clause 7 of the attached clauses, as that clause could not be read into the ordinary Lloyd's peril clause in the policy so as to make the general words in that clause applicable to clause 7. Stott (Baltic) Steamers, Lim. v. Marten, 83 L. b. Collision.

Collision Clause of Lloyd's Policy — Construction—"Collision with any other ship or vessel"—Fouling Nets of Fishing Vessel.]—The collision clause attached to the usual form of Lloyd's policy provides that if the insured ship "shall come into collision with any other ship or vessel" and the assured shall in consequence thereof become liable to pay and shall pay by way of damages to any other person any sum not exceeding the value of the insured ship, the company will pay the assured a certain proportion of such sum. The respondents' steamer ran foul of the nets belonging to and attached to a fishing vessel about a mile distant. The hull of the steamship did not at any time come into contact with the hull of the fishing vessel :—Held, that there had not been, under the circumstances, a collision between the steamship and "any other ship or vessel" within the meaning of the collision clause. Bennett Steamship Co. v. Hull Mutual Steamship Protecting Society, 83 L. Institute Time Collision Clause—Collision between Insured Vessel and another Vessel — Subsequent Collision between the other Vessel and Third Vessel — Second Collision Caused by Forces set in Operation by the Negligent Navigation of Insured Vessel — Liability of Underwriters for Damage Caused by Second Collision.] — A policy of marine insurance on the plaintiffs' vessel, the Cornwood, which was underwritten by the defendants, contained the running-down clause of the Institute Time Clauses, as follows : "It is further agreed that if the ship hereby insured shall come into collision with any other ship or vessel, and the assured shall in consequence thereof become liable to pay, and shall pay by way of damages to any other person or persons any sum or sums not exceeding in respect of any one such collision the value of the ship hereby insured, this company will pay the assured such proportions of three-fourths of such sum or sums so paid as its subscription hereto bears to the value of the ship hereby insured." The Cornwood, while proceeding up the river Seine, desired to pass the Rouen, which was also proceeding up the Seine. The Galatee was at the same time coming down the river. The Cornwood, trying to avoid both ships, by negligent navigation drew too near the Rouen as she passed, with the result that the stem of the Rouen was drawn to the side of the Cornwood, and there was a slight collision. The Cornwood then ran into the bank, and the wash from her propeller operated upon the bow of the Rouen, increasing the swing that she already had to port as a result of the close proximity of the Cornwood, with the result that the Rouen was pushed across the river, where she came into collision with the Galatee, causing very serious damage to both vessels. The owners of the Cornwood were held liable in an action in the Admiralty Court for the damage caused both to the Rouen and to the Galatee. They now sued the underwriters to recover for such damage under the above clause in the policy: —Held, that, inasmuch as the collision between the Rouen and the Galatee was due to forces set in operation by the negligent navigation of the Cornwood causing the impact between the Cornwood and the Rouen, it was a consequence of that collision within the terms of the collision clause in the policy, and that therefore the owners of the Cornwood were entitled to recover from the underwriters under the policy three-fourths of the damages they had had to pay to the owners of the Rouen and the Galatee. France, Fenwick & Co. v. Merchants Marine Insurance Co., 84 L. Shipment of Goods in British Ship to Hamburg—Declaration of War by England against Germany — Abandonment of Voyage without Intervention of Force — Notice of Abandonment.]—A declaration of war is an act of State equivalent to a statute prohibiting intercourse with the enemy country, and amounts to a "restraint of princes" within the meaning of the peril of "takings at sea, arrests, restraints and detainments of all kings, princes and people of what nation, condition or quality soever," insured against in a policy of marine insurance. Actual physical force is not necessary to constitute such restraint provided that the State has power to enforce the prohibition, and the restraint may be exercised by the Government of a country of which the assured is a subject, provided that the restraint is not imposed for a violation of the law of that country. Sanday & Co. v. British and Foreign Marine Insurance Co., 84 L. Decision of Astbury, J. (31 T. L. R. 194), affirmed. Ib.

The Marine Insurance Act, 1906, has not altered the common law doctrine that the constructive total loss of goods insured can be proved by the destruction of the contemplated adventure. Ib.

The plaintiffs, British subjects, sold on c.i.f. terms to some German firms at Hamburg some parcels of linseed and wheat, but the ownership of the goods was to remain in the plaintiffs until delivery at Hamburg. The goods were shipped in June and July, 1914, in British ships at Buenos Aires for Hamburg, and were insured with the defendants against the peril of "takings at sea, arrests, restraints and detainments of all kings, princes and people of what nation, condition or quality soever." War was declared by England against Germany on August 4, 1914, and trading with the enemy was immediately afterwards prohibited by proclamation. The vessels containing the shipments, instead of continuing the voyage to Hamburg, proceeded to English ports, and discharged their cargoes, the linseed and wheat being depreciated in value. In an action by the plaintiffs on the policy,—Held (Swinfen Eady, L.J., dissentiente), that the plaintiffs could recover for the constructive total loss of the goods by one of the perils insured against—namely, that of "restraint of princes," &c., within the meaning of the policy. Dictum of Martin, B., in Finlay v. Liverpool and Great Western Steamship Co. (23 L. 3. Capture and Seizure.

See also Vol. XIII. 1104, 2243.

Cargo not Sent Forward to Port of Destination—Fear of Capture.]—The plaintiffs, merchants carrying on business in Russia, effected with the defendants a policy of insurance on cargo at and from San Francisco to Vladivostok. The policy, which was against total loss, was against war risk only—namely, the risk excepted by the clause "warranted free of capture, seizure and detention and the consequences thereof . . . and also from all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations, whether before or after declaration of war." The plaintiffs had arranged for three shipments. The first two shipments were made, but the vessels were captured by the Japanese Fleet during the war between Russia and Japan. When the vessel which was to carry the rest of the goods was about to sail, and when some of the cargo was on board, it became known that the Japanese Fleet was blockading Vladivostok and was capturing vessels, and the underwriters telegraphed that if the cargo was sent forward to Vladivostok they would contend that the plaintiffs had deliberately caused any loss which might be occasioned. Notice of abandonment was thereupon given to the underwriters, who, however, refused to accept it, and the cargo was discharged and sold. In an action upon the policy, the plaintiffs claimed the value of the cargo, giving credit for the amount realised by the sale:—Held, that under the circumstances there had been no loss of cargo by a peril insured against. Kaeianoff v. China

Detention of Ship by Belligerent — Ship Subsequently Released—"Actual total loss" — "Constructive total loss" — "Unlikely to recover."] — A policy of insurance on the plaintiffs' s.s. Polurrian was expressed to be against "capture seizure and detention and the consequences thereof or any attempt thereat piracy excepted and also from all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations whether before or after declaration of war." On October 9, 1912, the Polurrian sailed from Newport for Constantinople with a cargo of coal. On October 17 war broke out between Turkey and Greece, and the Greeks declared all fuel to be contraband of war. When the Polurrian arrived off the entrance to the Dardanelles on October 25 she was stopped by Greek destroyers, taken to the Greek naval base at Lemnos, and there detained until November 28. The cargo of coal was taken out of her by the Greeks and used for coaling the Greek fleet. She was then ordered by the Greek admiral to proceed to the Piræus in order to be tried by a Prize Court, but was eventually released on December 8 without coming before a Prize Court. The Greeks alleged that the master of the Polurrian had admitted when the ship was seized that he knew of the war. The master denied that he knew of the war or had admitted that he knew of it to the Greeks. The plaintiffs gave notice of abandonment to the underwriters on October 26, and claimed for an actual or a constructive total loss, or in the alternative damages (inter alia) for the loss of the use of the ship during the six weeks as a particular average loss:—Held, by Pickford, J., that there had not been an actual total loss of the Polurrian within the meaning of section 57 of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, nor a constructive total loss within the meaning of section 60, as the owners had not been irretrievably deprived of her, nor was it at any time unlikely that they would recover the ship. Further, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover as a particular average loss the depreciated value of the ship by reason of her not being able to earn money during the time she was detained. On appeal on the question of "constructive total loss,"—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that although on October 26 recovery of the ship was "uncertain," it was not "unlikely" within section 60, sub-section 2 (a) of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, and that the plaintiffs could not therefore recover for a "constructive total loss." Polurrian Steamship Co. v. Young, 84 L. Where the insured has been deprived of the possession of his ship by a peril insured against, the test of "unlikelihood" of recovery is substituted by section 60, sub-section 2 (a) of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, for the former test of "uncertainty" of recovery. Ib.

Men-of-war—Goods on German Ship—Outbreak of War—Ship Putting into Neutral Port to Avoid Peril of Capture—Constructive Total Loss of Goods.] — The plaintiffs, who were English merchants, shipped goods at Calcutta on board the Kattenturm, a German ship, for carriage to Hamburg. The goods were insured by the plaintiffs with the defendants against (inter alia) the perils of "men-of-war . . . enemies . . . takings at sea, arrests, restraints, and detainments of all kings, princes, and peoples of what nation, condition, or quality soever . . . and of all other perils, losses, and misfortunes, that have or shall come to the hurt, detriment, or damage, of the said goods and merchandise." The ship was in the Mediterranean when war broke out in August, 1914, between Great Britain and France and Germany. The master, on hearing of the outbreak of war and fearing that if he proceeded with the voyage his ship would be captured by British or French cruisers, put into Messina, and subsequently shifted to another neutral port, where he remained. The plaintiffs gave notice of abandonment to the defendants, alleging that there had been a constructive loss of the goods by a peril insured against:—Held, that the loss of the goods was due to the fact that the voyage was abandoned at Messina, but that at the time the master of the Kattenturm went into Messina the peril of capture had not begun to operate, he having gone into that port to avoid the commencement of the peril, and that therefore the loss of the goods was not due to a peril insured against. Becker, Gray & Co. v. London Assurance Corporation, 84 L. War Risks—Loss by German Submarine.] —The steamship Oriole was insured by the defendant company against ordinary marine perils, war risks being excluded, and she was insured by the defendant Janson against war risks. She left London for Havre in a seaworthy condition on January 29, 1915, and was last seen on January 30 off Dungeness. Two other steamers were torpedoed off Havre by a German submarine on January 30:—Held, on the evidence, that the Oriole had been lost by a war risk, and therefore the defendant Janson was liable on his policy, but the defendant company were not liable on their policy. General Steam Navigation Co. v. Commercial Union Assurance Co.; Same v. Janson, 31 T. "Inchmaree clause"—Damage to Hull or Machinery—Latent Defect.]—By a policy of marine insurance a ship was insured for twelve months from December 8, 1908, to December 8, 1909, against the ordinary Lloyd's perils. The policy also contained the following clause: "This insurance also specially to cover . . . loss of or damage to hull . . . through any latent defect in the . . . hull . . . provided such loss or damage has not resulted from want of due negligence by the owners of the ship, or any of them, or by the manager." There was a defect in the ship's stern frame at the time she was built—namely, in 1906. The defect was covered up by the makers, and it remained undiscovered by reasonable inspection until after the commencement of the policy. During the currency of the policy the defect became visible owing to ordinary wear and tear, and the stern frame was condemned. The assured claimed to recover under the policy the cost of replacing the condemned stern frame:—Held, that there had been no loss of or damage to hull during the currency of the policy from perils insured against, and therefore that the assured were not entitled to recover. Hutchins v. Royal Exchange Assurance, 80 L. IV. INTEREST OF ASSURED.

See also Vol. XIII. 1110, 2252.

Measure of Insurable Interest.]—The measure of insurable interest in a marine policy of insurance covering a fluctuating subject-matter is the amount at risk at the time of loss and not necessarily the amount of loss. Anstey v. Ocean Marine Insurance Co., 83 L. Policy on Captain's Effects on Board Ship—Risk of Damage or Loss by Fire—Total Loss by Fire of Portion of Effects on Board—Portion on Shore.]—The captain of a ship insured his effects against total loss of the vessel, including perils of the sea, fire, &c. Whilst he was on shore with certain clothing, his watch, &c., the vessel was totally lost through an explosion of dynamite, with the result that his effects on board were destroyed:—Held, that the policy covered the whole of his effects at the time of the loss and not merely the effects which were destroyed, and that the insurers were therefore only liable for such a proportionate sum of money as the value of the lost effects bore to the whole. Ib.

Freight—Valued Freight Policy—Constructive Total Loss of Ship—Freight Subsequently Earned—Clause in Hull Policy that Underwriters not Entitled to Freight—Clause in Freight Policy for Payment of Freight in Full on Total Loss, whether Absolute or Constructive.]—The plaintiff insured the hull and machinery of the s.s. Ivy by a policy to which the Institute Time Clauses—Hull, of 1910, were attached, and these included the following: "In the event of total or constructive total loss, no claim to be made by the underwriters for freight, whether notice of abandonment has been given or not." The plaintiff also took out a policy on freight valued at 950*l.*, and attached to that policy were the Institute Time Clauses—Freight, of 1910, No. 5 of which was as follows: "In the event of the total loss, whether absolute or constructive, of the steamer, the amount underwritten by this policy shall be paid in full, whether the steamer be fully or only partly loaded or in ballast, chartered or unchartered." During the currency of these policies the Ivy became a constructive total loss, but she was subsequently towed to her port of destination, where she discharged her cargo, and the plaintiff received from the consignees 630*l.* 12*s.* in respect of the carriage of the cargo so delivered. Thereafter the plaintiff sued the defendants as the underwriters on the freight policy, claiming payment "in full" under the freight policy—namely, 950*l.*:—Held, that as some freight had been earned by delivery of the cargo to the consignees, and that freight had been received and retained by the plaintiff, the defendants, as the freight underwriters, were only liable to the plaintiff for the amount insured, less the amount of freight so received by the plaintiff from the consignees of cargo. Coker v. Bolton, 82 L. —— "Chartered or as if chartered."]—The plaintiffs effected with the defendants a policy of insurance upon freight on frozen meat and/or apples and/or other refrigerated produce valued at 15,000*l.*, "chartered or as if chartered" of the ship Ayrshire, "at and from any ports or places in any order or rotation in the United Kingdom to any ports or places in any order or rotation in Australia and/or Tasmania. . . ." The perils insured against included perils of the seas:—Held, that the words "chartered or as if chartered" could not extend to a reasonable anticipation on the part of the plaintiffs of earning freight upon a complete cargo where no contract to load cargo was in existence at the material date. Scottish Shire Line v. London and Provincial Marine and General Insurance Co., 81 L. Insurance on Passage Money against Passenger Act—Accident to Ship—Passengers Forwarded to Destination by other Ships—Disbursements in Respect of Passage Money—Ship after Repairs Sails to Destination with other Passengers—Loss of Passage Money—Salvage.]—By a policy, underwritten by the defendant and other underwriters at Lloyd's, the plaintiffs were insured from any ports or places in the United Kingdom to any ports or places in Australia and/or New Zealand upon any kinds of goods and merchandise in the s.s. Westmeath. The goods and merchandise were "valued at 4,758*l.* on passage money, plus 50 per cent. (United Kingdom bookings to Australia) so valued; 992*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* passage money plus 50 per cent. (United Kingdom bookings to New Zealand) so valued—5,750*l.* 13*s.* 3*d.* against Passenger Act as per clause attached." The clause attached provided that the policy was "to be held to cover any disbursements, &c., that may be made by the assured arising from accident or loss on account of passengers . . . whether for maintenance or conveyance to intended destination . . . and whether such disbursements, &c., be compulsory or voluntary (provided same be reasonably incurred)." The s.s. Westmeath was carrying emigrants to Australia. She started on her voyage from Liverpool, but while in the Mersey she dragged her anchors and went ashore and sustained serious damage. The plaintiffs, in order to comply with the provisions of sections 328 and 331 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, incurred considerable expense in respect of the maintenance of the passengers on shore, and they were eventually carried to their destination in other ships, and the plaintiffs paid the passage money in respect of their carriage. The s.s. Westmeath was repaired, and after being detained seventy to eighty days sailed to Australia with other passengers whose passage money exceeded the amount of the passage money of the passengers on the Westmeath when she went ashore. In an action by the plaintiffs for a loss under the policy in respect of the disbursements incurred by them,—Held, that the policy was an insurance upon the risk of disbursements with regard to the particular passengers on board the Westmeath when she first sailed, and that the passage money of the passengers who were eventually carried on the Westmeath upon different contracts could not be regarded as substituted for the passage money of the first lot of passengers, neither could it be regarded as a salvage in respect of the subject-matter insured, and that therefore the plaintiffs were entitled to recover. New Zealand Shipping Co. v. Duke, 83 L. Non-disclosure of Material Facts.]—Marine insurances were effected for a particular voyage on a sailing ship, and payment was resisted by the appellants—first, on the ground of breach of the warranty of seaworthiness; secondly, on the ground of the non-disclosure of material facts, (a) as to the captain of the vessel, and (b) as to the other insurances effected in connection with the ship. The captain had not been at sea, when he was engaged, for twenty-two years, having in the interval been occupied as a stevedore. He had lost his last ship and his certificate had been suspended. The hull was largely over-insured, and there were insurances on gross freight and disbursements. In some of these latter there was no insurable interest. The manager, who was a creditor of the ship, had for his own protection taken out "honour" policies, the amount of which would in the event of the ship's loss be paid in full:—Held, that the non-disclosure of the past history of the master of the ship was not a concealment of a material fact or a breach of warranty of seaworthiness; but that the concealment of the over-insurance and of the "honour" policies constituted such a concealment and made the policies voidable by the insurer. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. "Gunford" Ship Co.; Southern Marine Insurance Association v. "Gunford" Ship Co., 80 L. J. P.C. 146; [1911] A.C. 529; 105 L. T. 312; 16 Com. Cas. 270; 12 Asp. M.C. 49; 55 S. J. 631; 27 T. L. R. 518—H.L. (Sc.)

The plaintiffs agreed with an Australian firm to have the Ayrshire at Hobart on or about March 20, 1910, ready to load a cargo of apples. This date was not made known by the plaintiffs to the defendants. The ship did not arrive till a much later date and lost the freight:—Held, that there had been a non-disclosure of a material circumstance by the assured, and that under section 18 of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, the defendants were entitled to avoid the policy. Scottish Shire Line v. London and Provincial Marine and General Insurance Co., 81 L. —— Floating Dock—Ocean Voyage—"Seaworthiness admitted"—Dock not Specially Strengthened for Voyage—Underwriters Put upon Enquiry—Waiver.]—The owners of a floating dock effected an insurance thereon "seaworthiness admitted" for an ocean voyage. They did not specially strengthen the dock for the voyage, honestly believing that no special strengthening was necessary, and they did not inform the underwriters that it had not been so strengthened. In consequence of not being so strengthened the dock was lost on the voyage. In an action on the policy the underwriters pleaded the non-disclosure of the fact that the dock had not been strengthened for the voyage:—Held, that in the circumstances the assured were not under an obligation to disclose this fact, but that the underwriters were put upon enquiry as to the construction or seaworthiness of the dock, and, not having made any enquiries, must be held to have waived the information. Cantiere Meccanico Brindisino v. Janson, 81 L. Assignment for Value without Notice—Defence of Concealment against Assignee—"Defence arising out of the contract."]—A firm of shipowners took out a policy of insurance on a certain ship with the defendants, but concealed a certain material fact from them. They assigned this policy to the plaintiffs for value and without notice, in pursuance of certain covenants. The ship was lost, and in an action by the plaintiffs, the assignees, to recover the policy moneys the defendants set up the defence of the concealment of the above material fact by the assignors:—Held, that it was an implied condition precedent to the liability of the defendants under the policy that no material facts should be concealed from them, and that breach of that condition was a breach of the contract, and that consequently the defence set up by the defendants was a defence within the meaning of section 50, sub-section 2 of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, under which the defendants were entitled to set up "any defence arising out of the contract" against assignees of the policy. Pickersgill v. London and Provincial Marine and General Insurance Co., 82 L. VI. "HELD COVERED" CLAUSE.

Misdescription of Interest Insured — "Interest insured"—Second-hand Machinery Described as Machinery—Honest Mistake or Misapprehension of Assured—"Held covered" Clause in Policy—Liability of Underwriters.] — A policy of marine insurance upon machinery, described as "machinery," against all risks, including breakage, contained the following clause: "In the event of . . . any incorrect definition of the interest insured it is agreed to hold the assured covered at a premium (if any) to be arranged." Some of the machinery was second-hand, but this fact was not disclosed to the underwriters, and was a material fact, but honestly not disclosed by the assured in the belief that it was immaterial:—Held, that the assured was protected by the "held covered" clause, and could recover under the policy for a breakage of the machinery during the voyage insured. Held, also, that "interest insured" referred to the subject-matter of the insurance, and not to the insurable interest of the assured. Hewitt v. Wilson, 84 L. VII. LOSSES.

Policy against Risk of Capture, Seizure, and Detention—Detention of Ship by Belligerent—Ship Subsequently Released—"Actual total loss"—"Constructive total loss"—"Unlikely to recover."]—A policy of insurance on the plaintiffs' s.s. Polurrian was expressed to be against "capture seizure and detention and the consequences thereof or any attempt thereat piracy excepted and also from all consequences of hostilities or warlike operations whether before or after declaration of war." On October 9, 1912, the Polurrian sailed from Newport for Constantinople with a cargo of coal. On October 17 war broke out between Turkey and Greece, and the Greeks declared all fuel to be contraband of war. When the Polurrian arrived off the entrance to the Dardanelles on October 25 she was stopped by Greek destroyers, taken to the Greek naval base at Lemnos, and there detained until November 28. The cargo of coal was taken out of her by the Greeks and used for coaling the Greek fleet. She was then ordered by the Greek admiral to proceed to the Piræus in order to be tried by a Prize Court, but was eventually released on December 8 without coming before a Prize Court. The Greeks alleged that the master of the Polurrian had admitted when the ship was seized that he knew of the war. The master denied that he knew of the war or had admitted that he knew of it to the Greeks. The plaintiffs gave notice of abandonment to the underwriters on October 26, and claimed for an actual or a constructive total loss, or in the alternative damages (inter alia) for the loss of the use of the ship during the six weeks as a particular average loss:—Held, by Pickford, J., that there had not been an actual total loss of the Polurrian within the meaning of section 57 of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, nor a constructive total loss within the meaning of section 60, as the owners had not been irretrievably deprived of her, nor was it at any time unlikely that they would recover the ship. Further, the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover as a particular average loss the depreciated value of the ship by reason of her not being able to earn money during the time she was detained. On appeal on the question of "constructive total loss,"—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that although on October 26 recovery of the ship was "uncertain," it was not "unlikely" within section 60, sub-section 2 (a) of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, and that the plaintiffs could not therefore recover for a "constructive total loss." Polurrian Steamship Co. v. Young, 84 L. J. K.B. 1025; [1915] 1 K.B. 922; 20 Com. Cas. 152; 112 L. T. 1053; 59 S. J. 285; 31 T. L. R. 211—C.A.

Where the insured has been deprived of the possession of his ship by a peril insured against, the test of "unlikelihood" of recovery is substituted by section 60, sub-section 2 (a) of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, for the former test of "uncertainty" of recovery. Ib.

Cargo—Constructive Total Loss—War Risk — Contraband — Discharge Elsewhere than Port of Destination.]—The plaintiffs insured a cargo of timber on a voyage from a Baltic port to Garston by a policy dated October 29, 1914, which was subscribed by the defendant and was against war risk only as excluded by the f.c. and s. clause, including risk of mines, torpedoes, and bombs, but excluding all claims arising from delay. The vessel started on November 22, 1914, and on November 23 Germany declared that wood was contraband. On November 25 a German torpedo-boat stopped the vessel when outside the Falsterbo lightship, and the officer informed the master that no ships with contraband were allowed to pass the Sound, but he might go to a Swedish or Danish port in the Baltic, and the master thereupon went to Stephens Klint, a Danish port. On December 3 notice of abandonment was given by the plaintiffs to the defendant, but he refused to accept it. On December 11 the master left Stephens Klint and passed through the Sound, and having called at Elsinore and Christiansand for orders, he proceeded in accordance with the orders to Grimstad in Norway, where he arrived on December 15 and discharged his cargo. The Norwegian Government placed no obstacle in the way of the cargo being re-shipped for England. In an action brought on the policy upon the ground that there had been a constructive total loss, there was evidence that up to and including December 3 all ships which had sailed before November 23 had an option to proceed to ports on the east coast of Sweden and there discharge, and that many such ships carrying wood had done so and their cargoes had been railed across Sweden and had reached England:—Held, that on December 3 the total loss of the venture was not unavoidable and the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover. Wilson Brothers, Bobbin & Co., v. Green, 31 T. L. R. 605—Bray, J.

Time Policy—Total Loss—Ship Sent to Sea with Insufficient Crew—Privity of Managing Owner.]—The plaintiffs sued the defendants, claiming to recover upon a time policy on the steamship Dunsley, which was totally lost during the currency of the policy:—Held, that the Dunsley was unseaworthy when she was sent on the voyage in question, inasmuch as she was provided with an insufficient crew, and that as she was sent on the voyage in that condition with the privity of the plaintiffs' managing owner, and the loss was attributable to such unseaworthiness, section 39, sub-section 5 of the Marine Insurance Act, 1906, relieved the defendants from liability for the loss. Thomas Shipping Co. v. London and Provincial Marine and General Insurance Co., 30 T. Frozen Meat Cargo—"Warranted free from particular average and loss unless caused by stranding, sinking, burning, or collision of the ship or craft"—Cargo Condemned by Sanitary Authorities—Total Loss.]—A cargo of frozen meat was insured "at and from Port Chalmers to Glasgow. Risk commencing at the freezing works and includes a period of not exceeding 60 days after arrival of the vessel." Pasted on the face of the policy, which was also expressed to be subject to Institute Clauses attached "so far as they apply," was the following clause: "Warranted free from particular average and loss unless caused by the stranding, sinking, burning, or collision of the ship or craft (the collision to be of such a nature as may reasonably be supposed to have caused or led to the damage claimed for) . . . ; also partial loss arising from transhipment. Including all risks of craft, or otherwise to and from the vessel . . ." Attached to the fly-leaf of the policy was the following clause: "The insurance covers loss from defective condition of the meat from every cause (except improper dressing) which shall arise during the currency of the insurance." At the inception of the risk the meat was in good order and condition, but on arrival at Glasgow it was in such a condition that it was seized by the sanitary authorities and condemned as unfit for human consumption. This condition of the meat was not caused by improper dressing, but it arose on board the vessel and not from transhipment. The vessel was not stranded, sunk, burnt, or in collision, nor was any craft conveying the meat. In an action to recover for a total loss under the policy, evidence was given on behalf of the underwriter by a number of other underwriters to the effect that the clause, "Warranted free from particular average and loss, unless caused by stranding, sinking, burning, or collision of ship or craft," &c., had a well-recognised meaning—namely, that the policy was warranted free not only from particular average unless it was caused by stranding, sinking, burning, or collision of ship or craft, but was also free from loss of the subject-matter, total or partial, unless caused in the same way:—Held, upon the evidence that the words had acquired that recognised meaning, and that as the loss in question had not occurred by stranding, sinking, burning, or collision of the ship or craft, the defendant was not liable on the policy. Otago Farmers' Co-operative Association v. Thompson, 79 L. J. K.B. 692; [1910] 2 K.B. 145; 102 L. T. 711; 15 Com. Cas. 28; 11 Asp. M.C. 403—Hamilton, J.

Total Loss of Cargo—Constructive Total Loss of Vessel—Civil Code of Lower Canada, art. 2522.]—The appellants shipped on a barge a cargo on which they effected an insurance with the respondents against loss "by total loss of the vessel." The vessel was wrecked and the cargo totally lost:—Held, that the respondents were liable on the policy—although the jury had not found in so many words that the barge was a total loss—as the insurance was on the cargo, and it was not a matter for decision whether or not the barge was a constructive total loss within the meaning of the Civil Code of Lower Canada, art. 2522, which defines the "absolute or constructive" loss of "the thing insured." Montreal Light, Heat, and Power Co. v. Sedgwick, 80 L. Constructive Total Loss—Freight Policy—Institute Time Clauses—Construction.]—The plaintiffs, the assured, were insured with the defendants under a time policy on freight per the steamship Ivy, valued at 950*l.*, "chartered or unchartered, on board or not on board, and (or) bunker out and freight only home." There were three separate printed sets of clauses attached, the principal one being the "Institute Time Clauses—Freight 1910," of which No. 5 was as follows: "In the event of total loss, whether absolute or constructive, of the steamer, the amount under-written by this policy shall be paid in full, whether the steamer be fully or only partly loaded, or in ballast, chartered or unchartered." During the course of the voyage the vessel became a constructive total loss, but was subsequently towed to a port where she discharged her cargo, and the plaintiff received payment of freight. In an action to recover the full amount of the policy,—Held, that the underwriters were entitled to credit for the amount of the freight received by the assured. Coker

IX. SUBROGATION.

See also Vol. XIII. 1313, 2281.

Valued Policy on Ship—Total Loss of Insured Vessel by Collision—Payment for Total Loss by Underwriters — Damages Paid by other Vessel on Higher Value of Ship than Insured Value—Right of Underwriters to be Subrogated to Insured in Respect of such Sum.—Underwriters insured the defendants' ship Helvetia for one year from May 20, 1912, for 45,000*l.* against ordinary sea perils. In the policy, which contained the usual running-down clause, the Helvetia was valued at 45,000*l.* At the date of the policy the Helvetia was under a charter for seven St. Lawrence seasons, which charter would not expire till November, 1917. During the currency of the policy the Helvetia collided with the Empress of Britain and was totally lost. In an Admiralty action both ships were held to blame, the Helvetia for seven-twelfths of the damage and the Empress of Britain for five-twelfths. The Registrar assessed the value of the Helvetia as at November 15, 1912, at 65,000*l.*, and the loss of the hire up to the same period at 2,000*l.* On appeal the President held that the value of the ship and the loss of the hire must be assessed as at November, 1917, and remitted the case to the Registrar. The parties then compromised and agreed on a lump sum of 67,000*l.* in respect of both items. The owners of the Empress of Britain accordingly paid to the defendants five-twelfths of 67,000*l.* The underwriters, having paid 45,000*l.* for a total loss of the Helvetia, claimed to be subrogated to such part of the payment received by the defendants from the owners of the Empress of Britain as represented five-twelfths of the value of the Helvetia, which they alleged to be worth 65,000*l.*—namely, to the sum of 26,900*l.*—and to recover the excess of that sum over 19,600*l.* which the underwriters were admittedly liable to pay to the defendants under the running-down clause. The defendants contended that the underwriters were only entitled to be subrogated in respect of five-twelfths of 45,000*l.*, the insured value of the Helvetia :—Held, that the underwriters were entitled to recover to the extent to which they had paid in respect of the subject-matter insured any sums which the defendants had received in respect of the loss of the same subject-matter, though that sum was based upon a larger value than the insured values. Held, further, that as the underwriters only insured the ship for one year they were not concerned with the value of the ship in 1917, and that as on the evidence the value of the ship at the time of the loss must be taken to be 65,000*l.*, in respect of which the defendants had received from the owners of the Empress of Britain 26,900*l.*, the underwriters were entitled to be subrogated to the defendants to the full amount of 26,900*l.* and to recover from the defendants the difference between that sum and the 19,600*l.* payable under the running-down clause. Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. British and Chilian Steamship Co., 84 L. X. INSURANCE BROKERS.

Lien on Policy for Unpaid Premiums—Lien On Proceeds of Policy—Estoppel.]—The plaintiffs chartered the Volturno to R. S. & Co. under a time charter which provided that the charterers were to insure the hull, &c., in the owners' name for 40,000*l.* all risks and 20,000*l.* total loss only. R. S. & Co. instructed the defendants, who were insurance brokers, to effect those policies and also policies on disbursements and freight of the Volturno. The defendants, at the request of R. S. & Co., wrote to the plaintiffs informing them of the insurances for 40,000*l.* and 20,000*l.*, and added, "We have received instructions from R. S. & Co. to hold the above policies to your order, which we hereby undertake to do, subject to our lien on same for unpaid premiums, if any" :—Held, that the defendants were estopped from setting up against the plaintiffs a general lien for premiums due from R. S. & Co. in respect of policies on the Volturno other than those for 40,000*l.* and 20,000*l.* Whether a lien on documents gives a lien on proceeds collected under them, quære. Fairfield Shipbuilding Co. v. Gardner, Mountain & Co., 104 L. Relation of Broker and Underwriter—Disclosure of Material Facts.] — Under ordinary circumstances a broker effecting a contract of insurance with an underwriter owes no duty to the latter in respect of erroneous but honest statements made by him. The material facts which have to be disclosed to an underwriter are as to the subject-matter of the insurance —the ship and the perils to which she is exposed. Knowing these facts, the underwriter must form his own judgment of the premium, and other people's judgment is quite immaterial. If the underwriter wants to know who the assured is he must ask the question; there is otherwise no duty to disclose the name. Glasgow Assurance Corporation v. Symondson, 104 L. T. 254; 16 Com. Admission of Women — Disability at Common Law—Inveterate Usage.]—Prior to the passing of the Solicitors Act, 1843, a woman was under a disability at common law which prevented her becoming a solicitor, and nothing in the Solicitors Act, 1843, operated to remove that disability. Consequently the Law Society is entitled to refuse to admit a woman to the examinations held by them under the Solicitors Act, 1877, s. 6. Bebb v. Law Society, 83 L. J. Refusal of Annual Certificate—Discretion—Malice.]—In order to entitle a solicitor to maintain an action against the Law Society for damages for refusing to grant him an annual certificate at the expiration of a period of suspension from practice ordered by the Court, it is not sufficient to shew that they have exercised their discretion wrongly, but it must also be shewn that they were actuated by malice in so refusing the certificate. Newson v. Law Society, 57 S. Country Certificate only — City Address on Writ—Action Postponed.]—In a case in which during the course of the trial it appeared that the plaintiff's solicitor held a country certificate only, although his address on the writ was given as "Lombard street, E.C.," the Judge, though holding that the solicitor was committing an offence, declined to dismiss the action, but ordered the case to stand over so that the plaintiff might be able to consult another solicitor. Richards v. Bostock, 31 T. D. COVENANT NOT TO PRACTISE WITHIN DEFINED AREA.

Agreement for Service—Restraint of Trade —Reasonable Restriction—"Carry on the profession of a solicitor."] — A covenant by a solicitor not to carry on the profession of a solicitor within a certain area does not prevent him from acting on behalf of persons resident within the area at his office outside that area, or from writing on behalf of clients professional letters to persons resident within the area, or from acting on behalf of a mortgagee resident outside the area in taking a mortgage of property situate within the area. Edmundson v. Render (74 L. J. Ch. 585; [1905] 2 Ch. 320) explained and distinguished. Woodbridge v. Bellamy, 80 L. J. Ch. 265; [1911] 1 Ch. 326; 103 L. T. 852; 55 S. J. 204 —C.A.

The defendant had entered the employment of the plaintiff, a solicitor, under an agreement which prohibited him from practising or acting as a solicitor, solicitor's clerk, or conveyancer within a certain area during, and for a certain time after leaving, the employment. The defendant, after the employment was determined, did one act which was the act of a solicitor within the area, and wrote several solicitor's letters to persons within the area :—Held, that the covenant must be construed to mean substantially acting as a solicitor, and that there had been no breach of the agreement, and that an injunction ought not to be granted. Freeman v. Fox, 55 S. J. 650—Warrington, J.

E. DUTY AND AUTHORITY OF.

I. Retainer.

See also Vol. XIII. 1409, 2294.

Repudiation by Client — Subsequent Adoption.]—A retainer to solicitors "to take such steps as you may be advised against W. T. and his co-trustees, in order to protect the assets of the N.O.A.P. Trust," is a retainer to bring an action that the trust may be dissolved and its affairs wound up by the Court. Stevens v. Taverner, 57 S. J. 114—Warrington, J.

Conflict of Evidence between Solicitor and Client.]—On all questions as to the retainer of a solicitor where there is a conflict as to the authority between the solicitor and the client, without further evidence, weight must be given to the affidavit against, rather than to the affidavit of, the solicitor. Rule laid down by Turner, V.C., in Crossley v. Crowther (9 Hare, 384) followed. Paine (a Solicitor), In re, 28 T. L. R. 201—Warrington, J.

II. Authority.

See also Vol. XIII. 1422, 2294.

Limit of Authority after Judgment — Authority to Compromise — Assent to Execution by Defendant of Deed of Assignment for Benefit of Creditors.] — A solicitor who has been retained by a plaintiff to take the necessary proceedings to recover compensation from a defendant has no authority after judgment has been obtained to assent to the execution by the defendant of a deed of assignment to a trustee for the benefit of his creditors. Where a solicitor so assented,—Held, that the plaintiff was not precluded from commencing bankruptcy proceedings against the defendant, alleging the deed of assignment as the act of bankruptcy. Debtor (No. 1 of 1914), In re; Debtor, ex parte, 83 L. J. K.B. 1176; [1914] 2 K.B. 758; 110 L. T. 944; 21 Manson, 155; 58 S. J. 416—D.

Implied Authority to Issue Execution after Judgment.]—After judgment in an action for a money demand the solicitor for the plaintiff has implied authority to issue execution on the judgment, without any further or express instructions from his client, who is bound by and liable for the proceedings, though tortious. Sandford v. Porter, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 551—C.A.

Pleadings — Issue in Action — Striking out Paragraphs of Defence—Lunacy—Receiver.] —Where an action is commenced by a person who is described in the writ as "a person of unsound mind not so found by inquisition" by a next friend, it is not competent for the defendant to the action to put in issue at the trial of the action the question whether the plaintiff is of unsound mind or not. Richmond v. Branson, 83 L. J. Ch. 749; [1914] 1 Ch. 968; 110 L. T. 763; 58 S. J. 455—Warrington, J.

The authority of the solicitor to start proceedings is not a question which can be raised as a relevant issue in the action at the trial. Ib.

Service on Solicitor — Continuance of Authority—Married Woman—Receiver—Income Restrained from Anticipation—Costs.]—At the trial of an action the plaintiff, who was a married woman, did not appear, and judgment was entered for the defendants with costs, which were to be payable out of her separate estate. The only property to which the plaintiff was entitled was the income under her marriage settlement, which she was restrained from anticipating. The defendants' solicitors thereafter wrote to the plaintiff's solicitors informing them that the Taxing Master's certificate had been obtained, and enquiring whether they had any instructions as to payment of the costs. The plaintiff's solicitors replied that they had no instructions in the matter, and that they did not know the plaintiff's whereabouts. Subsequently, and after the time for appealing from the judgment had expired, the defendants served notice on the plaintiff's solicitors that they intended to apply for payment of the defendants' costs out of the income due to the plaintiff under her marriage settlement, and for the appointment of a receiver of her income up to the amount of the costs :—Held, first, that the notice of motion was properly served on the plaintiff's solicitors, who were the solicitors on the record; and secondly, that the order asked for should be made. Bagley v. Maple. 27 T. L. R. 284—Scrutton, J.

III. Duty and Relations as to Clients.

See also Vol. XIII. 1433, 2297.

Confidential Relationship—Employment by Plaintiff—Subsequent Employment by Defendants—Members of Same Firm—Injunction.]—There is no general rule of law that a solicitor who has acted in a particular matter for one party shall not subsequently act in the same matter for that party's opponent. It depends in each case on whether real mischief or real prejudice is likely to result from this being allowed. And an injunction to restrain the solicitor from so acting will only be granted when a risk exists or may be reasonably anticipated that the solicitor will give the new client assistance against his old client by means of knowledge acquired by him when acting as solicitor for the old client. Cholmondeley (Earl) v. Clinton (Lord) (19 Ves. 261; G. Cooper, 80) explained. The decision of Hall, V.C., in Little v. Kingswood and Parkfield Collieries Co. (51 L. J. Ch. 498; 20 Ch. D. 733) not followed. Rakusen v. Ellis, Munday & Clarke, 81 L. J. Ch. 409; [1912] 1 Ch. 831; 106 L. T. 556; 28 T. L. R. 326—C.A.

Where, therefore, one of two partners had acted exclusively for the old client, and the other partner was acting exclusively for the new client, and the former partner undertook not to communicate to his partner confidential information obtained from the old client, the Court discharged an injunction granted by Warrington, J., restraining the firm of solicitors from acting for the new client. Ib.

Mixing Client's Money with Solicitor's in Banking Account.]—Observations as to the practice of a solicitor mixing up the money of a client with his own money. B. (a Solicitor), In re; Law Society, ex parte, 28 T. L. R. 59—D.

Costs—Statute-barred Debts—Acknowledgments—No Full Disclosure to Client—No Independent Advice.]—A client owed a solicitor certain sums of money for costs. He had incurred these debts between 1889 and 1912, when he died. The solicitor then obtained from his executrix, his widow, a payment on account and two documents acknowledging the indebtedness, but he did not inform her that the debts were, as to a large portion of them, statute-barred, nor did he insist on her seeking independent advice. In April, 1913, the executrix brought an action against the solicitor for an account, in which she contended that the debts incurred prior to April, 1907, were statute-barred, and that, in consequence, the defendant could not recover them. The official referee held that the payment on account and the documents above mentioned were acknowledgments of the debts sufficient to take them out of the operation of the Statute of Limitations, and entered judgment for the defendant :—Held, on appeal, that the payment on account and the documents having been obtained by the solicitor without a full explanation of the state of affairs and without any suggestion of independent advice in the matter, the relation of solicitor and client precluded them from being relied upon as acknowledgments so as to take the debts out of the operation of the statute. Huguenin v. Baseley (14 Ves. 273) and Liles v. Terry (65 L. J. Q.B. 34; [1895] 2 Q.B. 679) applied. Lloyd v. Coote & Ball, 84 L. J. K.B. 567; [1915] 1 K.B. 242; 112 L. T. 344—D.

Affidavit for Probate.]—The inclusion of a statute-barred debt in the affidavit for probate did not constitute, as between the parties, an acknowledgment of the debt sufficient to take it out of the Statute of Limitations. Beaven, In re; Davies, Banks & Co. v. Beaven (81 L. J. Ch. 113; [1912] 1 Ch. 196), followed. Ib.

Transactions between Law Agent and Wife of Client — Wife Acting without Separate Advice—Loss of Moneys Advanced by Wife—Claim against Law Agent for Damages.]—A law agent acted for a client who was a partner in a firm, and also made the firm advances personally. He was, besides being a solicitor, the agent for the branch bank where the firm's banking account was kept, and in that capacity made advances to the firm and overdrafts. He also acted as solicitor for his client's wife, who had property of her own. To assist her husband the wife made advances to the firm, and became surety in various transactions, in which money was advanced to her husband either by way of overdraft from the bank or from the law agent personally. During these transactions the wife had no separate advice. The firm became insolvent, and the wife, having lost all her money, brought an action against the law agent, alleging negligence on his part as her solicitor. The Lord Ordinary took the view that the case was the common one of a wife with separate means being induced by her husband to assist him to keep the business afloat. There was no evidence of any unfair dealing on the part of the defendant, and therefore he gave judgment for him. The First Division of the Court of Session (the Lord President, Lord Kinnear, and Lord Mackenzie; Lord Johnston dissenting) affirmed the Lord Ordinary. The House dismissed the plaintiff's appeal. Decision of First Division of the Court of Session ([1911] S. C. 1248) affirmed. Learoyd or Dick v. Alston's Trustees, [1913] A.C. 529; [1913] S. C. (H.L.) 57; 57 S. J. 684—H.L. (Sc.)

Advice by Solicitor on Choice of Investment —Liability for Loss on Investment.]—A young unmarried woman consulted a friend, who was a solicitor, with regard to the investment of her savings amounting to 200*l.*, and he suggested to her that she might invest that sum in heritable property, either by purchasing property or by lending on bond. She decided on the former method, and he then brought to her notice, and eventually purchased for her, a heritable property belonging to a client of his own, which was burdened with bonds for which she became personally liable. The nature of the transaction was explained to her before the purchase was concluded. The solicitor acted for both parties to the sale. The investment, which at first yielded excellent returns, eventually, owing to depreciation in the value of the property, resulted in a heavy loss, and the client brought an action for damages against the solicitor for improperly advising her to make an investment of so risky a character:—Held, that in the circumstances there had been no failure of professional duty on the part of the solicitor towards his client, and that the action therefore failed. Stewart v. M'Lean, Baird & Neilson, [1915] S. C. 13—Ct. of Sess.

Solicitor Ordering Photographs on Behalf of Client—Personal Responsibility.]—Where, in a cash transaction, a solicitor orders goods on behalf of a client, unless it is to be assumed that the solicitor has no authority to pledge his client's credit, the solicitor is not personally liable for the payment thereof unless he specifically agrees to be responsible, or unless there is a custom that he should be responsible. A firm of solicitors ordered of the plaintiff, on behalf of their client (without disclosing his name), some photographs to be taken for use at a trial in Court. The plaintiff delivered the photographs to the solicitors, and debited them with the price in his books:—Held, that the solicitors were not personally responsible for payment. Wakefield v. Duckworth, 84 L. II. To Account.

Receipt of Money for Client — Demand of Principal — Liability for Interest.] — Where money has been received by a solicitor to pay over to his client on a particular date, although the solicitor is not chargeable with interest from that date, yet when a demand for payment of the principal has been made the solicitor must pay interest as from the date of the demand. Barclay v. Harris, 85 L. III. When Acting without Authority.

Solicitor Believing He had Authority.] — Circumstances in which a solicitor having entered an appearance and taken other steps in a litigation on behalf of certain defendants for whom he had in fact no authority to act, although he bona fide believed that he had authority, was ordered to pay their costs of setting aside the appearance and all subsequent proceedings as between solicitor and client, and the plaintiff's costs of the application as between party and party. Porter v. Fraser, 29 T. L. R. 91—Neville, J.

Entering Appearance for Non-existing Company—Warranty of Authority—Personal Liability of Solicitor for Plaintiff's Costs of Action.]—The plaintiff issued a writ against Liberal Opinion, Lim., claiming damages for libel, and obtained a verdict for damages and costs. An appearance for the company had been entered by D., a solicitor, and proceedings conducted on their behalf by D. or his firm, who were under the erroneous belief that the company had been duly incorporated, and who received instructions from persons purporting to act as directors. In the course of the proceedings the plaintiff's solicitors wrote to D., calling his attention to the fact that they had searched Somerset House and could not find any such company as Liberal Opinion, Lim., to which D. replied by recommending them to continue their searches. At the commencement of the trial it was stated that the company was registered under the Industrial Provident Societies Act, 1893, but it was afterwards ascertained and became known to both D. and the plaintiff that the registration had not in fact been completed, so that there was no such corporation in existence. At the conclusion of the trial the plaintiff applied to the Judge for an order making D. or his firm, the company's solicitors, personally responsible for the plaintiff's costs of the action. Darling, J., refused the application, and the plaintiff appealed. The plaintiff had signed judgment for damages and costs against Liberal Opinion, Lim.:—Held (reversing Darling, J.), that D., having entered appearance for a non-existing corporation, was responsible for the plaintiff's costs of the action, and that the fact that the plaintiff had signed judgment in the only way in which it could be signed—that is, against the non-existing corporation—did not alter the position. Simmons v. Liberal Opinion, Lim.; Dunn, In re, 80 L. J. K.B. 617; [1911] 1 K.B. 966; 104 L. T. 264; 55 S. J. 315; 27 T. L. R. 278—C.A.

Solicitor Commencing Action on Behalf of Infant — Next Friend an Infant — Setting Aside Writ—Liability for Costs.]—A solicitor commenced an action on behalf of an infant by a next friend, who was himself an infant: —Held, that the action must be set aside, and that the defendants (other than those inducing the appointment) were entitled to damages to be paid by the plaintiff's solicitors, such damages being the costs they had incurred in defending the action, including the costs of the application, as between solicitor and client. Fernée v. Gorlitz, 84 L. J. Ch. 404; [1915] 1 Ch. 177; 112 L. T. 283—Eve, J.

Champertous Agreement with Client — Speculative Action — Personal Liability of Solicitor for Costs.]—A solicitor acting for a client in reference to a claim against a bank wrote to the client as follows: "Inasmuch as you have agreed to pay me 25 per cent. of whatever you may succeed in recovering . . . I agree that such percentage shall cover all my costs and expenses in any action . . . taken in respect of your claim, and in the event of your failing to recover anything I undertake to make no claim against you for my costs or charges." A writ was issued against the bank, but from a very early period in the action the solicitor knew that there was no substance in the claim. Eventually the client withdrew her claim and judgment was entered for the bank, with costs. The costs not being paid by the client, the bank sought to make the solicitor personally liable: —Held, that the agreement between the solicitor and the client was champertous and illegal; that the solicitor had been guilty of misconduct as a solicitor; and that he must pay the bank's costs in the action inasmuch as these would not have been incurred but for his conduct. Danzey v. Metropolitan Bank, 28 T. L. R. 327—Darling, J.

Attempt to Obtain Information from Books of a Company—Offer of Remuneration to Company's Servant.]—A solicitor who endeavours to obtain information as to unclaimed stocks and dividends of a company by an offer to remunerate a subordinate servant of that company, in return for the information desired is guilty of professional misconduct. C. (a Solicitor), In re; Law Society, ex parte, 56 S. J. 93—D.

Professional Misconduct—What Amounts to —Abetting the Publication of False Information Purporting to come from Convict under Sentence of Death.]—The jurisdiction of the Court to punish a solicitor for misconduct is not confined to cases in which he may have been acting in the course of his professional practice; it has power to punish him if he has been guilty of dishonourable conduct which makes him unfit to be a member of an honourable profession and an officer of the Court, or which would be sufficient to prevent his admission as a solicitor. The respondent, in the capacity of legal adviser to a convict under sentence of death, was permitted to visit the convict in prison. In abuse of the privilege thus extended to him he aided and abetted the editor of a newspaper to disseminate in his journal false information in the form of a letter purporting to emanate from and to be written by the convict although, as the respondent knew, no such letter in fact existed; and he further published or permitted to be published other false statements relating to the same matter knowing them to be false:—Held, that the respondent had been guilty of professional misconduct within the meaning of the Solicitors Act, 1888. Solicitor, In re; Law Society, ex parte, 55 S. J. 670; 27 T. L. R. 535—D.

—— Partnership with Unqualified Persons— "Touting" amongst Prisoners.]—A solicitor purported to act for, and subsequently to employ, unqualified persons. He allowed them to carry on a business in his name, in the course of which they solicited money from the friends of prisoners, and obtained permission to see prisoners awaiting trial, with offers of legal assistance. The solicitor exercised no supervision over them, but received various sums as his share of profits:—Held, that the solicitor was guilty of professional misconduct. D. (a Solicitor), In re; Law Society, ex parte, 56 S. J. 93—D.

—— Finding of Law Society — Standard of Professional Conduct.]—If it is shewn that a solicitor, in the pursuit of his profession, has done something with regard to it which would be reasonably regarded as disgraceful or dishonourable by his professional brethren of good repute and competency, the Law Society will be justified in finding that he has been guilty of misconduct within the meaning of section 13 of the Solicitors Act, 1888, and the standard of professional conducted adopted by the society will be that of the Court. G. (a Solicitor), In re; Law Society, ex parte, 81 L. J. K.B. 245; [1912] 1 K.B. 302; 105 L. T. 874; 56 S. J. 92; 28 T. L. R. 50—D.

—— Solicitor's Interest in Debt-collecting Business—Champertous Arrangement.]—The Law Society found that the respondent by his interest in and connection with a debt-collecting association had been guilty of professional misconduct:—Held, that this finding was right, but that as the respondent, on becoming aware that his connection with the association was unprofessional, at once severed his connection with it, it was sufficient to order him to pay the costs of the proceedings. Solicitor, In re, Law Society, ex parte, 29 T. L. R. 354—D.

—— Using Testimonials from Judges in Order to Obtain Business.]—A committee of the Incorporated Law Society reported that A., a solicitor practising in Dublin and Belfast, with a view of obtaining business from an insurance company, some of which business would in all probability take place in the Courts of the Recorders of Dublin and Belfast, wrote to the manager of the company, inclosing copies of testimonials from the Recorders of those cities testifying to A's professional ability. These testimonials had been obtained by A for the purpose of an application by him for an appointment. The testimonial from the Recorder of Dublin contained the statement, "He [A] now practises before me regularly." In the testimonial from the Recorder of Belfast it was stated that A had acted as his registrar for a number of years, and had resigned, to his regret, and that he continued to act as his solicitor:—Held, that the use by A of these testimonials for the purpose of obtaining business, which business might lead him to practise before the Recorders of Dublin and Belfast, amounted to professional misconduct. Solicitor, In re, [1915] 1 Ir. Undertaking to Refund Costs — Money Received by Client—Solicitor Ordered to Repay.]—An order dismissing an action with costs directed the money paid into Court by the plaintiff as security to be paid to the defendant's solicitors on account of their costs, they undertaking to refund if directed by the Court of Appeal. The schedule to the order directed payment to the defendant personally. The defendant changed his solicitors, and received the money out of Court by virtue of the schedule. The appeal was afterwards allowed with costs, but no costs of trial on either side:—Held, that the solicitors could be ordered upon motion to refund the money so received by their late client, in pursuance of their undertaking. Dotesio v. Biss (No. 2), 56 S. Undertaking not Given in Legal Proceedings nor to Client — Enforceability — Disciplinary Jurisdiction of Court.]—An undertaking given by a solicitor in his capacity as such is enforceable under the summary disciplinary jurisdiction of the Court, although such undertaking was not given in any legal proceedings nor to the solicitor's own client, and although no discreditable conduct on the part of the solicitor is suggested. Peart v. Bushell (2 Sim 38) not followed. United Mining and Finance Corporation v. Becher, 79 L. Officer of the Court—Person Acting as Solicitor—Estoppel.]—A person who, though not a solicitor, has gained possession of a sum of money that has been ordered to be paid into Court by intervening in the business of a solicitor, but without representing himself to be a solicitor, cannot be ordered to pay the money into Court under the summary jurisdiction that the Court exercises over its own officers. Hulm & Lewis, In re (61 L. Committal for Contempt of Court—Notice of Motion, how Intituled—Solicitor and Clerk.]—It is not necessary in the heading of a notice of motion to commit a solicitor and his clerk for contempt of Court in interfering with the administration of justice at the hearing of certain proceedings before a Taxing Master to head the motion in the matter of the clerk as well as in the matter of the taxation. The case of O'Shea v. O'Shea (59 L. J. P. 47; 15 P. D. 59) is not an authority for the contrary proposition. Semble, that the Court could give immediate leave to amend the notice if necessary by adding the name of the clerk to the title under Order XXVIII. rule 12. Law (or Harnett & Co.), In re, 58 S. Agreement to take Percentage of Sum Recovered—Non-contentious Proceeding—Champerty.]—An agreement between a client and solicitor whereby the latter is to be remunerated by a percentage of a sum to be recovered in a matter that is not a suit, action, or contentious proceeding, though not champertous, will be strictly regarded by the Court, which, in considering its propriety, will have regard to whether the client had independent advice, and fully understood the purport of the agreement. Hoggart's Settlement, In re, 56 S. J. 415—Joyce, J.

Bill of Exchange for Agreed Costs—Payment to be Delayed for Two Years—Bill Dishonoured—Right to Delivery of Bill of Costs — Examination of Agreement — Practice — "Fair and reasonable."]—Where a client has entered into an agreement with his solicitor as to the amount to be paid in respect of costs, without obtaining delivery of a bill of costs, and he subsequently establishes a prima facie case to shew that the agreement is unreasonable, the Court will order delivery of the bill of costs and an examination of the agreement under the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1870, s. 4, and the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, s. 8, even though the solicitor has obtained from his client the acceptance of a

Agreement in Writing — Summons to Set Aside.]—One C., who had embezzled a large sum of his employers' money, and who had been prosecuted, gave a retainer to a solicitor in the following terms: "I retain and request you to defend me in the criminal proceedings instituted against me by P. & Co., and I agree that you shall receive the net proceeds of sale of my furniture to cover the law charges and disbursements of my defence." The furniture, when sold, realised, after deducting expenses, the sum of 436*l.*, which sum the solicitor received. Subsequently civil proceedings were brought against C. by P. & Co. to recover the sum he had embezzled, and C. gave the following retainer to the solicitor: "I request and retain you to act for me as my solicitor in the above action at the inclusive fee of one hundred guineas, such fee to cover all disbursements until final judgment." The solicitor signed a statement at the foot accepting the retainer at the figure stated, which he acknowledged to have received. He had previously collected and retained in his possession a sum of 100*l.*, which another person owed to C. At the trial C. pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to a term of penal servitude. Before his conviction C. conveyed all his property to the liquidator of P. & Co. An administrator of C.'s property was subsequently appointed by the Home Secretary, and more than twelve months after C.'s conviction he took out a summons to set aside the two agreements, and for delivery by the solicitor of a bill of costs. The solicitor contended that the matter was closed by payment more than twelve months previously, and that it therefore could not now be re-opened:—Held, that the retainer with regard to the criminal proceedings was not an agreement within section 4 of the Attorneys and Solicitors Act, 1870, and that the solicitor must deliver a bill of costs relating to that transaction; that the retainer with regard to the civil proceedings was an agreement within section 4 of the Act of 1870, but that there must be an enquiry by the Master as to whether or not there had been payment under it. Jackson, In re, 84 L. J. K.B. 548; [1915] 1 K.B. 371; 112 L. T. 395; 59 S. J. 272; 31 T. L. R. 109—D.

Order for Payment of Costs — Enforcement by Action—Motion for Attachment for Non-delivery of Bill of Costs.]—Upon an application in the Chancery Division for an attachment against the defendant, a solicitor, for non-delivery of his bill of costs for taxation, the Court made a peremptory order for delivery of the bill of costs, and ordered the defendant to pay the taxed costs of the application. The costs having been taxed,—Held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that an action lay in the King's Bench Division on the order to recover the amount of the taxed costs. Seldon v. Wilde, 80 L. Bill Including both Party and Party Items already Taxed and also Solicitor and Client Items—Right of Client to Taxation of Solicitor and Client Items only—Fee on Taxation—Whether Chargeable in Respect of Items already Taxed.]—The bill of costs delivered by his solicitor to the successful party in an action should contain not only the solicitor and client items, but also the party and party items, even though these latter items have already been taxed and paid by the opposite party; and the Court ought not to limit the order for taxation of such a bill to the solicitor and client items only, merely on the ground that the party and party items have already been taxed as between party and party. Osborn & Osborn, In re, 83 L. J. K.B. 70; [1913] 3 K.B. 862; 109 L. T. 505—C.A.

Per Vaughan Williams, L.J.: On taxation of a bill of costs delivered by a solicitor to his client which contains both solicitor and client items and taxed party and party items, the present practice of charging a taxing fee in respect of the whole bill should be discontinued, and a fee ought only to be charged in respect of the solicitor and client items and such of the party and party items as require to be taxed a second time. Ib.

"Cash account" — Alleged Insufficient Identity — Liability on Solicitor to Furnish Particulars when Vouching Account.] — A solicitor acted for a client in the administration of her father's estate and business. He also acted as her personal solicitor and professionally in other family matters with which she was concerned. In a cash account which the solicitor delivered several items appeared as "cash" merely. The client claimed that a further and better "cash account" should be rendered, alleging that the items in question were insufficient to enable her to identify the payments so as to appropriate them to the different accounts, but the application was refused by the Judge in chambers:—Held, that as it was the practice of the taxing officers to accept cash accounts in this form, subject to their being properly vouched at a later date, and it was shewn that justice could thus be done between the parties, the refusal of the application was a matter of discretion, and the Court would not interfere with the order made by the Judge at chambers. Harman, In re, 59 S. J. 351—C.A.

Disbursements not Paid before Delivery of Bill.]—A solicitor delivered to his client his bill of costs, together with an accompanying letter. The bill included certain items of disbursements in respect of counsel's fees and printers' charges, which had not then been paid by the solicitor, and these items were not set out under a separate heading in the bill, but included among the other items in order of date. The letter stated that the unpaid items consisted of counsel's fees and printers' charges, of which it gave the respective totals : —Held, that, even assuming that the letter could be read as part of it, the bill did not "set out such unpaid items of disbursements under a separate heading in the bill" within the meaning of Order LXV. rule 27 (29*a*). Hildesheim, In re, 84 L. J. K.B. 1; [1914] 3 K.B. 841; 111 L. T. 749; 58 S. J. 687—C.A.

Winding-up of Company—Order for Taxation.]—Where the Court, in the winding-up of a company, has made an order against a firm of solicitors, without objection by them, for the delivery of a bill of costs against the company for a period antecedent to the winding-up, and the bill as delivered shews a balance due from the solicitors to the company, the Court can make an order for the taxation of the bill in the winding-up proceedings, and the solicitors have no right to insist that the bill should be taxed under the Solicitors Act, 1843, or not at all. Palace Restaurants, Lim., In re, 83 L. J. Ch. 427; [1914] 1 Ch. 492; 110 L. T. 534; 21 Manson, 109; 58 S. J. 268; 30 T. L. R. 248—C.A.

Non-contentious Business—Manchester District Registry.]—The proper officer to whom a solicitor's bill of costs for non-contentious business should in a proceeding in the Manchester District Registry be referred is not the District Registrar, but a Master of the Supreme Court. Stead v. Smith, 81 L. J. K.B. 68; [1911] A.C. 688; 105 L. T. 120; 55 S. J. 616—H.L. (E.)

Disbursements—Disbursements not Paid by Solicitor before Delivery of Bill—Payment after Commencement of Proceedings for Taxation but before any Item Dealt with—Payment whether "before the commencement of the taxation" — Accompanying Letter Read as Part of Bill—Items whether "set out . . . under a separate heading in the bill."]—A client having obtained an order for the taxation of his solicitor's bill, the Taxing Master appointed a certain date for the taxation to proceed. On that date the parties attended before the Taxing Master, who was asked on behalf of the client to disallow certain items of disbursements included in the bill on the ground that they had not been paid by the solicitor before the delivery of the bill. The Taxing Master on the application of the solicitor adjourned the appointment to the following day to give the solicitor an opportunity of paying these items before he proceeded to tax the bill. At the time of the adjournment the Taxing Master had not dealt with any item in the bill by way of taxation. The solicitor duly paid the items before the Taxing Master proceeded with the taxation on the following day :—Held, that the items of disbursements had been paid "before the commencement of the taxation" within the meaning of the proviso to Order LXV. rule 27 (29*a*). Hildesheim, In re, 84 L. J. K.B. 1; [1914] 3 K.B. 841; 111 L. T. 749; 58 S. J. 687—C.A.

In Order LXV. rule 27 (29*a*), which provides for the allowance on taxation in certain cases of items of disbursements which have not been actually paid by the solicitor before the delivery of the bill of costs, the words in the proviso to the sub-rule "so set out in the bill" refer back to the requirement in the body of the sub-rule that the bill of costs "shall set out such unpaid items of disbursements under a separate heading in the bill," and consequently in a case coming under the proviso, just as in a case coming under the body of the sub-rule, that requirement must be complied with. Ib.

Bankruptcy of Client — Undertaking by Solicitor not to Prove.]—When a client who has obtained an order to tax his solicitor's bill of costs becomes bankrupt, his assignees, if the solicitor undertakes not to prove in the bankruptcy for the costs, cannot continue the taxation without giving an undertaking to pay the taxed amount of the bill. Merrick, In re; Joyce, ex parte, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 279—C.A.

Application to Tax after Payment—Special Circumstances.]—The fact that a solicitor's bill of costs contains charges open to criticism amounts to "special circumstances" within the meaning of section 41 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, so as to entitle an interested party to an order for taxation after payment of the bill. N. (a Solicitor), In re, 56 S. J. 520—Joyce, J.

Reference after Twelve Months—Company—Voluntary Liquidation.]—A company went into voluntary liquidation. A bill of costs was delivered by their solicitors to the company less than twelve months before the liquidation. The liquidator took out a summons to tax more than twelve months after delivery of the bill :—Held, that since delivery twelve months had not expired within the meaning of section 37 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, the date of the winding-up, not the issue of the summons, being the material date. Foss, Bilbrough, Plaskitt & Foss, In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 558; [1912] 2 Ch. 161; 106 L. T. 835; 56 S. J. 574—Neville, J.

Taxation under General Jurisdiction of Court.]—An order for taxation of solicitor's costs in the voluntary liquidation of a company, as in a compulsory liquidation, should be made under the general jurisdiction of the Court independently of the Solicitors Act, 1843. No submission to pay is required, and as a general rule the solicitor may add the costs of the taxation to his claim. The practice laid down by Kekewich, J., in Liverpool Household Stores Association, In re ([1889] W. N. 48), followed. Ib.

Same Solicitor Acting for Both Vendor and Purchaser — Right to Full Scale Fee.] — Solicitors, acting for a vendor of lands sold by public auction, subsequently acted for the purchaser also. The sale having been completed, they served the purchaser with a bill of costs, in which they charged him with the scale fee provided by Schedule I. Part I. of the General Order, 1884, under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881. Objections to the bill of costs were lodged by the purchaser, on the ground that the solicitors "could not properly and necessarily, and having regard to their duty as solicitors for both vendor and purchaser, perform all the work prescribed by Schedule I. Part I. so as to entitle them to the scale remuneration." The Taxing Master disallowed the objections, finding that "the solicitors for the purchaser did all the work required under the schedule on his behalf." On a summons to review,—Held, that, in view of the Taxing Master's finding of fact, no sufficient grounds had been shewn for reviewing his decision. Best & Best, In re, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 58—Barton, J.

Sale under Lands Clauses Act — Costs of Purchaser's Solicitor.] — The scale in Schedule I. Part I. of the Irish General Order of 1884, made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, does not apply to the costs of the solicitor for the purchaser in sales under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act. Stewart, In re (41 Ch. D. 494), distinguished. Fitzgerald, In re (No. 2), [1915] 1 Ir. R. 185—Barton, J.

Mortgage to Bank—Amount not Named in Mortgage — "Completed mortgage."] — The scale fixed by Schedule I. Part I. under rule 2 (a) of the General Order made in pursuance of the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, applies to an equitable mortgage, even though such mortgage be not under seal and contain an agreement to execute a further and legal mortgage, so long as the work contemplated by the scale has been done by the solicitor. Baker, In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 805; [1912] 2 Ch. 405; 106 L. T. 1012—Parker, J.

Although a mortgage given to secure money which may or may not be advanced at the option of the lender, and which is uncertain in amount, is not within the scale because the transaction is not "completed," yet an agreement for a loan for a definite amount payable in præsenti upon certain securities is a "completed" transaction within the meaning of the word as used in the scale and Order, if in fact, within a reasonable time after the date of the actual signing of the memorandum of charge, the sums are actually advanced; and the mere fact that the memorandum of charge does not specify the definite amount which was agreed upon and is to be secured does not alter this. The Court is entitled to look at the substance of the transaction, and is not tied down by the form which the security takes. Ib.

Attempted Sale—Scale or Item Charges.] — Where property is put up for sale and is not sold, the vendor's solicitor is entitled to charge for the work done by items and not by scale. Stead, In re; Smith v. Stead, 82 L. J. Ch. 143; [1913] 1 Ch. 240; 108 L. T. 28; 57 S. J. 187—Neville, J.

Rule 2 of Part I. Schedule I. to the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, is applicable only where one or more attempted sales are followed by a completed sale of the property. Ib.

Local Authority — Legality of Charges — Province of Taxing Master — Province of Auditor.]—Disbursements made upon the instructions of an urban council by their solicitors, the reasonableness of the amount of the charges not being disputed, cannot be disallowed upon a taxation as between solicitor and client under the Solicitors Act, 1843. Porter, Amphlett & Jones, In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 544; [1912] 2 Ch. 98; 107 L. T. 40; 56 S. J. 521—Swinfen Eady, J.

The legality of the expenditure as between the council and their ratepayers is a question for the auditor under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, ss. 247, 249. Ib.

Mortgagee — Charges in Anticipation of Future Work—Explanatory Bill.]—The solicitor to a mortgagee whose security included costs, charges, and expenses of or incidental thereto, delivered to the mortgagor a bill containing an item of two guineas in anticipation of future work. This was subsequently increased to four guineas, and an explanatory bill was delivered to account for the four guineas so charged. On taxation the Taxing Master refused to allow the second two guineas charged in anticipation, and, treating the explanatory bill as a bill delivered to be taxed, disallowed it:—Held, that the four guineas was properly charged in anticipation, and that the bill was explanatory only, and not to be taxed. With regard to certain attendances in chambers the amounts certified by the Master were in some cases higher and in some lower than the amounts charged by the solicitors. The Taxing Master reduced the items higher than the amounts certified, but refused to allow the items which were lower to be increased:—Held, that the solicitors ought to be allowed the aggregate amount of the charges made, that aggregate being less than the aggregate allowed by the Master. Paice & Cross, In re, 58 S. J. 593—Joyce, J.

Costs of certain attendances at meetings of the mortgagor's creditors, and of advice as to the application of the proceeds of sale of part of the mortgage security, were disallowed by the Taxing Master:—Held, that in the circumstances such costs were properly incurred, and were payable by the mortgagor. Ib.

Solicitor Sole Executor—Insolvent Estate—Administration Action — Profit Costs.] — A solicitor who is sole executor and trustee of a will is not entitled, if the estate is found to be insolvent, to his costs of defending an administration action in person, nor to any other costs, except his out-of-pocket expenses, even though the will contained a clause empowering him to make professional charges, and the order in the action on further consideration directed the costs of the defendant to be taxed as between solicitor and client, and retained by him out of the balance due from him. Shuttleworth, In re; Lilley v. Moore, 55 S. J. 366—Joyce, J.

Shorthand Writer Jointly Employed — Notes.]—A claim against three insurance companies in respect of a loss by fire having been referred to arbitration, the conduct of the defence was entrusted to one of the companies, called the leading company, and the two other companies concurred with the leading company in appointing R. & Co., who were the solicitors of the leading company, to be the solicitors for all the defendants in the arbitration. It was agreed between counsel and solicitors on both sides, with the acquiescence of the arbitrator, that the parties should jointly employ a shorthand writer to take a note of the proceedings for the use of both and to furnish a transcript to the arbitrator day by day, and that they should share the expense. R. & Co. were never authorised by either of the companies other than the leading company to take or order a shorthand note of the proceedings; neither did R. & Co. ever explain to their clients that the costs of a shorthand note were costs which they might not be entitled to recover from the other side if they were successful. The hearing of the arbitration lasted for twenty-one days, and ultimately the arbitrator made an award in favour of the claimants with costs. The arbitrator never gave any direction, neither did the parties ever in terms agree, that the costs of the shorthand notes should be costs in the cause. On the taxation of R. & Co.'s bill of costs as between solicitor and client at the instance of one of the companies other than the leading company, the Taxing Master disallowed the shorthand writer's charges:—Held (by Buckley, L.J., and Kennedy, L.J.; Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that the disallowance was right. Roney & Co., In re, 83 L. J. K.B. 451; [1914] 2 K.B. 529; 110 L. T. 411—C.A.

Taxing Master's Special Certificate—Statutory Discretion of the Court.]—The discretion given to the Court under section 37 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, respecting the payment of the costs of a taxation when the Taxing Master has certified specially any circumstances relating to the bill or the taxation may be exercised in favour of the solicitor or of the client. There is nothing in the section which makes that discretion exercisable only in favour of the client. Richards, In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 165; [1912] 1 Ch. 49; 105 L. T. 750; 56 S. J. 74—Parker, J.

Palpable Error in Solicitor's Rule — One-sixth Rule—Taxing off more than One-sixth.] —A solicitor in his delivered bill of costs by a slip failed to credit a certain sum in respect of returned counsel's fees to his clients. In a cash account delivered with the bill the sum was duly credited to the clients, and on comparing the bill with the cash account the mistake at once became apparent. The result of the mistake was that upon taxation more than one-sixth part of the bill was taxed off. The Taxing Master certified specially the circumstances, and stated that if he had been at liberty to strike out the sum in question the amount taxed off would have been less than one-sixth, and the costs of the taxation would have been payable by the clients and not by the solicitor. The solicitor on the special circumstances certified applied to the Court to vary the certificate:—Held, that the costs of the taxation should be borne by the clients, but that as he was asking for relief in respect of a blunder that had occasioned the extra costs of the application to the Court, the solicitor would have to bear the costs of that application as between solicitor and client. Ib.

Taxation as between Solicitor and Client—"Party."]—In taxation as between solicitor and client, a solicitor or a firm of solicitors may be entitled to be regarded as a "party" within Order LXV. rule 27, regulations 39 and 41, and may be entitled to a review of taxation in his or their own interests—as, for instance, where he or they have a lien for costs on a fund. Clarke's Settlement, In re, 55 S. J. 293—Joyce, J.

Drawing Case for Opinion of Counsel not in Conveyancing Matter and Previous to Litigation—Schedule of Documents Handed Over to New Solicitor upon Withdrawal of Retainer to Old Solicitor—Perusal of Particulars.]—A client took out a summons to review taxation of a solicitor's bill of costs. The following were among the items in dispute: first, drawing case for the opinion of counsel at 2*s.* per folio (the matter was not in conveyancing business, and was previous to an action); secondly, making a schedule of the documents which were handed over to a new solicitor upon the occasion of withdrawal of retainer to the old solicitor; thirdly, perusal of particulars at a charge of 6*s.* 8*d.* The particulars were particulars of defence, and if they had been treated as part of the defence, a charge for perusal of 4*d.* per folio would have come to much less than 6*s.* 8*d.*:—Held, first, that drawing a case for the opinion of counsel not being in a conveyancing matter, and not being in an action, was "other business" within the meaning of section 2 of the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881. Stanford v. Roberts (53 L. J. Ch. 338; 26 Ch. D. 155) explained and followed. Morgan & Co., In re, 84 L. J. Ch. 249; [1915] 1 Ch. 182; 112 L. T. 239; 59 S. J. 289—Neville, J.

Held, secondly, that the charge for the schedule of documents was rightly allowed, as it was for the benefit of the new solicitor and not of the old solicitor. Catlin, In re (18 Beav. 508), distinguished. Ib.

Held, thirdly, that particulars were a separate "pleading" within the meaning of Appendix N to Rules of the Supreme Court, and a charge of 6*s.* 8*d.* for perusal was rightly allowed. Ib.

Property Recovered or Preserved.]—Where in a creditor's action an order was made directing a sum of 64*l.* due from executors to the estate to be set off against their costs and the balance of their costs to be paid out of the estate, the Court refused to make afterwards a charging order in favour of the executors' solicitor for the 64*l.* costs, the subject of the set-off, since the set-off under the circumstances amounted to payment in the presence of the solicitors. Cockrell's Estate, In re; Pinkey v. Cockrell, 81 L. Set-off to Prejudice of Lien.]—The defendant having obtained in this action judgment with costs against the plaintiff, and the plaintiff having subsequently recovered judgment with costs in an action for rent against the defendant, on which execution was issued and a return of nulla bona made, the defendant's solicitor, who had obtained for the defendant the said judgment with costs, applied for a charging order on such costs under section 3 of the Legal Practitioners (Ireland) Act, 1876 [corresponding to section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860]:—Held, first, that such costs were "property recovered" within the statute, in respect of which an order of charge could be made; and secondly, that a set-off in respect of the costs of the plaintiff's judgment to the prejudice of the solicitor's lien should not be allowed. Johnston v. McKenzie, [1911] 2 Ir. Client a Debtor to Estate—Set-off of Costs—Property Recovered or Preserved.]—Where in a creditor's action an order was made directing a sum of 64*l.* due from executors to the estate to be set off against their costs and the balance of their costs to be paid out of the estate, the Court refused to make afterwards a charging order in favour of the executors' solicitor for the 64*l.* costs, the subject of the set-off, since the set-off under the circumstances amounted to payment in the presence of the solicitors. Cockrell's Estate, In re; Pinkey v. Cockrell, 81 L. Lien on Trust Deed—Trust Deed to Secure Debentures—Investigating Title and Preparing Trust Deed—New Trustees and Debentureholders—Construction of Trust Deed—Costs and Expenses Incurred in or about the Execution of the Trusts or otherwise in Relation to the Trust Deed.]—Solicitors investigated title and prepared a trust deed to secure certain debentures on the instructions of the intended original trustees of the deed, the company that issued the debentures being represented by separate solicitors. Clause 11 of the trust deed provided that the trust moneys should be applied in the first place in payment of the costs and expenses incurred in or about the execution of the trusts or otherwise in relation to the trust deed. The prospectus of the company contained a statement to the effect that "the vendor would pay all expenses of every kind up to and including the completion of the purchase." Other trustees were subsequently substituted in place of those who had given instructions for the preparation of the deed:—Held, first, that the solicitors who had prepared the deed were entitled to a lien on the deed for their unpaid costs of investigating the title and of preparing the deed as against both the existing trustees and the beneficiaries under the deed, and this notwithstanding the statement in the prospectus and the subsequent change of trustees; and secondly, that in any case the costs in question were payable as a first charge under the express provision in clause 11 of the trust deed. Dee Estates, Lim., In re; Wright v. Dee Estates, Lim., 80 L. J. Ch. 461; [1911] 2 Ch. 85; 104 L. T. 903; 18 Manson, 247; 55 S. J. 424—C.A.

Action on Bill—Delivery One Month before Action—Posting of Bill—"Sent by the post."]—By section 37 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, "no attorney or solicitor . . . shall commence or maintain any action or suit for the recovery of any fees, charges, or disbursements for any business done by such attorney or solicitor, until the expiration of one month after such attorney or solicitor . . . shall have delivered unto the party to be charged therewith, or sent by the post to or left for him at his counting house, office or business, dwelling-house, or last known place of abode, a bill of such fees, charges, and disbursements" signed by such attorney or solicitor or inclosed in or accompanied by a letter signed in like manner referring to such bill:—Held (Buckley, L.J., dissenting), that, on the true construction of the section, if a solicitor sends his bill by post the posting must take place at such time that in the ordinary course of post the bill should have reached its destination one clear calendar month before the date on which the action is commenced. Browne v. Black, 81 L. Sum Deposited by Client with Solicitor—Direction to Pay out of that Sum Costs to be Incurred in Certain Proceedings—Solicitor Uncertificated at Time of Proceedings—Right of Solicitor to Retain Sum Deposited in Respect of Costs of these Proceedings.] — A client having deposited with his solicitor a sum of 125*l.* for a purpose which turned out to be unnecessary, subsequently instructed the solicitor to take certain legal proceedings, and gave him a direction to pay out of that sum his own costs and his disbursements for counsel's fees in connection with these proceedings. The solicitor took the proceedings and incurred such costs and disbursements in connection therewith. The proceedings were taken during a time when the solicitor was not qualified to practise by reason of his being uncertificated. Subsequently in an action brought against him by the solicitor in respect of another matter, the client sought to set off 125*l.* to the extent of these costs and disbursements, on the grounds that the direction given by him to the solicitor was limited to costs and disbursements which could be recovered by the solicitor as such, and that the costs and disbursements in question having been incurred while the solicitor was disqualified, were not recoverable by the solicitor by virtue of section 12 of the Solicitors Act, 1874, and would have to be disallowed on taxation:—Held, by the Court of Appeal (reversing the decision of Channell, J.), that the client was entitled to the set-off which he claimed. Browne v. Barber, 82 L. J. K.B. 1006; [1913] 2 K.B. 553; 108 L. T. 744—C.A.

County Court Proceedings—Bill of Costs not Taxed—Right to Sue Client.]—By section 118 of the County Courts Act, 1888, a solicitor is not entitled to recover from his client any costs and charges "unless they shall have been allowed on taxation":—Held, that the section has not the effect of making taxation a condition precedent to the right of a solicitor to sue his client upon a bill of costs, although the period within which the client may claim taxation may not have elapsed. Cubison v. Mayo (65 L. J. Q.B. 267; [1896] 1 Q.B. 246) explained. Bell v. Girdlestone, 82 L. J. K.B. 696; [1913] 2 K.B. 225; 108 L. T. 648—D.

Payment—What is.]—Moneys advanced by a company that afterwards went into voluntary liquidation to their solicitors were retained by the latter in satisfaction of a bill of costs:—Held, that the retention did not amount to payment within section 41 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, there being no settlement of account. Foss, Bilbrough, Plaskitt & Foss, In re, 81 L. Summary Jurisdiction.] — The summary jurisdiction of the Court over solicitors as officers of the Court does not extend to unqualified persons who in the particular matter do not act in such a way as to get money by holding themselves out as being solicitors. Hurst & Middleton, In re, 82 L. J. Ch. 114; [1912] 2 Ch. 520; 107 L. T. 502; 56 S. J. 652; 28 T. L. R. 500—C.A.

Contempt of Court.]—Where an unqualified person acted in obtaining a decree nisi for divorce made absolute, and asked for and obtained from the petitioner a larger sum than was really payable as the necessary fee, the Court, holding that he had been guilty of contempt of Court, made an order that he should be committed to prison for six weeks and pay the costs of the proceedings against him for attachment. Davies v. Davies; Watts, In re, 57 S. J. 534; 29 T. L. R. 513—Bargrave Deane, J.

Solicitor Permitting his Name to be Used for Profit of Unqualified Person.]—An agreement between a solicitor and his managing clerk, who was not a solicitor, that the clerk should be paid a weekly salary of 3*l.* 10*s.* and a bonus of 25 per cent. on the profits received by the solicitor in respect of business introduced by the clerk, contained the following clause: "In the event of the termination of your engagement . . . the said bonus of 25 per cent. is to be continued to be paid to you notwithstanding such termination, less three pounds ten shillings per week":—Held that, inasmuch as it must be inferred from the above clause that the business was in fact the business of the clerk, the agreement was one under which the solicitor was to permit his name to be used for the profit of an unqualified person, and was therefore illegal under section 32 of the Solicitors Act, 1843. Harper v. Eyjolfsson, 83 L. J. K.B. 774; [1914] 2 K.B. 411; 110 L. T. 540; 30 T. L. R. 246—D.

SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

Agreement for Sale of a Lease—Conditions—No Final Agreement.]—By certain letters the plaintiff offered to purchase certain leasehold premises, the offer being subject to the conditions that the plaintiff's solicitors should approve the title to and covenants contained in the lease, the title from the freeholder, and the form of contract, and that the plaintiff should approve her surveyors' report, and this offer was accepted by the defendant, the vendor. On the receipt of the report, the conditions not having been performed, the plaintiff endeavoured to obtain a contribution from the defendant towards some improvements, whereupon the defendant withdrew. The plaintiff sought specific performance:—Held, that there was no final agreement of which specific performance could be enforced against the defendant. Winn v. Bull (47 L. J. Ch. 139; 7 Ch. D. 29) followed. Von Hatzfeldt-Wildenburg (Princess) v. Alexander, 81 L. J. Ch. 184; [1912] 1 Ch. 284; 105 L. T. 434—Parker, J.

Sale of Land—Conflict of Interest and of Duty.]—In an action for specific performance brought by the appellant—the vendor—against the respondents it was contended that the appellant, who was one of the commissioners, had an indirect interest in the sale through his father, a neighbouring landowner, and that such interest conflicted with his duty. It was also contended that he had abandoned the bargain by writing that if the transaction was not carried through by a stated time he should hold himself free to dispose of the land as he pleased. Both objections overruled and specific performance decreed. Laughton v. Port Erin Commissioners, 80 L. J. P.C. 73; [1910] A.C. 565; 103 L. T. 148—P.C.

—— Contract for Sale of Lease—Whether Time of the Essence.]—By section 55 of the Indian Contract Act, 1872, "When a party to a contract promises to do a certain thing at or before a specified time, or certain things at or before specified times, and fails to do any such thing at or before the specified time, the contract, or so much of it as has not been performed, becomes voidable at the option of the promisee, if the intention of the parties was that time should be of the essence of the contract." The defendant, who was the assignee of a reclamation lease of certain land near Bombay, agreed in writing to sell his leasehold interest to the plaintiff, it being provided that the title was to be made marketable and that the conveyance was to be prepared and received within two months from the date of the contract. The plaintiff's solicitors made certain requisitions on title, one of which was for a certificate that all the covenants in the lease had been fulfilled. This requisition was made more than two months after the date of the contract. The defendant's solicitors did not comply with the requisition, but asserted his right to put an end to the contract on the ground that time was of its essence. The requisition was a proper one, apart from the question as to the date at which it was made. In an action for specific performance,—Held, that the above section did not lay down any principle differing from the law of England in regard to contracts for the sale of real estate, and that there was nothing in the contract or in its subject-matter to displace the presumption that for the purposes of specific performance time was not of the essence of the bargain, and that therefore the plaintiff was entitled to a decree. Jamshed Khodaram Irani v. Burjorji Dhunjibhai, 32 T. L. R. 156—P.C.

Contract to Leave a Legacy by Will—Consideration for Marriage.]—The father of an intended bride, when asked by the husband to make a settlement, wrote: "I have made a will leaving V. (the bride) a legacy of 5,000*l.*, and I do not intend to alter it. I shall leave the allowance of 150*l.* as it is." The will was afterwards revoked:—Held, that the letter followed by the marriage constituted an enforceable contract as to the 5,000*l.*, but not as to the 150*l.*, and that B. was entitled to prove against the estate of the father for the 5,000*l.* by way of damages. Broadwood, In re; Edwards v. Broadwood, 56 S. J. 703—C.A.

Contract—Option—Withdrawal by Conduct—Communication by Third Parties—Relation Back of Acceptance—Prior Equity.]—The defendant made the plaintiff an offer, to remain open for seven days, of the lease of the defendant's premises. The defendant the next day agreed to let the premises to R. The plaintiff purported to exercise the option within the seven days, and claimed specific performance of the alleged contract as from the date of the defendant's offer:—Held, that, there being sufficient evidence of notice received by the plaintiff of acts inconsistent with the granting of the lease by the defendant to the plaintiff, the offer of the defendant had been withdrawn and was not a continuing offer to the date of acceptance by the defendant, but that, if it had been, R. having no notice before he entered into the agreement to take the lease of the plaintiff's rights, R. would have a prior equity, and the plaintiff would not have been entitled to specific performance. Cartwright v. Hoogstoel, 105 L. T. 628—Eve, J.

Uncertainty—Part Performance—Action for Damages.]—Per Buckley, L.J.: A contract which is void for uncertainty is not rendered certain by part performance, but where a contract is complete in itself, in that a defined act is to be done upon reasonable terms, evidence is admissible as to what terms are reasonable, and the conduct of the parties may be the best evidence upon this point. Passage in Fry on Specific Performance (3rd ed.), p. 174, considered. Waring & Gillow v. Thompson, 29 T. L. R. 154—C.A.

Decree with Compensation — Deficiency in Subject-matter — Misrepresentation.] — In exercising jurisdiction over specific performance, a Court of equity will look at the substance and not merely the letter of the contract. Therefore if a vendor sues, and is in a position to convey substantially what the purchaser has contracted for, the Court will decree specific performance, with compensation for any small and immaterial deficiency; and if a purchaser is suing he may elect to take all that he can get, and to have a proportionate abatement from the purchase money in respect of a deficiency in the subject-matter described in the contract. But this right does not apply to a representation about the subject-matter made, not in the contract, but collaterally to it. Decision of the Court of Appeal of New Zealand (33 N.Z. L. R. 774) affirmed Rutherford v. Acton-Adams, 84 L. J. P.C. 238; [1915] A.C. 866—P.C.

Action on Contract — Costs.] — Where a decree for specific performance, with enquiry as to title, is granted in an action in which questions of contract only, and not of title, are raised, the purchaser will be ordered to pay the costs of the action and enquiry upon title being shewn. Banfield v. Picard, 55 S. J. 649—Joyce, J.

Motion for Judgment by Vendor — Conveyance — Stamping — Increment Value Duty — Minutes.] — The minutes of judgment in a vendor's action for specific performance should contain a reference to the fact that the conveyance has been duly stamped with the increment value duty stamp in accordance with section 4, sub-section 3 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910. The form at page 2171 of the 7th edition of Seton on Judgments and Orders should be amplified by adding after the words "duly executed by him" the words "and duly stamped so as to comply with section 4, sub-section 3 of the Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910." Dawnay v. Chessum, 60 S. Two Statutes to be Read Together as One —Construction.]—Two water mains had been laid under a private Act which did not contain a clause providing that nothing in the Act should exempt the defendants from liability for nuisance. The other two were laid under a later Act which did contain this clause, and further provided that the two Acts should be construed together as one Act:—Held, that, as the Acts were to be read together, the privilege which existed under the earlier Act was taken away, and that consequently the defendants had not statutory authority protecting them in the case of any of the above mains, and were consequently liable to the plaintiffs as for a nuisance. Charing Cross, West End, and City Electricity Supply Co. v. London Hydraulic Power Co., 83 L. Agreement by Tenant for Life to Grant a Perpetual Easement in Consideration of a Perpetual Rentcharge — Confirmation of Agreement by Private Act—Power of Tenant for Life to Vary the Agreement and to Grant a Perpetual Easement.]—Under a settlement dated July 7, 1888, P. P. C. was in 1900 tenant for life in possession of a settled estate in the Isle of Thanet and was then a bachelor, and G. P. C. was then tenant for life in remainder. By an agreement dated April 20, 1900, and made between P. P. C. and G. P. C. of the one part and the W. and B. Water Co. of the other part the company was authorised to make an adit or tunnel under the settled estate, to be completed by December 31, 1914, or such later date as the grantors should appoint, and it was agreed that upon completion the grantors should by deed grant to the company the right in perpetuity to maintain and use the adit and that the company should pay to the grantors in perpetuity a rent of 1*s.* a yard per annum and should supply a certain quantity of water free to farms on the estate. The grantors were defined as P. P. C. and G. P. C. and their successors in title under the settlement. By the W. and B. Water Act, 1900, the company was (inter alia) authorised to make the said adit, and by section 42 the said agreement was confirmed and made binding on the parties thereto and was set out in a schedule to the Act, but the settlement was not otherwise referred to nor any special powers conferred upon the grantors. The adit was not completed by the agreed date, which had been extended to June 30, 1915. It was now proposed that the completion should be postponed till December 31, 1930, and that the company should in consideration of the extension of time pay an increased rental and supply an increased amount of free water to the estate. P. P. C. was now married and had three daughters:—Held, that, though when an agreement confirmed by a private Act confers powers on a grantor outside any statutory powers special reference to such powers ought to be made in the Act, the confirmation of the agreement sufficiently expressed the intention of Parliament to confer such powers, and that P. P. C. and G. P. C. jointly could further extend the time for completion of the works and grant a perpetual easement in consideration of a perpetual rentcharge which could be increased beyond the amount specified in the agreement. Westgate and Birchington Water Co. v. Powell-Cotton, 113 L. Construction of Local and Personal Act—Statutory Contract between Railway and Navigation Companies — Clauses in Part for the Protection of the Public.]—By a Light Railway Order of the Light Railway Commissioners, confirmed by the Board of Trade under the Light Railways Act, 1896, a company incorporated by that Order was authorised to construct a light railway which was to be carried over a canal, then vested in a navigation company, by an opening or swing bridge. Section 29 of the Order commenced "For the protection of the Navigation Company the following provisions shall have effect"; then followed a number of sub-sections which provided, among other things, (3) that the Light Railway Co. should carry the railway over the canal by an opening or swing bridge at a defined height with opening space of a defined width; (4) make provision for opening the bridge for the passage of barges, boats, or other vessels at all times by night and day; (5) maintain the waterway at a certain depth; (8) exhibit proper lights every night, and provide and work proper signals to inform and warn persons using the canal during foggy weather when the bridge was closed; and (16) "The company and Navigation Company may agree for any variation or alteration of the works in this section provided for or of the manner in which the same shall be executed." The undertaking of the Light Railway Co. was afterwards vested in the North-Eastern and Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Companies as part of their joint undertaking. The joint companies had agreed with the Navigation Co. that the swing bridge should be altered into a fixed bridge. The Attorney-General brought this action, at the relation of the owner of a number of keels and boats using the canal, to restrain the companies from making the alterations:—Held, that as some of the provisions of section 29 were clearly for the benefit of the public, the fact that it was stated to be inserted for the protection of the Navigation Co. did not make it a mere contract between the companies which they could vary at pleasure, and the Attorney-General was entitled to bring the action for the protection of the public. Held, also, that the proposed alteration was not an alteration of works within the meaning of sub-section 16, and the injunction must be granted. Att.-Gen. v. North-Eastern Railway, 84 L. J. Ch. 657; [1915] 1 Ch. 905; 113 L. T. 25; 79 J. P. 500; 13 L. G. R. 1130—C.A.

Action Abolished — Jurisdiction in such Actions Restored—New Action after Restoration of Jurisdiction — Res Judicata.] — The principle stated by Tindal, C.J., in Key (or Kay) v. Goodwin (8 L. J. (o.s.) C.P. 212; 6 Bing. 576), that the effect of repealing a statute is to obliterate it as completely as if it had never been passed, must be taken with the qualification that it does not deprive persons of vested rights acquired by them in actions duly determined under the repealed law. Lemm v. Mitchell, 81 L. J. P.C. 173; [1912] A.C. 400; 106 L. T. 359; 28 T. L. R. 282—P.C.

In 1907 the respondent brought an action in Hong-Kong against the appellant for criminal conversation. That action was dismissed upon the ground that by the effect of certain Ordinances such actions had been abolished in Hong-Kong. In 1908 a new Ordinance was promulgated restoring the jurisdiction of the Hong-Kong Courts in such actions, and that Ordinance had a retroactive effect to the extent of enabling actions to be brought in respect of criminal conversation during the period when the right of action had ceased to exist in the colony. After the promulgation of the Ordinance the respondent commenced a fresh action against the appellant in respect of precisely the same acts of misconduct as he had alleged in his former action. The appellant pleaded res judicata, but the Hong-Kong Court overruled the plea upon the ground that there had been no judgment on the merits of the case: —Held, reversing the decision of the Hong-Kong Court, that the judgment in the first action was a final determination of the rights of the parties, and that there was nothing in the Ordinance of 1908 to shew any intention on the part of the Legislature not merely to alter the law, but to alter it so as to deprive the appellant of the subsisting judgment in his favour. Ib.

Statutory Powers — Harbour and Ferry Trustees—Ultra Vires—Interdict—Ratepayers of Harbour—Title to Sue.]—By the Dundee Harbour and Tay Ferries Consolidation Act, 1911, the appellants were constituted a body of trustees, to be elected in part by the shipowners and harbour ratepayers of Dundee, and the Act vested in them the harbour of Dundee, and the exclusive right of working and using ferries within limits defined by the Act. They made a practice of letting out steam vessels which were not actually required for the purposes of the ferries, but were kept in reserve in case of an accident, for excursions on the river Tay beyond the limits of the harbour and ferries, as defined by the statute. The profits of such excursion traffic were brought into their general account:—Held, that the appellants could be restrained by interdict from so doing, such excursion traffic not being within their statutory powers, or reasonably incidental to the purposes thereof, and that the respondents, who were shipowners and harbour ratepayers in Dundee, had a good title to maintain proceedings in respect of such ultra vires actings. Dundee Harbour Trustees v. Nicol, 84 L. —— Water Company—Agreement for Construction of Mains—Distribution of Water in Statutory Area—Delegation of Powers—Ultra Vires.] — The plaintiffs, a water company incorporated by statute, agreed with the defendants that the latter should, within the statutory area, construct mains and works, collect water rates, and distribute water, which was to be supplied in bulk at a fixed charge by the plaintiff company:—Held, that this agreement was not a delegation of statutory powers; it was therefore valid, and intra vires the company. Ticehurst and District Water and Gas Co. v. Gas and Waterworks Supply and Construction Co., 55 S. Stockbroker and Client—General Lien.]—Stockbrokers who have received transfers of stock or shares for delivery to a customer have by the law of Scotland a general lien on these transfers for the balance due to them by the customer. Hope v. Glendinning, 80 L. J. P.C. 193; [1911] A.C. 419—H.L. (Sc.)

The appellants, stockbrokers in Edinburgh, claimed to retain in their hands an uncompleted transfer of shares purchased and paid for by the respondent until a claim by the appellants arising out of a subsequent transaction between them and the respondent was satisfied:—Held, that the appellants as stockbrokers had a general lien on the transfer in question until the claim against the respondent was satisfied. Ib.

Contract for Half Commission — Monthly Minimum — Closing of Exchange — Effect on Contract.] — By an agreement between the plaintiff and the defendants the latter agreed to pay to the plaintiff half commission on all business introduced by him, subject to a certain minimum. During the currency of the agreement the Stock Exchange was closed for some months owing to the war. In an action on the agreement the plaintiff contended that the agreement in effect entitled him to a salary, whether the Stock Exchange was closed or not:—Held, that it was an implied term of the agreement that to entitle the plaintiff to remuneration the Stock Exchange should remain open, and the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Berthoud v. Schweder & Co., 31 T. L. R. 404—Ridley, J.

Custom — Broker's Commission over and above Contango—Right of "Half-commission man."] — There is no custom of the Stock Exchange whereby a "half-commission man" can claim a half-share of the small extra charge for expenses made by the broker over and above the ordinary continuation charge or contango which is receivable by the "jobber." Von Taysen v. Baer, Ellissen & Co., 56 S. Powers of Committee—Purchase of Shares — Postponement of Date for Completion — "Security"—Right to Realise—Emergency Powers.] — By rule 20 of the Rules of the Stock Exchange, the committee may, subject to certain conditions, "dispense with the strict enforcement of any of the Rules or Regulations":—Held, that the rule does not empower the committee to pass a resolution postponing the date for the completion of a contract for the purchase of shares. Barnard v. Foster, 84 L. J. K.B. 1244; [1915] 2 K.B. 288—Sankey, J. Affirmed, 32 T. L. R. 88—C.A.

On July 30, 1914, the defendant instructed the plaintiff, a broker on the Stock Exchange, to buy certain shares. The plaintiff accordingly bought the shares from a firm of jobbers. The committee of the Stock Exchange had fixed the August account days for August 13 and August 27, and on July 31 they passed a resolution that bargains open for the ordinary mid-August account should be settled at the date fixed for the end-August account—namely, August 27. On August 6 a moratorium proclamation came into force, and the committee subsequently, by resolution, further postponed the mid-August account day to November 18. The defendant, having refused to take up the shares on that date, the plaintiff sold them, and brought an action to recover the difference in price:—Held, that the scrip for the shares which the plaintiff received from the jobbers was not a "security" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 (b) of the Courts (Emergency Powers) Act, 1914, as it never at any time belonged to the defendant, and that the plaintiff was therefore entitled to sell the shares without first applying to the Court under the provisions of that sub-section. Ib.

Sunday Trading—Prosecution—Consent of Chief Officer of Police—"Chief officer of police"—Representative of Chief Constable.]—A representative of a chief constable, appointed to act during the chief constable's absence on holiday, is not the "chief officer of police" within the meaning of section 1 of the Sunday Observation Prosecution Act, 1871, for the purpose of authorising a prosecution for Sunday trading under the Sunday Observance Act, 1677, although the latter himself is such officer. Rex v. Halkett; Butinck, Ex parte, 79 L. J. K.B. 12; [1910] 1 K.B. 50; 101 L. T. 603; 74 J. P. 12; 22 Cox C.C. 202—D.

—— Refreshment-house Licence—"Meat"—Sale of Ice Cream.]—A refreshment-house Excise licence does not exempt the holder of the licence from the provisions of the Sunday Observance Act, 1677. Amorette v. James, 84 L. A refreshment-house keeper, the holder of an Excise licence, in the ordinary way of his business supplied some ice cream to customers on a Sunday, and was charged before the Justices, under section 1 of the Sunday Observance Act, 1677, with unlawfully exercising his ordinary calling on the Lord's Day, and was convicted, his only contention being that the licence exempted him from the provisions of the Act. On appeal, on a Case stated, he further contended that the selling of the ice cream was the selling of "meat" within the meaning of section 3 of the Act, and therefore not prohibited by the statute: —Held, first, that the licence did not exempt him from the provisions of the Act; and secondly, that the point as to ice cream being "meat" within the meaning of section 3 of the Act not having been taken before the Justices, and there being no evidence before them that ice cream was "food," must be left open for future decision. Ib.

—— Aiding and Abetting—Purchase of Cigarettes—Mens Rea.]—The purchase of cigarettes from the proprietors of an eating house on a Sunday does not per se amount to the offence of aiding and abetting the vendor in the offence, under the Sunday Observance Act; 1677, of the vendor exercising his ordinary calling on the Lord's Day. A person who enters a shop on a Sunday and buys goods there, with the knowledge that the shopkeeper is exercising his ordinary calling, commits the offence of aiding and abetting the shopkeeper in the exercise of his ordinary calling on a Sunday, contrary to section 1 of the Sunday Observance Act, 1677. Fairburn v. Evans, 32 T. Negligence by Sub-postmaster in Transmission of Telegram — Liability of Sub-postmaster.]—A sub-postmaster, in transmitting a telegram, acts as a public officer and in the discharge of a public duty, and if he is guilty of negligence in the transmission of the telegram, causing loss to the sender, he is liable to the sender for the loss so sustained. Rowning v. Goodchild (2 W. Bl. 906) applied and followed. Hamilton v. Clancy, [1914] 2 Ir. R. 514—K.B. D.

Erection of Telegraph Posts — Road not Taken over by Local Authority — Consent Required—"Body having control of street."] —A street or road which, although open for public use, has not been taken over by the urban district council, is not under the control of the council, as successors of the Surveyors of Highways, under section 12 of the Telegraph Act, 1863, and therefore the council is not the body whose consent can be required by the Postmaster-General to the erection of telegraph poles and wires thereon. Semble, the owner of the soil is the person "having the control" of a public road not yet taken over by the local authority. Postmaster-General v. Hendon Urban Council, 83 L. —— Objection of Public Authority—Alternative Site on Private Land.]—Where a local authority had bona fide exercised their discretion in refusing their consent to the placing of a distributing telegraph pole on a narrow pavement (about one-fifth of which would have been confiscated for that purpose), and where a suitable site on private ground was available at a rental of 1*l.* per annum:—Held, that the local authority had not withheld their consent unreasonably. Postmaster-General v. Darlington Corporation, 15 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 333—Ry. Com.

"Pleasure ground" — "Garden."] — Section 21 of the Telegraph Act, 1863, permits a telegraph company, within the limits of a town having a certain population, and with the consent of the street authority, to place and maintain a telegraph across any land not being laid out as building land, or not being a garden or pleasure ground, provided that twenty-one days' previous notice is published by the company stating that they have obtained such consent, and describing the intended course of such telegraph:—Held, that a pleasure ground, to come within the meaning of the section, should have some equipment of a more or less permanent character that would be of service to persons frequenting it for the purpose of recreation; and that a yard used by the plaintiff mainly for the purpose of his business, and without such equipment, but in which his children were in the habit of playing, was not such a pleasure ground. Held also, that the exception in the section is only made in respect of land which is not a pleasure ground or garden, and not in respect of buildings, and that a garden on the roof of a building was not within the exception. Stevens v. National Telephone Co., [1914] 1 Ir. R. 9—Ross, J.

Consent to Erection.]—The consent of the street authority must be obtained before the erection of the telegraph. A subsequent consent is not sufficient. Ib.

Pole Erected with Ten Yards of Dwelling House in a Town.]—Section 22 of the same Act, which prohibits a telegraph company from placing a telegraph post within ten yards of a dwelling house except as therein provided, applies only to rural districts, or to cases where telegraph posts are put upon property of one person with his consent, but at a distance of less than ten yards from the house of another person. Ib.

Overhead or Underground Wires—Overhead Wire along Public Road—Objection of Local Authority.]—An urban district council having refused their consent to the placing of an overhead telegraph wire on poles for a distance of a quarter of a mile along a road in their district, and the County Court Judge for the district having found that their refusal was reasonable, the Postmaster-General applied to the Railway Commissioners. The district council had expended 6,000*l.* in altering their own overhead wires to underground wires, and in laying new underground wires. In 1907 the Postmaster-General had applied for the consent of the district council to lay underground wires in the road in question, which had been granted, and the wires had been laid accordingly:—Held, that, under the circumstances of the case, the wire should be laid underground on the district council undertaking to do the work of excavation, laying the pipes, and filling the trenches for 50*l.* Postmaster-General v. Tottenham Urban Council, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 154; 8 L. G. R. 791; 74 J. P. 431—Ry. Com.

A corporation of a county borough, on being applied to by the Postmaster-General under section 3 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, for their consent to the erection of certain telephone wires on poles in and along certain public roads within the borough, refused their consent. The difference was referred under section 4 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, to the County Court Judge of the district, who decided that such wires should be erected overhead, as proposed by the Postmaster-General. The corporation thereupon applied to the Railway Commissioners. The substantial objections of the corporation were: First, that overhead wires lowered the value of house property in the roads where they were erected; secondly, that they disfigured such roads; thirdly, that they were dangerous in times of storm; fourthly, that their vibration was a nuisance; and fifthly, that they obstructed traffic. The cost of laying the wires underground was about 355 per cent. more than erecting them on the overhead system. The Post Office had expended 65,000*l.* in laying underground lines in Croydon as compared with 1,800*l.* for overhead lines:—Held, that the overhead wires as proposed by the Postmaster-General should be allowed, but that if the corporation should within one month give notice that they would bear the extra cost of laying any line underground in any street such line should be placed underground accordingly. Quære, whether the corporation were empowered to apply public funds for that purpose. Postmaster-General v. Croydon Corporation, 14 Ry. & Can. Traff. Cas. 158; 8 L. G. R. 1005; 74 J. P. 424—Ry. Com.

Practice—Right to Begin at Hearing before Railway Commissioners.]—Proceedings before the Commissioners under section 4 of the Telegraph Act, 1878, are not in the nature of an appeal, but are in the nature of an original application by the Postmaster-General, who is entitled to begin. Ib.

Injunction against Removal of Telephone Poles.]—A telephone company had telephone poles in the borough of H., under a licence from the corporation. In January, 1912, their undertaking was to be taken over by the Post Office and all plant then in use would be paid for. In October, 1910, the corporation gave the company notice to remove the poles and establish an underground system. This was not done, and the corporation arranged with the Postmaster-General to establish such a service on January 1, 1912. The corporation were willing to allow the poles to be kept up till December 27, 1911, but required their removal before December 31. If they remained up till December 31, 300*l.* would have to be paid for them; if removed before December 27 the Government would not have to pay for them. The corporation claimed a right to remove the poles:—Held, that an injunction should be granted till the trial of the action or until further order restraining the corporation from removing or interfering with the poles. Dickens v. National Telephone Co.; National Telephone Co. v. Hythe Corporation, 75 J. Widening Street — Alteration of Character of Highway—Notice to Postmaster-General to Remove Telephone Pole from Roadway to Footpath — Negligence by Latter in Doing Work — Injury to Third Party — Liability of Highway Authority—New Street.]—A highway authority was engaged in widening a roadway, which they did by setting back the kerb of the footpath. They gave notice to the Postmaster-General, not purporting to be given under the Telegraph Act, 1863, to remove a telephone pole from the roadway. He did so, and filled in the hole negligently. After the pole was removed the highway authority re-opened the street to the public, and the plaintiffs' steam waggon, sinking into the filled-in hole, was injured:—Held, that the highway authority was liable, because by altering the character of the highway they were making a new road, and ought to have seen that it was safe before opening it to the public. Held, also, that the Postmaster-General was liable because, having done work which he was not compellable to do, he had done it negligently. Steel v. Dartford Local Board (60 L. J. Q.B. 256) distinguished. Thompson v. Bradford Corporation, 84 L. J. K.B. 1440; [1915] 3 K.B. 13; 113 L. T. 506; 79 J. P. 364; 13 L. G. R. 884; 59 S. J. 495—D.

Transfer of National Telephone Company's Property to Postmaster-General — Value of Undertaking.]—By the agreement by which the Postmaster-General acquired, as from December 31, 1911, the undertaking of the National Telephone Company it was (inter alia) provided that "the value on December 31, 1911, of all plant, land, buildings, stores, and furniture purchased by the Postmaster-General . . . shall be the then value (exclusive of any allowance for past or future profits of the undertaking or any compensation for compulsory sale or other consideration whatever) of such plant, land, buildings, stores, and furniture, having regard to its suitability for the purposes of the Postmaster-General's telephonic service, and in determining the value of any plant no advantage arising from the construction of such plant, by leave of the Postmaster-General, upon any railway or canal over which the Postmaster-General possesses exclusive rights of way for telegraphic lines shall be taken into account":—Held, that the value of the plant taken over by the Postmaster-General was to be arrived at by taking the cost of construction, less depreciation, and that every expense which was necessary to construct the plant was an element to be considered, including in such expense (inter alia) the reasonable costs of obtaining subscribers' agreements which were in force at the date of the transfer, and also (Sir James Woodhouse dissenting) the cost of raising capital necessary to construct the plant. Held, further, that the method of depreciation applicable was to take the value as reduced in the ratio which the age bore to the life of the plant, and that the mode of computing the life of the plant was to take its physical life as reduced somewhat in respect of defects and obsolescence of certain classes of the plant. National Telephone Co. v. Postmaster-General (No. 1), 29 T. Reference under Telegraph (Arbitration) Act, 1909—Right of Appeal—Jurisdiction—Decision of Railway and Canal Commission.]—An appeal on questions of law lies to the Court of Appeal from decisions arrived at by the Railway and Canal Commission acting under the Telegraph (Arbitration) Act, 1909, to determine "any difference between the Postmaster-General and any body or person under the Telegraph Acts, 1863 to 1908, or under any license or agreement relating to telegraphs (including telephones)":—So held (Buckley, L.J., dissenting). National Telephone Co. v. Postmaster-General (No. 2), 82 L. TENANT FOR LIFE AND REMAINDERMAN.

Capital and Income—Debentures—Default in Payment of Principal and Interest—Deficient Security — Debentures Guaranteed by Company in Liquidation—Scheme of Arrangement in Winding-up — Postponement of Payment in Respect of Principal — Payment of Interest in Meanwhile out of Guarantor Company's Assets.]—By his will, a testator bequeathed his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and settled the net proceeds in trust for tenants for life and remaindermen as therein mentioned, and he gave his trustees power to postpone conversion of any part of his estate, and declared that in the meanwhile the interest arising from the retained investments, whether they were of a permanent or wasting nature, was to be applied as income. The testator died on July 13, 1910, possessed of debentures in various companies which had made default in payment of principal and interest. The debentures were all guaranteed as to both principal and interest by the L. G. Co., which was in liquidation. On July 28, 1910, the Court sanctioned a scheme of arrangement in the winding-up under which payment of claims of creditors (including holders of guaranteed debentures) in respect of principal moneys was to be postponed till December 31, 1918, interest thereon to be made up in the meanwhile to 3 per cent. per annum out of the guarantor company's assets:—Held, that these payments out of the guarantor company's assets must be treated as income of the settled fund and be paid to the tenants for life. Atkinson, In re; Barbers' Co. v. Grose Smith (73 L. J. Ch 585; [1904] 2 Ch. 160), distinguished. Pennington, In re; Pennington v. Pennington, 83 L. J. Ch. 54; [1914] 1 Ch. 203; 109 L. T. 814; 20 Manson, 411; 30 T. L. R. 106—C.A.

—— Distribution by Company of Money and Shares.]—The testator at the date of his death held certain shares in the A company. In 1905 that company sold and transferred its assets to the C company; and in 1909 it was resolved at an extraordinary general meeting to wind up the A company, and the liquidation was still proceeding. Since the testator's death the trustees of his will had received various sums and various distributions of shares of the C company in respect of the shares of the A company held by the trustees. The A company had power to distribute excess of capital as dividends:—Held, that all distributions down to the winding-up of the A company were income, and that all payments received since the liquidation were capital. Palmer, In re; Palmer v. Cassel, 56 S. J. 363; 28 T. L. R. 301—Eve, J.

—— Shares Subject to Trusts of Will—Apportionment of Reserve Fund Representing Undivided Profits—Issue of New Shares to Old Shareholders — Exercise of Option — Bonus Dividend Applied in Payment.] — Where a company under a scheme for apportioning part of their reserve fund, which represented undivided profits, resolved to pay a bonus dividend out of the reserve fund to the shareholders in proportion to the number of their shares, so that each shareholder would get one fully paid new share for each share held by him, and the shareholders could elect to take up the allotment of the new shares or not, such new shares taken up by the trustees of a deceased testator were held to be capital, and not income of his estate. The rule in Bouch v. Sproule (56 L. J. Ch. 1037; 12 App. Cas. 385) applied. Evans, In re; Jones v. Evans, 82 L. J. Ch. 12; 57 S. J. 60—Neville, J.

—— Special Dividend — Issue of New Shares.]—Trust money was invested in a company. The company passed an extraordinary resolution for the division of a special bonus amounting to 33⅓ per cent. of the paid-up capital, and two days later the company sent to the trustees a conditional allotment letter which conferred on them the right to receive cash for 483*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, or to apply for 48⅓ shares of 10*l.* each fully paid. The dividend was described as a bonus dividend free of tax. The value of the allotted shares was about 20*l.* apiece, and the trustees elected to apply for the forty-eight shares and to sell to the company the one-third share. On an application to determine whether the bonus dividend was to be treated as capital or income,—Held, that the tenants for life were entitled to a charge on the new shares for 483*l.* 6*s.* 8*d.*, and that so far as the shares represented an excess over that sum they were to be treated as capital. Northage, In re (60 L. J. Ch. 488), followed. Hume Nisbet's Settlement, In re, 55 S. J. 536; 27 T. L. R. 461—Eve, J.

—— Cumulative Preference Shares—No Dividend Paid during Life of Tenant for Life—Possible Future Dividends—Right to Claim.]—The legal personal representatives of a deceased tenant for life of cumulative preference shares have no right in or claim against the shares after the death of the tenant for life in respect of a possible dividend to be paid out of future profits of the company, if any, which would be applicable to make up a deficiency in dividend during the life of the tenant for life. Sale, In re; Nisbet v. Philp, 83 L. —— Income of Unauthorised Securities — Residuary Estate—Trust of Sale and Conversion—Power to Postponement Conversion and Retain Investments.]—A testator gave all his real and personal estate upon trust for sale and conversion, with power to postpone such conversion so long as the trustees should deem proper, and with power to permit the personal estate invested at the testator's death in or upon any stocks, funds, or securities whatsoever yielding income to continue in the same state of investment so long as the trustees deemed fit. The testator directed that after payment of debts, funeral, testamentary expenses, and duties the trustees should stand possessed of the residue of the moneys produced by conversion upon trust as to one moiety to invest and pay the net income to his wife for life, with a reduction upon re-marriage, and after her death or re-marriage upon the trusts declared of the second moiety; and the second moiety was to be held upon trust for investment and to pay the income to the testator's daughter for life, with remainder to their children. At the time of his death the testator held shares in land companies in British Columbia, which were not investments authorised by the will. These companies bought land as a speculation, and paid large but uncertain dividends:—Held, that the power of retention being for the benefit of the tenants for life and not for the convenience of conversion, the tenants for life were entitled to the whole income of the shares in the land companies. Chaytor, In re; Chaytor v. Horn (74 L. J. Ch. 106; [1905] 1 Ch. 233), distinguished. Inman, In re; Inman v. Inman, 84 L. J. Ch. 309; [1915] 1 Ch. 187; 112 L. T. 240; 59 S. J. 161—Neville, J.

—— Bonus on Settled Shares.]—A testator, by his will, settled shares in an American railway company. Some years after the testator's death the company, which had obtained the necessary powers to increase its capital, paid a bonus of 50 per cent. to its stockholders out of accumulated profits, the payment being made in the form of a 40 per cent. dividend payable in stock and a 10 per cent. cash dividend:—Held, that the trustees of the will should deal with the 40 per cent. stock dividend as an accretion to the capital of the testator's estate, and with the 10 per cent. cash dividend as income arising from the estate. Carson v. Carson, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 321—M.R.

Adjustment of Accounts—Settled Shares of Residue—Payment by Executors for Liabilities—Administration Occupying more than One Year — Rate of Interest — Interest on Estate Duty.]—A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate on trust for sale and conversion, and the payment thereout of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, legacies and annuities, and the duties on those given free of duty. He settled shares in the residue on his daughters for life, and after their deaths for their appointees or children. He empowered his trustees to postpone the sale or conversion of any part of his estate, and directed that the income from his estate, howsoever invested, should, as from his death, be treated as income and no part thereof be added to capital. The estate was a very large one, and the payments and appropriations in respect of the debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, duties, legacies, and annuities, were not completed till five years after the testator's death:—Held, that the direction in the will did not exclude the application of the rule laid down in Allhusen v. Whittell (36 L. J. Ch. 929; L. R. 4 Eq. 295). Held, also, that the tenants for life ought to be deprived only of the income of such a sum as with the income on it would discharge the liabilities, and not of the income of the whole fund required to discharge them; that this process of calculation ought not to be limited to the first year after the testator's death, but ought to be applied also in the case of liabilities discharged after the expiration of that year; that the income ought to be calculated on the average rate of interest earned by the estate in each year; and that the total amount paid for capital and interest in respect of estate duty ought to be treated as being the liability to be discharged and to be apportioned between capital and income accordingly. McEuen, In re; McEuen v. Phelps (83 L. J. Ch. 66; [1913] 2 Ch. 704), followed. Wills, In re; Wills v. Hamilton, 84 L. J. Ch. 580; [1915] 1 Ch. 769; 113 L. T. 138; 59 S. J. 477—Sargant, J.

—— Mortgagee in Possession — Rents and Profits of Mortgaged Properties — Arrears of Interest Due at Death of Testator — Rents Accruing since Testator's Death.] — At the death of a mortgagee who had gone into possession of the mortgaged properties there were unsatisfied certain arrears of interest on the moneys secured. By his will the mortgagee gave the proceeds of sale of his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for certain persons for life and then to others in remainder. The trustees, being in possession of the mortgaged properties, had received certain rents from them which accrued since the testator's death :—Held, that these rents must be applied first in discharging the arrears of interest due at the death of the testator, and that the balance up to, but not exceeding, the interest accrued due since the testator's death should be distributed as income, and that any excess should be applied as capital. Coaks, In re; Coaks v. Bayley, 80 L. J. Ch. 136; [1911] 1 Ch. 171; 103 L. T. 799—Warrington, J.

Power to Postpone Conversion—Estate pur Autre Vie — Wasting Property — Policies of Assurance on Life of Cestui que Vie—Premiums Payable out of Capital.]—A testator by his will and codicils gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust in their discretion, or at the discretion of his wife, for sale and to invest the proceeds and pay the income to his wife for life or during widowhood, with certain remainders over. The will contained a wide power to postpone conversion. At his death he was possessed (inter alia) of an estate pur autre vie of the annual value of about 244*l.* in property held on the trusts of a will, and of two policies of assurance on the life of the cestui que vie, the annual premiums on which amounted to about 60*l.* There was a difficulty in selling the life interest :—Held, that the trustees were entitled to retain the life interest, and that the widow was entitled to the whole income thereof. Held, further, that the trustees had power to postpone realisation of the policies and that the premiums thereon were payable out of capital and not out of income. Bennett In re; Jones v. Bennett (65 L. J. Ch. 422; [1896] 1 Ch. 778), applied. Sherry, In re; Sherry v. Sherry, 83 L. J. Ch. 126; [1913] 2 Ch. 508; 109 L. T. 474—Warrington, J.

—— Consent of Tenant for Life—Direction to Re-invest in Specified Securities with Like Consent—Postponement of Sale—Income from Unauthorised Securities during Postponement —Right of Tenant for Life to Postpone during Lifetime.]—When a testator directs a sale and conversion of his estate, with a power of postponing such sale, and a trust to re-invest in specified securities, and at the same time directs that the consent of the tenant for life must be obtained to such sale, postponement, or re-investment—then the effect is that the tenant for life has practically an option for sale, which he may postpone for as long as he chooses, and meanwhile he is entitled to enjoy the income from the existing estate, even that from unauthorised securities, in specie. Rogers, In re; Public Trustee v. Rogers, 84 L. J. Ch. 837; [1915] 2 Ch. 437; 60 S. J. 27—Neville, J.

—— Bequest of Farming Business—Right of Tenant for Life to Take Profits of Business in Specie.] —A testator bequeathed to his trustees all his interest in W. Farm, with all his farming stock, plant, and crops upon trust to sell and convert and stand possessed of the proceeds upon the trusts declared concerning his residuary estate, and gave them power to carry on his farming business for such period as they might deem beneficial for his estate, and for that purpose to retain and employ in such business a sufficient amount of his capital not otherwise employed in it, without being accountable for any loss arising from such carrying on. He bequeathed his residuary estate to his trustees upon trust to convert and invest the proceeds, and to pay the income of his residuary trust estate to his wife during her widowhood, and after her death or remarriage upon certain trusts. The testator died in May, 1913, and the trustees decided to carry on the business for a time, but did not employ any further capital in the business. The widow died in August, 1914. The farm consisted of between 700 and 800 acres, and was value at the testator's death at 4,746*l.* 4*s.* In the period between the testator's death and that of his widow a large profit was made, amounting to 2,718*l.* 10*s.* 2*d.*, but the widow received nothing during her life. Her executors claimed that her estate was entitled to the whole profit, while the residuary legatees claimed that her estate was entitled only to 4 per cent. per annum on the value of the farm :—Held, that in such cases the Court must look carefully at the words of the will for indications of the testator's intention as to the income of the unconverted property; that in this case the decision in Lambert v. Lambert (27 L. T. 597) applied; that there was in the will sufficient indication that the widow should take the profits of the farming business in specie; and that her estate was entitled to the whole of the profits. Slater, In re; Slater v. Jonas, 113 L. T. 691—Eve, J.

Trust for Sale — Power of Postponement during such Period as Trustees Think Fit— "Trust premises constituting or representing" Estate—Appropriation of Share in, to Each Child — Settlement of Shares — Right of Tenants for Life to Income of Unauthorised Investments.]—A testator gave all his real and personal estate on trust for sale and conversion at such times and in such manner as his trustees should think fit, and so that they should have the fullest power and discretion to postpone the sale and conversion of the whole or any part of the property during such period as they should think proper, without being responsible for loss. The residue of the sale moneys was to be invested in investments thereby authorised, and the trustees were to "divide the said trust premises constituting or representing my residuary estate" into as many equal shares as the testator should have children, and appropriate to each child one share, the income of which was to be paid to the child for life; and on his or her death to hold the share on trusts for his or her children. The testator left six children. His estate included some leaseholds, and a large number of investments of a character not authorised by the will:—Held, that the unauthorised securities while not realised were securities "constituting or representing" part of the testator's residuary estate, the income of which he had directed to be paid to the tenants for life; and that although the trustees had not a power to retain the unauthorised securities permanently, but only a power to postpone their conversion, the tenants for life were entitled to the whole of the income arising from them. Thomas, In re; Wood v. Thomas (60 L. J. Ch. 781; [1891] 3 Ch. 482), followed. Godfree, In re; Godfree v. Godfree, 83 L. J. Ch. 734; [1914] 2 Ch. 110—Warrington, J.

—— Gift of Proportion of Income to Tenant for Life—Unauthorised Investments Retained—Calculation of Income—Leasehold Sub-demised at Annual Loss—Incidence of Loss as between Capital and Income.]—A tenant for life was entitled to three-fifths of the income of a testator's estate, and, under the powers of the will, unauthorised securities—some productive, others non-productive—were retained for a favourable opportunity for realisation. A leasehold forming part of the estate was sub-let at an annual loss:—Held, that the unauthorised securities must be aggregated, and the income therefrom must be taken as being at the rate of 4 per cent. on the aggregate estimated value. Held, further, that the loss on the leasehold was an outgoing of the estate and chargeable against the income. Dictum of Kindersley, V.C., in Allen v. Embleton (27 L. J. Ch. 297; 4 Drew. 226) followed. Owen, In re; Slater v. Owen, 81 L. J. Ch. 337; [1912] 1 Ch. 519; 106 L. T. 671; 56 S. J. 381—Neville, J.

Settlement—Jointure Rentcharge—No Covenant to Pay—Apportionment.]—Real estate was settled in 1890 on trusts which included a jointure rentcharge to the settlor's wife, and in 1900 there was a re-settlement subject to the charges under the earlier settlement. Neither settlement contained a covenant on the part of the settlor to pay the rentcharge:—Held, that, as between the tenant for life and remainderman under the will of the settlor exercising a power in the re-settlement, the rentcharge must be borne wholly out of income, and not apportioned as between income and corpus of the settled estate. Popham, In re; Buller v. Popham, 111 L. Settlement of Personalty—Power to Invest in Land—Rents and Profits to be Payable as Income of Personalty—Purchase of Timber Estate—Periodical Cutting of Trees—Right of Tenant for Life to Net Proceeds of Sale of Timber.]—By a marriage settlement personalty belonging to the wife was settled on usual trusts, and the trustees were empowered to invest the property in the purchase of real estate. Real estate so purchased was to be conveyed to the trustees on trust for sale, and in the meantime the "rents and profits" were to be paid and applied to the person and in the manner to whom and in which the income of the property would have been payable or applicable if the investment had not been made. The trustees, in pursuance of the power, purchased an estate in Buckinghamshire, comprising a large quantity of beech wood, which in Buckinghamshire is timber. The trustees, in accordance with the course of management usual in the neighbourhood, had from time to time cut a considerable number of the older trees in order to leave room for the growth of the younger ones:—Held, on the construction of the settlement, that the net proceeds of sale of the trees, after paying all costs of replanting and repairing fences, belonged to the tenant for life as "profits." Dashwood v. Magniac (60 L. J. Ch. 210, 809; [1891] 3 Ch. 306) applied. Trevor-Battye's Settlement, In re; Bull v. Trevor-Battye, 81 L. J. Ch. 646; [1912] 2 Ch. 339; 107 L. T. 12; 56 S. J. 615—Parker, J.

—— Power to Trustees to Pay for Repairs out of Capital or Income—"Rents dividends and interest and other produce" to be Deemed Income—Lease by Testator—Breach of Covenant—Damages—Capital or Income.]—By his will the testator devised and bequeathed to his trustees all the real and personal estate of which he might die possessed upon the usual trusts for sale and conversion, with power to postpone and to hold the proceeds after payment thereout of certain sums upon trust to divide the same into certain shares, some of which he settled, and he empowered his trustees to manage and order all the affairs thereof as regards letting and repairs and to make out of the income or capital any outlay which they might consider necessary for improvements or repairs. He then provided that for the purposes of enjoyment and transmission under the trusts therein contained his real and personal estates should be considered as money from the time of his decease, and the "rents dividends and interests and other produce" thereof respectively to accrue after his decease, and until the actual sale, conversion, and getting in thereof, should be deemed the actual income thereof. At his death the testator was possessed of a certain theatre subject to a lease granted by him which contained the usual lessee's covenants to repair. The lessee did not perform his obligations under the lease, and the trustees brought an action against him for damages for breach of covenant and recovered judgment for a considerable sum of money by way of damages. The money so recovered was represented in part by a sum of 900*l.* in the trustee's hands:—Held, upon the construction of the will, that the 900*l.* must be treated as corpus of the testator's residuary estate. Lacon's Settlement, In re; Lacon v. Lacon (80 L. J. Management — Freehold Ground Rents — Repairing Leases—Cost of Survey and Notices to Repair — Tenant for Life and Remainderman.]—By a settlement of freehold property contained in a testator's will a power of management was given to the trustees, with power to pay the costs of management out of rents and profits. The property consisted of six hundred and fifty houses let on repairing leases for ninety-nine years at very small ground rents. The trustees employed a surveyor to report on the state of the property, and as a result served notices to repair on a large number of the tenants. The costs of so doing amounted to about half the annual income of the settled estate :—Held (affirming the decision of Neville, J.), that these expenses were costs of management, and payable therefore out of income under the provision in the will. But held, that the Court had power under section 36 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, to direct their payment out of capital, if it thought fit, and that in the special circumstances of the case it would do so. Tubbs, In re; Dyke v. Tubbs, 84 L. Trust Legacy—Investment on Insufficient Security—Death of Tenant for Life—Arrears of Interest—Interim Distribution of Rents—Realisation of Security—Distribution of Proceeds of Sale — Hotchpot.] — A trust legacy was invested on mortgage which proved to be insufficient, and at the death of the tenant for life there were large arrears of interest. By an order the rents were apportioned in the proportion of the arrears due to the tenant for life at her death and the arrears since due to the remaindermen without prejudice to any readjustment when the security was realised. The security was subsequently realised, and the purchase money was placed on deposit :—Held, that the rents paid under the order must be brought into hotchpot, and the aggregate of those rents and the purchase money should be distributed between the representatives of the tenant for life and the remaindermen in the proportion which the arrears of rent due at the death of the tenant for life bore to the aggregate of the principal money and arrears due to the remaindermen. Southwell, In re; Carter v. Hungerford, 85 L. Profits of Business Payable to Tenant for Life—Cost of Repairs to Machinery. —Depreciation.] — A testator gave his trustees authority to carry on his business, and bequeathed to his widow during her life "the profits arising from my business" :—Held, that the trustees had properly charged against the profits before paying them to the widow a yearly sum for depreciation of the machinery used in the business in addition to the cost of repairs. Crabtree, In re; Thomas v. Crabtree, 106 L. T. 49—C.A.

Gift of Successive Legal Interests in Chattels—Loss of Chattels by Default of First Taker — Death of First Taker — Remedy of Ulterior Taker against Estate — First Taker Trustee or Bailee for Ulterior Taker—"Actio personalis moritur cum persona" — Measure of Damages.] — Where successive legal interest in chattels are created the first taker is, subject to his own life interest, in the position of a trustee or bailee of the chattels for the subsequent takers, and bound, through his legal personal representatives, to deliver over the possession of the goods on his own death. If a chattel has been lost through his default, his representatives cannot set up his tort in answer to the claim of the ulterior taker, and the rule "Actio personalis moritur cum persona" has no application to the case. Swan, In re; Witham v. Swan, 84 L. J. Ch. 590; [1915] 1 Ch. 829; 113 L. T. 42; 31 T. L. R. 266—Sargant, J.

The ulterior taker, having been entitled to receive the specific article, is entitled to compensation for the loss from the first taker's estate in the shape of money sufficient to enable him to replace that article, and not merely to the selling value of the article or the middle price between that amount and the amount required to replace it, the principle applicable being that applicable to the case of trust property lost through a sale by the trustee in breach of trust. Ib.

Engagement of Operatic Singer—Singer not Allowed to Perform—Damages.]—The plaintiff, an operatic singer, was engaged by the defendant to sing at four performances in London for a certain sum, half to be paid in advance. This sum in advance was duly paid to the plaintiff. At the final rehearsal the defendant was not satisfied with the plaintiff's performance and refused to allow him to appear, and for this the plaintiff claimed damages. The County Court Judge held that the plaintiff was entitled to treat the contract as determined and to claim the unpaid half of the contract sum, and further that he was entitled to damages in consequence of not being allowed to perform after being advertised to appear. On appeal by the defendant, —Held, that the County Court Judge was wrong in taking the view that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was not allowed to perform, he was entitled to damages for breach of contract, and that the Judge ought to have considered whether, upon the facts in regard to the one stage rehearsal which the plaintiff attended, the defendant was justified in coming to the conclusion at which he arrived and not allowing him to perform. Zamco v. Hammerstein, 29 T. L. R. 217—D.

Engagement of Music-hall Artist for Week —Whether Salary Due before Completion of Week.]—A music-hall artist was engaged to perform for one week at 180*l.* per week. Clause 8 of the agreement provided that "in case the artiste shall, except through illness . . . or accident . . . fail to perform at any performance the artiste shall pay to the management as and for liquidated damages a sum equal to the sum which the artiste would have received for such performance . . ." Clause 12 provided that "the artiste shall not assign, mortgage, or charge the artiste's salary nor permit the same to be taken in execution. No salary shall be paid for days upon which the theatre is closed by reason of national mourning. . . . No salary shall be payable for any performance at which the artiste may not appear through illness or his own default. . . ." Clause 16 provided (inter alia) that "if the artiste shall commit any breach of any of the terms and conditions of this contract or of the rules, the management . . . may forthwith determine this contract, and the artiste shall have no claim upon them for salary other than a proportion for performances played, expenses, costs, or otherwise":—Held, that the agreement provided for a salary for the week, and that unless some of the events, mentioned in the foregoing clauses, happened, no portion of the salary became due to the artist until the end of the week and until he had fully completed all the performances contemplated. Mapleson v. Sears, 105 L. T. 639; 56 S. J. 54; 28 T. L. R. 30—D.

Alteration of Contract—Subsequent Arrangement—Music-hall Contract.]—Before the war the defendant agreed to perform twice every evening as a comedian at the plaintiffs' music hall for one week beginning on October 12, 1914, at a salary of 150*l.* The contract provided that "in case the artist shall, except through illness . . . or accident . . . fail to perform at any performance, he should pay to the management as and for liquidated damages a sum equal to the sum which the artist would have received for such performance, in addition to costs and expenses incurred by the management through the default of the artist." After the outbreak of war an arrangement was come to between the managements of the various music halls and the artistes, including the defendant, that the gross receipts of the halls during the war should be divided into two equal parts, of which the management should take one part and the performers at the hall the other part, sharing that part in the proportion of their respective salaries. The defendant having failed to perform at the plaintiffs' hall, they brought an action for damages against him:—Held, that in order to ascertain the measure of damages the sum fixed in the contract had to be altered in view of the subsequent arrangement, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover such proportion of the artistes' share in the receipts which would probably have been received if the defendant had performed his agreement, as the defendant would have been entitled to. Golder's Green Amusement and Development Co. v. Relph, 31 T. L. R. 343—Bailhache, J.

Stage Performances — Specified Dates — Artist's Right to Transfer—New Dates—How to be Fixed.]—The plaintiff, who was a music-hall artist, and the defendants, who were music-hall proprietors, made a contract under which the plaintiff was to perform at certain of the halls on specified dates, and the contract contained a clause stating that "the dates mentioned in this contract may be transferred by [the plaintiff] provided two months' notice is given by artist, other dates to be given in lieu of dates transferred." The plaintiff gave notice to transfer a number of dates, and the defendants then claimed that they were entitled to fix the dates on which the plaintiff was to perform. In an action by the plaintiff against the defendants for breach of the contract,—Held, that under the above clause neither party was entitled to fix the dates, but that while the artist had a right to transfer dates the new dates were to be fixed by agreement, each party to act reasonably. Terry v. Moss's Empires, Lim., 32 T. Licence — Royal Albert Hall.]—Although the corporation of the Albert Hall possess powers under their Royal charters of 1867 and 1887 sufficiently wide to render the public performance of stage plays in a portion of their building known as the Royal Albert Hall Theatre intra vires, such charters do not amount to letters patent to keep that place for the public performance of such plays within the meaning of section 2 of the Theatres Act, 1843, so as to obviate the necessity for obtaining a theatre licence for the theatre. Royal Albert Hall v. London County Council, 104 L. T. 894; 75 J. P. 337; 9 L. G. R. 626; 27 T. L. R. 362—D.

Music-hall Sketch—Agreement by Artist—Exclusive Services—Reproduction of Performance on Cinematograph.]—The plaintiffs, who were music-hall proprietors, made an agreement with the defendant by which it was provided that the defendant should give the plaintiffs his exclusive services and that he should not permit any colourable imitation, representation, or version of his performance to be given within a certain radius. It was alleged by the plaintiffs that the defendant permitted the representation of one of his sketches on a cinematograph at certain picture palaces within the prescribed area, and they brought an action against him to restrain him from this alleged breach of the agreement:—Held, on the evidence, that the defendant had taken no part in the alleged reproduction of his performance, and that therefore he was

Seat in Theatre — Forcible Removal of Visitor—Right to Damages.]—If a visitor to a theatre has paid for his seat, he has a right to retain the seat so long as he behaves himself and keeps within the regulations laid down by the management. ——Incident in Performance — Injury to Member of Audience—Warranty by Lessee.]—The plaintiff paid for a seat in a theatre, of which the defendant was lessee and manager. The performance of the play had been arranged for by the defendant with the director of a theatrical company, who was to provide the actors and the scenery and to receive a share of the receipts, the defendant taking the remainder. At one part of the play pistols with blank cartridges were fired, and one of the cartridges being too small acted as a bullet and wounded the plaintiff. The plaintiff brought a County Court action against the defendant for personal injuries, and the Judge held that in all circumstances the defendant warranted that all persons connected with the performance should exercise reasonable care, so as not to expose the audience to unreasonable danger, and he found that it had not been conducted with reasonable care, and he awarded the plaintiffs damages. Per Bailhache, J.: The defendant warranted that any dangerous incident in the play should be performed with due care and therefore the plaintiff was entitled to recover. Per Shearman, J.: If in fact a performance was not dangerous a plaintiff could not recover because of the negligent way in which a certain act was performed which was not dangerous when not negligently performed, and as the Judge applied a wrong rule of law there should be a new trial. Cox v. Coulson, 31 T. Computation of Term — Trust for Sale at Expiration of Twenty-one Years — Rule against Perpetuities.]—By a settlement dated May 13, 1892, freehold hereditaments were expressed to be assured unto and to the use of trustees, and it was declared that the trustees should stand possessed of the hereditaments during the term of twenty-one years from the date of the settlement upon trust to apply the rents and profits thereof as therein mentioned. The settlement then provided: "It is hereby declared that the said trustees or trustee shall at the expiration of the said term of twenty-one years sell the said hereditaments and premises either together or in parcels" and otherwise as therein mentioned:—Held, that the trust for sale did not infringe the rule against perpetuities and was a good trust. Held, further, that upon the true construction of the settlement the term of twenty-one years began at midnight on May 12, 1892, and expired at midnight on May 12, 1913. English v. Cliff, 83 L. "Month."—A wrote to B offering to buy land of B at a certain price, specifying the date for completion, and that the purchase money should be paid as to a part down and as to the residue within two years, "and to be secured to your satisfaction." The offer further stated that for the space of a month B was to be at liberty to accept the offer, and if not accepted conditionally or otherwise within that time the offer was to be considered as withdrawn. The offer was dated September, but omitted the day:—Held, in an action for specific performance, that "month" meant "lunar month," and that the offer ran from the day on which the offer was in fact made. Morrell v. Studd, 83 L. —— Lunar or Calendar—Primary Meaning — Construction — Controlled by Context or Surrounding Circumstances.]—In every contract, not being a contract relating to a mercantile transaction in the City of London, the word "month" prima facie means lunar month, but the context or the surrounding circumstances may shew that the word was not used to denote a lunar month, and it may then be construed as meaning a calendar month. Helsham-Jones v. Hennen & Co., 84 L. "Offender whose age does not exceed sixteen years."]—A person who at the time of committing the offence of carnally knowing a girl under the age of thirteen is under the age of sixteen, but who at the time he appears in Court to answer the indictment charging him with the offence is over the age of sixteen, is not a person "whose age does not exceed sixteen years" within the meaning of the proviso to section 4 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885. In such a case, therefore, the Court has no power under that proviso to order the offender to be whipped. Rex v. Cawthron, 82 L. J. K.B. 981; [1913] 3 K.B. 168; 109 L. T. 412; 77 J. P. 460; 23 Cox C.C. 548; 29 T. L. R. 600—C.C.A.

Advertisements Calculated to Deceive.]—No person has a right to sell or offer for sale goods of another trader of an inferior class under conditions calculated to represent such goods as being goods of the same trader of a superior class. Similarity — "Everybody's Magazine" — "Everybody's Weekly."]—The plaintiffs, an American company, were the proprietors and publishers of a shilling monthly magazine called Everybody's Magazine, which was first issued in 1899. Subsequently the defendants published a weekly penny paper called Everybody's Weekly. In an action by the plaintiffs to restrain the defendants from selling any periodical with the title "Everybody's,"—Held, that the action failed, as the two periodicals were not likely to compete with one another, and the Court could not restrain the use of a common and popular expression like "Everybody's." Ridgway Co. v. Amalgamated Press, 29 R. P. C. 130; 28 T. L. R. 149—Warrington, J.

Magazine of Fiction.]—The plaintiffs, the proprietors of a magazine called Monthly Magazine of Fiction, which they had published since 1885, sought to restrain the defendants from publishing a magazine which they called Cassell's Magazine of Fiction and Popular Literature:—Held, that the action failed, as the plaintiffs were not entitled to any monopoly in the words "Magazine of Fiction," which were purely descriptive. Held, further, that the use of the words by the defendants was not likely to lead to confusion in the minds of the public. Stevens v. Cassell & Co., 30 R. P. C. 199; 29 T. L. R. 272—Neville, J.

Newspaper—Similarity of Names—Monopoly.]—There is in law no monopoly in the name of a newspaper. To entitle the proprietors of a newspaper to an injunction restraining the publication of another newspaper with a similar name, they must shew that the use of that name is calculated to lead to the belief that the defendants' newspaper is the plaintiffs', and that the use of such name is injurious to them. Outram v. London Evening Newspapers Co., 28 R. Transfer to Company of Right to Use Name —No Transfer of Goodwill—Restraining Company from Trading in Registered Name.]—The plaintiffs were incorporated in 1897 to carry on a business of caterers theretofore carried on by a firm named Kingston & Miller. One of the managing directors had a son, Thomas Kingston, who assisted in the management, and so became skilled in the business and well known to the customers. In 1911 Thomas Kingson left his employment in the business and promoted the defendant company, which was formed to carry on a business of the same character as that of the plaintiffs, and to secure and turn to account Thomas Kingston's services as an expert in the business. He was shortly afterwards appointed managing director:—Held, that the use of the name "Kingston" by the defendants was likely to mislead and deceive the public into the belief that the defendants were the same company as the plaintiffs; that even if Thomas Kingston could, by selling the goodwill of a business which he had carried on in his own name to a company, have conferred on it the right to use the name, he had nothing in the nature of a goodwill to transfer, and so could not give the defendants the right to use his name; and that the defendants must be restrained from using their registered name or any other so nearly resembling that of the defendants as to be calculated to deceive, and from carrying on a similar business under it. Fine Cotton Spinners and Doublers Association v. Harwood, Cash & Co. (76 L. J. Ch. 670; [1907] 2 Ch. 184) followed. Kingston, Miller & Co. v. Kingston & Co., 81 L. J. Ch. 417; [1912] 1 Ch. 575; 106 L. T. 586; 29 R. P. C. 289; 56 S. J. 310; 28 T. L. R. 246—Warrington, J.

Right to Trade under One's Own Name—Similarity of Names—Confusion of Names and Goods.]—A man, so long as he acts honestly, may trade under his own name, even though the similarity of such name to the name under which another person has previously been trading may occasionally lead to confusion or lead to the goods of the one being mistaken for the goods of the other trader. Actiengesellschaft Hommel's Hæmatogen v. Hommel, 29 R. 3. IMITATION OF GOODS.

Passing off—Substitution of Goods—Accidental and Inadvertent Substitution—"Trap" Orders—Delay in Delivery of Particulars of Occasions Relied on.]—In 1906 M. E. P., a trading corporation, discontinued stocking and selling L.'s goods, and in their place offered goods of their own manufacture, the shop assistants being instructed at the time to explain to customers that only M. E. P.'s goods were sold, and to push their sale. In July, 1910, L. sent a number of their employees to M. E. P. shops with orders for L.'s goods. L. alleged that in several instances M. E. P. goods were supplied without any explanation being offered, or the notice of the customer being drawn to the substitution. In August, 1910, L. instituted an action for an injunction to restrain the passing off of M. E. P. goods for L.'s goods; but particulars of the instances alleged were not delivered to the defendants until December, 1910:—Held, that in so far as there had been any substitution of M. E. P.'s goods for L.'s goods it was inadvertent, and not part of a deliberate policy of fraud, and that, on the defendants undertaking that their goods should not be supplied in response to orders for the plaintiffs' goods without the consent of the purchaser thereto being first obtained, no injunction should be granted; and that, as the plaintiffs had been guilty of negligence in delivering particulars of the alleged "trap" orders, there should be no order as to costs. Lever v. Masbro' Equitable Pioneers Society (No. 1), 105 L. —— Colourable Imitations—Selling Defendants' Goods as those of Plaintiffs—Use of Word "Patent."]—The defendants made and sold pens of the same shape as those made by the plaintiffs, stamped them with the same numbers, and put them in boxes resembling the plaintiffs' boxes. The plaintiffs' goods were stamped with the word "Patent," though they were not patented:—Held, that the shapes of the pens were common to the trade, and that the boxes were not likely to deceive, and therefore the plaintiffs' case failed. Held, also, that had the plaintiffs made out a case, the use of the word "patent" was only a collateral misrepresentation, on which the defendants could not have relied. Perry v. Hessin, 29 R. P. C. 101; 56 S. J. 176—Eve, J. Affirmed, 29 R. P. C. 509; 56 S. J. 572—C.A.

—— Circular—"Taylors' wine."]—The defendants, who were wine merchants, issued a large number of circulars in which under the head of vintage ports was the following item: "Taylors, Vintage 1908, Bottling year 1910. Price, 27*s*." The wine so offered was not the plaintiffs' wine which was known in the trade as "Taylors'," but was the wine of one Alexander D. Taylor. The wine had been described as "Taylors'" in the circular by inadvertence. When the defendants' attention was called to the matter they agreed not to issue any further circular containing the mistake, but they refused to make a public apology. On a claim for an injunction at the instance of the plaintiffs,—Held, that it was no answer to the claim for an injunction for the defendants to say that they would not issue the circular again; they were bound to do something to remedy their previous act. Yeatman v. Homberger, 107 L. T. 742; 29 R. P. C. 645; 29 T. L. R. 26—C.A. Affirming, 56 S. J. 614—Eve, J.

—— Malted Milk—Descriptive Designation.]—Held, that the term "malted milk" was a descriptive designation, and that the plaintiffs, who manufactured and sold a preparation known as "Horlick's Malted Milk," were not entitled to restrain the defendant from manufacturing and selling a similar preparation under the name "Hedley's Malted Milk." Horlick's Malted Milk Co. v. Summerskill, 32 T. L. R. 63—Joyce, J.

—— Brinsmead Pianos.]—Held, that there being no evidence of dishonesty, the defendant Brinsmead could not be restrained at the instance of the plaintiffs from putting his own name on pianos made by him, although the fact of his doing so might bring him some advantage in connection with the sale of the pianos made by him, in consequence of his surname being the same as that of the plaintiff firm. Brinsmead v. Brinsmead (No. 1), 30 R. —— Taxicabs.]—Injunction granted restraining the defendant from so getting up his taxicabs as to pass them off as and for the taxicabs of the plaintiffs. Du Cros v. Gold, 30 R. P. C. 117; 29 T. L. R. 163—Swinfen Eady, J.

—— Fireworks.]—See Brock & Co. v. Pain, post, col. 1605.

—— Revoked Patent.]—The appellants had for many years used a distinctive device in connection with their goods, which had acquired a high reputation among their customers and had become associated with the goods. The appellants' predecessors had taken out a patent for this device, which was subsequently revoked:—Held, that the appellants were entitled to an injunction to restrain the respondents from selling goods with a device which was not sufficiently distinguished from that of the appellants and was likely to deceive, and that this right was not taken away by the revocation of the patent. Edge v. Niccolls, 80 L. ——Exclusive Agent for Sale—Right to Maintain Action—Association of Goods with Agent—Distinctive Peculiarity in Get-up.]—Where an exclusive agent for sale is injured in his business by goods being passed off as the goods for which he has the exclusive agency, he cannot maintain a passing-off action in the absence of evidence that the goods sold by him have in some way become associated with him in the market, as, for instance, by reason of some distinctive peculiarity in the get-up. Dental Manufacturing Co. v. De Trey & Co., 81 L. Validity of Trade Mark—Passing off Goods.]—The plaintiffs, a firm of pyrotechnists, and their predecessors in business had for nearly fifty years—namely, since 1866 down to 1910—been making and selling fireworks under the description "Crystal Palace Fireworks," they having throughout that period the exclusive right of giving firework displays at the Crystal Palace. In 1891 they had registered as an old trade mark in connection with fireworks the words "Crystal Palace." They had also registered two other trade marks consisting of representations of the Crystal Palace. They used the term for all their goods of the firework class. It was not limited to the displays that they gave at the Crystal Palace. Their goods were asked for as "Crystal Palace Fireworks," and were supplied under that name. The plaintiffs having ceased to have the contract, the defendants, another firm of pyrotechnists, obtained in the year 1910 the right to give firework displays at the Crystal Palace, and thereupon they sought to describe their fireworks as "Crystal Palace Fireworks" with the addition of their own name:—Held, that the plaintiffs having for nearly fifty years applied the words "Crystal Palace" to their goods, it was irrelevant to consider whether they had still got the right to give displays of fireworks at the Crystal Palace; that the use of those words did not imply that they had; and that therefore they were entitled to a perpetual injunction to restrain the defendants. Linoleum Manufacturing Co. v. Nairn (47 L. J. Ch. 430; 7 Ch. D. 834) distinguished. Brock & Co. v. Pain, 105 L. T. 976; 28 R. P. C. 697—C.A.

2. Unauthorised Use of Royal Arms.

The object of section 68 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, prohibiting the unauthorised user of the Royal Arms in connection with any trade or business in such manner as to be calculated to lead to the belief that the user is authorised, is to prevent the spreading of such a belief amongst the public generally, and not only amongst present or prospective customers, or any other particular persons. Royal Warrant-Holders' Association v. Deane & Beal, 81 L. J. Ch. 67; [1912] 1 Ch. 10; 105 L. T. 623; 28 R. P. C. 721; 56 S. J. 12; 28 T. L. R. 6—Warrington, J.

The defendants carried on business as engineers, manufacturers, and contractors in premises on the front of which there was, and had been for many years before the defendants acquired the business, a representation of the Royal Arms, with crest, supporters, and mottoes. No such words as "By Appointment," the use of which was imposed as a condition by some of the Departments granting authority to use the Royal Arms, appeared in connection with the representation; and the defendants, who had no authority to use the arms, and did not supply goods to any member of the Royal Family, did not use them on their stationery, or otherwise except on their premises:—Held, that the defendants were using the Royal Arms in connection with their business, and in such manner as to be calculated to lead to the belief that they had authority to use them; and that they must be restrained by injunction under section 68 from using them on their premises or otherwise. Ib.

The defendant had for a number of years carried on business as a victualler in Dublin and used in his advertisements and billheads the Royal Arms, with the words "By Appointment." He had no authority to use the Royal Arms. His predecessor in the business, from whom he had purchased it, had been granted in 1839 by the then Lord Lieutenant of Ireland a warrant to use the Vice-regal Arms, and this warrant had been handed to and was in the possession of the defendant. He had supplied meat to the late King Edward when he visited Ireland. The defendant had used the Royal Arms in connection with his business for a number of years without interference, and had acted under the bona fide belief that he was entitled to use them. He refused to discontinue such user although called upon by the plaintiffs before action to do so:—Held, in an action by the plaintiffs, an incorporated association authorised to use the Royal Arms and authorised by the Lord Chamberlain to bring the action, that the defendant was using the Royal Arms without the requisite authority, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction restraining such user. Royal Warrant Holders' Association v. Sullivan, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 236—Barton, J.

Evidence — Asking Witness Effect on His Mind of Display of Arms—Admissibility.]—The question, put to a witness who had frequently passed the defendants' premises, what was the conclusion in his mind arising from the exhibition of the arms, held admissible, on the analogy of the putting to a witness in a passing-off case of the question whether he was in fact deceived by the make-up of the defendants' goods. Observations of Farwell, J., in Bourne v. Swan & Edgar, Lim.; Bourne's Trade Mark, In re (72 L. J. Ch. 168; [1903] 1 Ch. 211), applied. Royal Warrant Holders' Association v. Deane & Beal, supra.

Essentials of Trade Mark—Word in Common Use — Word "Standard."]—The Canadian Trade Mark and Design Act, 1879, provides that the registration of a trade mark may be refused "if the so-called trade mark does not contain the essentials necessary to constitute a trade mark, properly speaking"; but it does not define the essentials of a trade mark:—Held, that the word "Standard" being a common English word, used to convey the notion that the goods to which it is applied are of high class or superior quality, cannot be properly registered as a trade mark. Standard Ideal Co. v. Standard Sanitary Manufacturing

"Health"—Article of Food.]—The word "Health" cannot be registered as a trade mark as applicable to any article of food. Thorne v. Sandow, 106 L. T. 926; 29 R. P. C. 440; 28 T. L. R. 416—Neville, J.

Geographical Name — Name of Foreign Capital in Foreign Language—Word become Distinctive of Goods—Assignment of Owner of Business in Certain Countries. — Geographical names are not absolutely excluded, like laudatory epithets, from registration as trade marks under the Trade Marks Act, 1905. The word "Berna" had become distinctive for the goods of a British company which manufactured commercial motor vehicles. The business had originated in Switzerland, but it had been acquired by the company in 1908. In 1912, however, the company sold their business in foreign countries to a Swiss company, and in 1913 they sold their business in the United Kingdom, with the benefit of all trade names and trade marks, to another company, retaining their business in the British colonies and dependencies. "Berna" is the Italian and Spanish form of "Berne": —Held, that "Berna" was not absolutely prohibited from registration in connection with motor cars, and ought to be admitted to registration as being, on the evidence, properly distinctive of the company's goods. Held, also, that the word would not be misleading or deceptive as implying that the goods were made in Switzerland; and that it was no objection to its registration that the company had assigned to others their business in certain parts of the world, such assignments being recognised by section 22 of the Act. Berna Commercial Motors, Lim., In re, 84 L. J. Ch. 416; [1915] 1 Ch. 414; 112 L. T. 980; 32 R. P. C. 113; 59 S. J. 316—Sargant, J.

"Classic" — Laudatory Epithet — Word Adapted to Distinguish—Secondary Meaning —Infringement and Passing off.]—The plaintiffs were the publishers of Christmas and other greeting cards and stationery, and had registered the word "classic" as a trade mark for their goods. They brought an action against the defendants for infringement of the trade mark and passing off, and the defendants moved to expunge the trade mark from the register, and denied that their use of "classic" was calculated to pass off their cards as the plaintiffs' cards:—Held, that the word "classic" was a laudatory epithet, and not a word "having no direct reference to the character and quality of the goods" so as to be registrable under section 9, sub-section 4 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905; and further, that it was incapable of being treated as "adapted to distinguish" so as to be registrable under section 9, sub-section 5 of the Act, and that, even if it had been capable of becoming distinctive, it had not in fact become distinctive of the plaintiffs' goods by user. The claim for infringement therefore failed, and the word must be expunged from the Register of Trade Marks. Held also, that there was nothing in the get-up of the defendants' boxes of cards apart from the use of the word "classic" to support the plaintiffs' claim for passing off, and that in view of the finding that the word was not in fact distinctive of the plaintiffs' goods the claim in respect of passing off must also be dismissed. Sharpe, Lim. v. Solomon, Lim.; Sharpe, Lim.'s Trade Mark, In re, 84 L. Word Descriptive of Form and Character of Goods—"Ribbon"—Dentifrice.]—The word "Ribbon" held not to be a registrable trade mark for a dentifrice, inasmuch as the word as used by the applicants was descriptive of the form and character of the dentifrice in respect that it described the manner and form in which the dentifrice came out of the tube in which it was sold. Colgate & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 30 R. Invented Word—"Parlograph"—Whether Indicative of Origin or Merely Denoting Particular Article.]—A German company applied for registration as a trade mark of the word "Parlograph" in respect of sound-recording and reproducing machines and parts and accessories thereof included in class 8. A pamphlet issued by the London agents of the German company was in evidence in which a sound-recording machine was described under the name "Parlograph." The Registrar of Trade Marks refused the application. On appeal to the Court,—Held, overruling the Registrar, that the word "Parlograph" was an invented word within the meaning of section 9, sub-section 3 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, and, further, that it did not merely denote a particular article, but referred to the make or quality of the goods produced by the applicant company, and was a proper trade mark within the definition of a trade mark in section 3 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905. Gramophone Co.'s Application, In re (79 L. Invented Word—Prior Use of Word.]—An "invented word" need not be absolutely new in order to be registrable as a trade mark under the Trade Marks Act, 1905, s. 9. Société le Ferment's Application, In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 724; 107 L. T. 515; 29 R. P. C. 497; 28 T. L. R. 490—C.A.

The word "Lactobacilline" had been used by the applicants to describe their preparation of a lactic ferment for some years before they applied to register it as a trade mark. The Court, having come to the conclusion on the evidence that "Lactobacilline" was an invented word, allowed the applicants to register it notwithstanding their prior user of it. Linotype Co.'s Trade Mark, In re (69 L. Surname—"Distinctive mark"—"Adapted to distinguish."] — The applicants applied to register the word "Boardman's" as a trade mark in respect of manufactured tobacco. A predecessor in trade of the applicants had from 1888 supplied a smoking mixture to a Mr. Boardman in Manchester, and from that time tobacco and cigarettes supplied by the applicants and their predecessors had been known as "Boardman's" in a limited area:—Held, that the evidence was insufficient to shew that the use of the word "Boardman's" had rendered it "distinctive" of the tobacco of the applicants so as to justify the Court in holding that it was "adapted to distinguish" their goods within section 9, sub-section 5 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, and was therefore registrable as a "distinctive mark." Lea's Trade Mark, In re, 82 L. J. Ch. 241; [1913] 1 Ch. 446; 108 L. T. 353; 30 R. P. C. 216; 57 S. J. 373; 29 T. L. R. 334—C.A.

On an application to register as a trade mark the word "Benz" written in a fanciful manner and encircled by a device partaking of the nature of a wreath,—Held, that the mark was not registrable under section 9, sub-section 1 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, as "the name of a company, individual, or firm represented in a special or particular manner," or in the absence of an order of the Board of Trade or the Court as a distinctive mark under section 9, sub-section 5. Benz & Co.'s Application, In re, 108 L. T. 589; 30 R. P. C. 177; 57 S. J. 301; 29 T. L. R. 295—C.A.

—— "Adapted to distinguish."]—The applicants applied under section 9, sub-section 5 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, to register the word "Pope" as a trade mark in respect of incandescent electric lamps. Since the inception of the business in this country in 1904, care had been taken to identify the word "Pope" with the electric globes or lamps manufactured and sold by the predecessors in business of the applicants, and afterwards by the applicants. Pope was the name of one of the directors of the applicants, who had been one of the founders of the original business. It was established that in the trade a lamp bearing the word "Pope" had come to mean a lamp manufactured by the applicants. There was no evidence to shew that among the public the name had obtained such a secondary meaning:—Held, first, that the name in its nature was not "adapted to distinguish" the goods of the applicants from those of other persons; and secondly, even supposing the word were adapted to distinguish, and that the evidence established that it had by user become distinctive, the Court in its discretion ought not to grant such an application as this, having regard to the intention of the Legislature with reference to the use of surnames as trade marks, as expressed in sub-sections 1 and 4 of section 9 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905. Crosfield & Sons' Application, In re (79 L. J. Ch. 211; [1910] 1 Ch. 130), applied. Pope's Electric Lamp Co.'s Application, In re, 80 L. J. Ch. 682; [1911] 2 Ch. 382; 105 L. T. 580; 28 R. P. C. 629; 27 T. L. R. 567—Warrington, J.

—— Application to Register Surname—Order of Board of Trade Directing Registrar to Proceed—Effect of Order—Power of Court to Entertain Subsequent Application to Remove.] —An order made under section 9, paragraph 5 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, directing the Registrar of Trade Marks to proceed with the registration as a trade mark of a "name, signature, or word or words, other than" those falling within any of the preceding paragraphs, does not preclude the Court from entertaining, after the mark has been registered, an application under section 35 for its removal on any ground which would have been open to the applicant apart from that order. Teofani & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 82 L. J. Ch. 490; [1913] 2 Ch. 545; 109 L. T. 114; 30 R. P. C. 446; 57 S. J. 686; 29 T. L. R. 591, 674—C.A.

Decision of Warrington, J., on this point (82 L. J. Ch. 145; [1913] 1 Ch. 191) reversed. Ib.

—— "Word."] — A surname is a "word" within the meaning of section 9, paragraph 5 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, and, subject to the conditions there set out, it is registrable as a trade mark if proved to be capable of distinguishing the goods of the person seeking to register it from those of other persons. The decision on this point of Warrington, J., in Pope's Electric Lamp Co.'s Application, In re (80 L. J. Ch. 682; [1911] 2 Ch. 382), and of Joyce, J., in Lea, Lim., In re (81 L. J. Ch. 489; [1912] 2 Ch. 32), reversed. Ib.

A surname ought only to be registered as a trade mark in exceptional cases, of which the word "Teofani" is an example. Ib.

Where the Board of Trade has determined that a particular name is not outside the category of registrable trade marks, and has directed the Registrar to proceed with the application for its registration and determine whether the name is a distinctive mark, the Court is precluded from afterwards saying that the name is outside the category of registrable trade marks. Trade Mark No. 312065, In re, 29 T. Cadbury Bros., Lim., applied for an order of the Board of Trade to register the name of "Cadbury" under section 9, sub-section 5 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, as a trade mark in respect of certain confectionery goods in class 42. In 1886 the firm had registered the name "Cadbury" as an old mark under section 64, sub-section 3 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade Marks Act, 1883, in respect of chocolate and cocoa. There was considerable evidence that the word "Cadbury" had become distinctive of the goods of the applicants:—Held, that the Registrar ought to proceed to registration. Cadbury's Application, In re (No. 1), 84 L. J. Ch. 242; [1915] 1 Ch. 331; 112 L. T. 235; 32 R. P. C. 9; 59 S. J. 161—Neville, J.

Condition of Disclaimer of Right to Exclusive Use of Part of Mark.]—Section 15 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, represents a new departure in regard to the imposition, as a condition of the registration of a trade mark, of a disclaimer by the applicant of any part of the mark to the exclusive use of which he is not entitled. The section throws the onus of justifying a disclaimer on those who seek to have it inserted; and disclaimers, unnecessary from a legal point of view, should not be placed on the register, since they induce a disregard by the public of common law rights which may have been acquired to the use of the part disclaimed. Baker & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re (77 L. Name of Company in Ordinary Handwriting —Representation in a "special or particular manner."]—The name of a company written in ordinary handwriting is not registrable as a trade mark, as it is not "represented in a special or particular manner" within the meaning of section 9, sub-section 1 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905. Registrar of Trade Marks v. Du Cros, Lim. (83 L. "Distinctive" Mark—Duty of Registrar—Initial Letters—Discretion.]—The proper time for considering whether a mark is registrable as a trade mark, or whether, having regard to the interests of the public, it ought to be accepted or rejected, is when the application for registration first comes before the Registrar under section 12 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905. The Registrar then has a discretion, to be exercised in a judicial spirit, as to whether the mark is "distinctive" within the meaning of section 9, sub-section 5 of the Act. Registrar of Trade Marks v. Du Cros, 83 L. J. Ch. 1; [1913] A.C. 624; 109 L. T. 687; 30 R. P. C. 660; 57 S. J. 728; 29 T. L. R. 772—H.L. (E.)

A mark consisting simply of the initials of the applicant, whether in block type or in script, should not generally be registered, not being sufficiently "distinctive." In order to determine whether a mark is "distinctive" it must be considered quite apart from the effects of registration. Ib.

User—"Mark used or proposed to be used."]—Where applicants for registration of a trade mark were under a contractual obligation not until the year 1926 to sell their goods to any one in the United Kingdom save to the respondents who, under their own trade mark, traded in the United Kingdom in the goods supplied to them in Switzerland by the applicants,—Held, that in the circumstances the mark proposed to be registered was not "a mark used or proposed to be used upon or in connexion with goods . . ." within the meaning of section 3 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, and that the application must be refused. Neuchatel Asphalte Co.'s Application, In re, 82 L. "Classic" — Laudatory Epithet — Word Adapted to Distinguish — Secondary Meaning — Infringement and Passing off.] — The plaintiffs were the publishers of Christmas and other greeting cards and stationery, and had registered the word "classic" as a trade mark for their goods. They brought an action against the defendants for infringement of the trade mark and passing off, and the defendants moved to expunge the trade mark from the register, and denied that their use of "classic" was calculated to pass off their cards as the plaintiffs' cards:—Held, that the word "classic" was a laudatory epithet, and not a word "having no direct reference to the character and quality of the goods" so as to be registrable under section 9, sub-section 4 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905; and further, that it was incapable of being treated as "adapted to distinguish" so as to be registrable under section 9, sub-section 5 of the Act, and that, even if it had been capable of becoming distinctive, it had not in fact become distinctive of the plaintiffs' goods by user. The claim for infringement therefore failed, and the word must be expunged from the Register of Trade Marks. Held also, that there was nothing in the get-up of the defendants' boxes of cards apart from the use of the word "classic" to support the plaintiffs' claim for passing off, and that in view of the finding that the word was not in fact distinctive of the plaintiffs' goods the claim in respect of passing off must also be dismissed. Sharpe, Lim. v. Solomon, Lim.: Sharpe, Lim.'s Trade Mark, In re, 84 L. Three Lines of Colour—Indefinite Length—Conditions Imposed upon User.]—A firm of fire-hose manufacturers applied to the Registrar of Trade Marks for the registration in respect of canvas woven fire hose of a trade mark consisting of three lines of colour—two blue lines with a red line between them of about one-half inch in width. It was proposed that this mark should be woven into the hose and extend throughout its whole length. The Registrar refused to proceed with the registration on the grounds, first, that a coloured line woven into hose could not be a registrable trade mark; and secondly, that the mark was not distinctive. The applicants appealed to the Court :—Held, that the mark as shewn upon the application form —namely, three lines of colour—would not be adapted to distinguish the goods of the applicants from those of other persons. The applicants further proposed that the mark should be registered with the condition "that no protection shall be given by this registration to the mark except when used throughout the whole length of the fabric and substantially of the width shewn on the application form ": —Held, that, having regard to sections 12 and 39 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, it was competent for the Registrar to accept and for the Court to direct him to accept an application subject to a condition which modified the exclusive right given to the proprietor of a trade mark by section 39, and, the applicants submitting to have the condition imposed upon them if the application was ultimately accepted, the Registrar was directed to proceed with the application. Reddaway & Co.'s Application, In re, 83 L. Device of a Cat for Gin — Common to the Trade—Similarity of Marks—Not "calculated to deceive" — Evidence — Statutory Declarations.] — The applicants, spirit merchants, applied to register as a trade mark for gin a label bearing the device of a cat in boots sitting on a snowy ground, with the words "Cordial Old Tom Gin—Snowdrop Trade Mark." The application was opposed by another firm of spirit merchants, who had a registered trade mark for gin consisting of the device of a cat on a barrel, with the words "Old Tom" on the barrel, and underneath the words "Cordial Old Tom" :—Held, that the device of a cat was common to the trade, and that no exclusive right to it could be maintained; that the applicants' particular device of a cat was not "calculated to deceive"; and that their mark ought therefore to be registered. Decision of Neville, J. (31 R. P. C. 481), reversed. Comments on evidence by statutory declaration without cross-examination. Bagots Hutton & Co.'s Trade Mark, In re, 84 L. J. Ch. 918; 113 L. Spanish Brand Name for Cigars Made in Holland "calculated to deceive."]—A brand name does not necessarily by itself indicate the country of origin of the goods which it denotes. Each case must be judged by its own special circumstances. Van der Leeuw's Trade Mark, In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 100; [1912] 1 Ch. 40; 105 L. T. 626; 28 R. P. C. 708; 56 S. J. 53; 28 T. L. R. 35—Parker, J.

Where there was nothing else in the label, nor anything in the get-up of the goods, which would suggest that the goods came from a Spanish-speaking country,—Held, that a Spanish brand name for cigars made in Holland was not calculated to deceive within the meaning of section 11 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905. McGlennon's Application, In re (25 R. P. C. 797), distinguished. Ib.

Similarity with Trade Mark already Registered.]—When an application to register a trade mark is opposed on the ground that it might lead to confusion with a trade mark already registered, the question is not whether there is a similarity between the two marks when placed side by side, but whether, when a person sees one mark apart from the other, he might take it for that other. Sandow's Application, In re, 31 R. P. C. 196; 30 T. L. R. 394—Sargant, J.

"Swankie"—Objection to Registration—Alleged Confusion with Word "Swan."]—On an objection to the registration of the word "swankie" as a trade mark for a detergent in class 47, the objectors being owners of trade marks in classes 47 and 48, consisting of the device of a swan in combination with the word "swan" :—Held, that the objection was not maintainable, as there was no serious danger of any confusion between the two words. Crook's Trade Mark, In re, 110 L. "Schicht"—"Sunlight."]—The applicants, Austrian soap manufacturers, applied to register the German word "Schicht" as a trade mark. The owners of certain trade marks, which consisted of the word "Sunlight," used in connection with soap, opposed the application :—Held, that the application must be refused as the word "Schicht," stamped on soap, would be calculated to deceive persons into taking soap so labelled as and for Sunlight soap. Schicht's Trade Mark, In re, 29 R. Spanish Brand Name on Cigars — Cigars Made in Holland—"Calculated to deceive."]—It cannot be laid down that the mere fact that a Spanish brand name is used on cigars, which are not made in a Spanish-speaking country, is "calculated to deceive" within the meaning of section 11 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905. Van Der Leeuw's Trade Mark, In re, 105 L. Appeal to Court — Service on Parties not Before the Comptroller.]—On an appeal to the Court from a refusal by the Comptroller to proceed with the registration of a trade mark the appellants may serve notice of the appeal on parties who were not before the Comptroller, but whom they know to be likely opponents, and, if such opponents appear, the Court may determine the appeal on reasons put forward by them, even although those reasons were not put before the Comptroller and he gave his decision on different grounds. Neuchatel Asphalte Co.'s Application, 82 L. Registration for Corsets—Subsequent Registration for Bandeaux—Removal of Subsequent Registration.]—The applicants registered the word "Zarna" in class 13 for metal used in corsets. The respondents subsequently, without any knowledge of the applicants' trade mark, registered the same word in class 30 for bandeaux without the knowledge of the applicants. The applicants moved to have the respondent's trade mark expunged:—Held, that the Court was not bound by the classification adopted in the registry, that the respondent's goods were of the same description as those of the applicants, both being articles of clothing, that the respondent's trade mark was calculated to deceive, and that it must be removed from the register. Shreeve's Trade Mark, In re, 31 R. P. C. 24; 30 T. L. R. 164—Eve, J.

Goodwill—Business Suspended—Lease and Trade Effects Sold—Trade Mark Abandoned.]—In 1893 E. P., who had commenced to manufacture preserves at premises at S. Road, Bermondsey, adopted for his trade name the invented style of Sidney Ord & Co. He registered in 1894, under the Trade Marks Act, 1888, a trade mark in which his trade name was a prominent feature, the essential particular of the mark being the written signature and the exclusive use of added matter except as consisting in the name being disclaimed. In 1908 J. M. was, under section 116 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, appointed, and continued under divers orders, receiver of the estate of E. P. The business, including the goodwill, was offered for sale in 1909, but was not then sold. E. P.'s family having objected to the sale of the goodwill, the business was closed, the plant, trade effects, and lease being sold in April, 1910. A circular was sent out stating that the business was being discontinued and the account books were burnt. The defendants sold marmalade which they stated was prepared by the manager of the late firm of Sidney Ord & Co. and under labels in which that name was very prominent. The action to restrain passing off by the defendants and their motion to rectify the register of trade marks by removing E. P.'s trade mark coming on for hearing together,—Held, assuming the plaintiff's right in the label and trade mark were subsisting, the defendants would have infringed the plaintiff's rights; that the plaintiff having ceased manufacturing marmalade for three years, no right of property existed in him which enabled him to restrain the defendants from passing off marmalade under labels or marks containing his assumed trade name. The right to use the trade mark came to an end when the plaintiff's business was discontinued, and it was not competent even if desired to keep the goodwill alive. The trade mark as a derelict trade mark not attached to the goods of the trader who registered it, and without any goodwill to support it, was a danger to the trading community which any trader who desired to adopt the name was as "an aggrieved person" under sections 22 and 35 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, entitled to have removed from the register. Pink v. Sharwood (No. 2), 109 L. T. 594; 30 R. P. C. 725—Eve, J.

"Wincarnis" — "Carvino."] — The plaintiffs were the manufacturers of a medicated wine made from extract of meat and malt wine, which they sold under the name of "Wincarnis," which name was the plaintiffs' registered trade mark. Subsequently, the defendants, who were the manufacturers of another medicated wine made from wine and extract of meat, registered as their trade mark the name "Carvino." On an application by the plaintiffs to have the name "Carvino" removed from the register,—Held, refusing the motion, that the word "Carvino" alone, and without reference to get-up, was not calculated to deceive. Coleman v. Smith, 28 R. P. C. 645; 55 S. J. 649; 27 T. L. R. 533—Swinfen Eady, J. Varied, 81 L. J. Ch. 16; [1911] 2 Ch. 572; 28 T. L. R. 65—C.A.

Bona Fide User.]—Section 37 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, only requires the bona fide user of the trade mark—namely, the registered mark—in connection with the goods for which it is registered; it does not in terms require the mark to be "used as a trade mark," and if the registered mark is bona fide impressed upon the goods there is a bona fide user of the mark in connection with goods within the meaning of the section although the house mark or other matter is added. Andrew v. Kuehnrich, 30 R. P. C. 93; 29 T. L. R. 181—Swinfen Eady, J. Reversed on the evidence, 30 R. P. C. 677; 29 T. L. R. 771—C.A.

The Court, notwithstanding the absence of the respondent, whom the appellant had been unable to serve with notice of the application, made an order under section 37 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, removing a trade mark from the register on the ground that there had been no bona fide user thereof during the five years immediately preceding the application.

Terminations Alike — "Calculated to deceive"—Similarity in Sound of Words.]—The owners of trade marks "Zoegen" and "Ceregen," registered in 1908 and 1909 for medicinal foods for human use, moved to remove from the register the trade mark "Herogen," registered in April, 1912, in respect of a food in class 42, on the ground of similarity in sound of the respective words, the likeness of their terminations, and the liability to goods covered by the trade mark "Herogen" being passed off as their goods: —Held, that, the real question being as to whether the names were so alike phonetically as to be calculated to deceive, not whether a dishonest trader would so use the word as to bring about deception, the articles would be purchased in reliance upon the letters which preceded the common termination, and, these being sufficiently distinctive and the appellant's and respondents' goods appealing to different classes of customers, the application to expunge failed. British Drug Houses' Trade Mark, In re, 107 L. T. 756; 30 R. P. C. 73—Eve, J.

Infringement—Passing off.]—In 1850 the plaintiffs' predecessor began to sell a preparation which he called "Gripe Water," and in 1876 he registered a trade mark which contained those two words. The plaintiffs brought an action against the defendants, first, for infringement of the trade mark "Gripe Water"; and secondly, to restrain the sale of any goods except the plaintiffs' under that name, and the defendants moved to have the trade mark expunged from the register:—Held, that on the evidence the plaintiffs had failed to prove that the words "Gripe Water" now meant the plaintiffs' goods, and therefore they were not entitled to succeed in their claim for passing off, but that the defendants were not entitled to have the trade mark expunged from the register as at the time of registration it was in fact distinctive, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to an injunction to restrain infringement of the trade mark. Woodward, Lim. v. Boulton Macro, Lim.; Woodward, Lim., In re, 85 L. Old Marks—Royal Device—Prince of Wales' Feathers—"Calculated to deceive"—"Person aggrieved."]—The respondents were the proprietors of three old marks in respect of tobacco, two of which were registered in 1876 and the third in 1891, which bore (inter alia) the device of the Prince of Wales' Feathers and the words "Prince of Wales' Smoking Mixture." At the date of registration of one of the marks its then owner did supply tobacco to Marlborough House, but since the accession of the present King no warrants had been granted by the Prince of Wales. All warrants granted by any prince determine on his death or accession. The Royal Warrant Holders' Association, a corporate body of persons holding Royal warrants, under authority to take proceedings, moved to expunge these marks from the register as being "calculated to deceive" by leading to the belief that the respondents held warrants from the Prince and supplied the smoking mixture to him:—Held, by Eve, J., that the applicants were not "persons aggrieved" within section 35 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, and that the marks were not "calculated to deceive" within section 11 of the Act, and that if they were they were lawful marks when registered, and had been used continuously and honestly ever since registration and ought not to be removed from the register. Held, on appeal, without deciding whether or not the applicants were "persons aggrieved" within section 35 of the Act, that the marks were not "calculated to deceive" within section 11 of the Act. Imperial Tobacco Co.'s Trade Marks, In re, 84 L. Per Vaughan Williams, L.J.: Section 11 of the Trade Marks Act, 1905, is a general section, and enables any person who in fact has a trade mark in use, though not a registered one, to oppose registration of a trade mark which has a resemblance to his trade mark so great as to be calculated to deceive. Andrew v. Kuehnrich, 30 R. False Trade Description — Filling with Bass's Beer Bottles Embossed with Name of Another Brewery — Selling Beer as Bass's Beer.]—The appellant, who was a wine merchant, bottled Bass's beer into bottles embossed with the name of the F. Brewery Co., and sold the beer as Bass's beer, after affixing the ordinary Bass's labels to the bottles:—Held, that the appellant had under section 5, sub-section 1 (c) of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, applied a trade description which was a false trade description to the beer in the bottle, and had therefore committed an offence under the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. Stone v. Burn, 80 L. —— "British Tarragona Wine."]—The respondents sold as "Fine British Tarragona Wine" a mixture of 85 per cent. of wine made in England and 15 per cent. of Mistella, a form of Tarragona wine made and used solely for the purpose of blending and not suitable for consumption by itself:—Held, a false trade description within section 3, sub-section 1 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. Holmes v. Pipers, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 285; [1914] 1 K.B. 57; 109 L. T. 930; 78 J. P. 37; 12 L. G. R. 25; 23 Cox C.C. 689; 30 T. L. R. 28—D.

False Trade Description—False Name.]—In the prosecution of a trader charged with selling goods under a false trade description—namely, selling beer in bottles embossed with the name of another trader.—Held, that the use of a false name is not a species of the offence of using a false trade description, but is a separate offence; and that the complaint should have charged the accused with selling goods under a false name. Held also (Lord Skerrington dissentiente), that sub-sections (b) and (c) of section 3, sub-section 3 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, are to be read disjunctively, the word "and" between them being equivalent to "or"; and, accordingly, that it is an offence to use a name which contravenes sub-section (b), although it does not also contravene sub-section (c). Lipton v. Reg. (32 L. "Norwegian Skipper Sardines"—"Trade description . . . lawfully and generally applied to goods."]—Section 18 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, provides that "Where, at the passing of this Act, a trade description is lawfully and generally applied to goods of a particular class, or manufacture by a particular method, to indicate the particular class or method of manufacture of such goods, the provisions of this Act with respect to false trade descriptions shall not apply to such trade description when so applied: . . .":—Held, that, in order that a trade description may be generally applied to goods of a particular class or method of manufacture, it is not sufficient that the description should be applied to the goods by those who sell them; it is necessary that the description should be applied to the goods both by the sellers of the goods and the members of the public who purchase them, and that the members of the public should be aware of the meaning attaching to such trade description; and, further, that, in order that a trade description may be lawfully applied to goods, such user must be lawful in the widest sense of that word, and not merely that the user does not amount to an infringement of the criminal law. Lemy v. Watson, 84 L. J. K.B. 1999; [1915] 3 K.B. 731; 13 L. G. R. 1323; 32 R. P. C. 508; 31 T. L. R. 612—D.

The respondents sold Norwegian sprats or brisling in oil, packed in tins, under the name of "Norwegian Skipper Sardines," or "Skipper Sardines." The word "sardine" was introduced into this country from France to denote an immature pilchard processed in one of a variety of ways, usually in oil in tins. The sprat or brisling is a different fish from the pilchard, but such fish had been prepared in Norway and sold in England under the name of "Norwegian Sardines," and under no other name, some years previous to the passing of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887. Those in the trade who dealt in them knew that the fish sold as Norwegian sardines were different from the French sardines, but the members of the public, who purchased the Norwegian sardines were not aware of that fact:—Held, that the respondents had applied a false trade description to the goods within the meaning of section 2 of the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, and that they were not protected by section 18 of that Act, because they had not shewn that the term "Norwegian Skipper Sardines" was generally and lawfully applied in 1887 to Norwegian sprats or brisling packed in oil in tins. Ib.

D. DESIGNS.

Subject-matter—Validity—Drawing Shewing Principle of Construction.]—In an action for infringement brought by the proprietor of a design, registered under section 49 of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, and consisting of a drawing of a cross-section of a vehicle wheel on the longitudinal central plane, shewing the hub and rim of the wheel of a motor car and the cross-sectional arrangement of three sets of spokes, the novelty claimed being in the disposition of a tyre rim in relation to the hub and in the cross-sectional arrangement of three sets of spokes, the infringement alleged was the application of the design, or of a fraudulent or obvious imitation thereof, to a motor-car wheel made and sold by the defendants. The Judge found the following facts: First, that the design was a conventional drawing, such as would be used by an engineer to indicate how the wheel was to be constructed qua the disposition of rim in relation to hub and qua the arrangement of the spokes, and did not purport to shew what would in fact be seen if the wheel were cut on the longitudinal central plane; secondly, that it would be easy for a competent mechanician to construct from the drawing a number of wheels whose configuration would have little in common, except the disposition of the rim in relation to the hub and the cross-sectional arrangement of the spokes; thirdly, that from every wheel so constructed a draughtsman with a competent knowledge of the conception of mechanical drawings, if asked to draw a cross-section on the longitudinal central plane shewing this disposition of rim in relation to hub and the cross-sectional arrangement of the spokes, would inevitably arrive at the plaintiff's drawing; and that in that sense it might be said that the design was visible to the eye after its application to vehicle wheels, though the eye would have to be an eye trained in mechanical matters; fourthly, that the drawing made on these lines from the defendants' alleged infringing wheel, if judged from appearance alone and without a view to the method of construction involved, shewed such substantial differences from the plaintiff's drawn design as to preclude it being an imitation of the plaintiff's design:—Held, upon these findings of fact, following Moody v. Tree (9 R. P. C. 333) and Bayer's Design, In re (24 R. P. C. 65; 25 R. P. C. 56), either that the registration was bad as an attempt to protect a mode of construction; or, in the alternative, that there had been no infringement. Pugh v. Riley Cycle Co., 81 L. J. Ch. 476; [1912] 1 Ch. 613; 106 L. T. 592; 29 R. P. C. 196; 28 T. L. R. 249—Parker, J.

Although a conception or suggestion as to a mode or principle of construction is not registrable, yet, as the mode or principle of construction of an article may affect its shape or configuration, the conception of such a mode or principle of construction may well lead to a conception as to the shape or configuration of the completed article, and a conception so arrived at may, if sufficiently definite, be registered under the Act. Ib.

Quære, whether the drawing is registrable where the conception thus arrived at is not a definite conception as to shape or configuration, but a conception only as to some general characteristic of shape or configuration necessitated by the mode or principle of construction, the definite shape or configuration being, consistently with such mode or principle, capable of variation within wide limits. Ib.

Alleged Infringement—Novelty and Originality.]—It is the duty of a Court of Justice to decide cases according to the truth and fact, and it is not bound to accept any fact as true merely because it is admitted between the parties to the action. Therefore where, in an action to restrain the infringement of a registered design, the defendant has admitted the novelty and originality of the plaintiff's design the Court is not precluded from enquiring whether the design is in fact novel and original, and, if it is of opinion that it is not so, giving judgment for the defendant on that ground. Gramophone Co. v. Magazine Holder Co., 104 L. T. 259; 28 R. P. C. 221—H.L. (E.)

Per Earl of Halsbury: The principles by which the Court is guided in dealing with patent cases are not applicable to the cases of registered designs, and a design must be an exact reproduction of the registered design to come within the Act; a merely colourable alteration is sufficient to take it out of the Act. Ib.

Agreement to Advance Money to Meet Expenses Necessary to Prevent Infringement—Infringement Stopped—No Money Advanced—Failure of Consideration—Agreement Void.]—The plaintiff, while in the employ of the defendant company, registered a design for a patent wreath band, which design was subsequently infringed by another company. The plaintiff then entered into an agreement with his employers that, in consideration of their paying the necessary expenses to bring an action to stop this infringement, he should give them the sole right of sale, they paying him the same royalty as heretofore. No expenses were in fact incurred, but the plaintiff was subsequently discharged by the defendant company, and brought this action against them for an injunction to restrain them from continuing to use and sell his patent wreath band. The defendants pleaded the agreement:—Held, that as the defendants had not in fact been called upon to advance the money, the consideration for the agreement had wholly failed, and the agreement was accordingly void, and the plaintiff was entitled to the injunction asked for and to an enquiry as to damages. Templeman v. Cocquerel, 57 S. J. 405—Neville, J.

Infringement — Application to Take Place Abroad.]—It is an offence against section 60, sub-section 1 (a) of the Patents and Designs Act, 1907, to do anything in the United Kingdom with a view to enable a registered design to be applied for purposes of sale to any article in a class in which it is registered without the consent of the registered proprietor, although the intended application is to take place outside the United Kingdom. Haddon & Co. v. Bannerman, 81 L. —— Judgment by Consent — Motion or Summons.]—In actions for the infringement of registered designs, or of patents, or of trade marks it is desirable that there should be some publicity given to the order of the Court. Accordingly, where defendants had consented to judgment in respect of an infringement of the plaintiffs' registered design:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to the costs of moving for judgment in open Court, and not merely to such costs as would have been incurred had the application been made on summons in chambers. Smith & Jones, Lim. v. Service, Reeve & Co., 83 L. The Court has therefore jurisdiction to entertain such an action. Ib.

Agreement to Provide Benefits — Enforcement—Provision of Sick Benefits to Dependant of Member.] — The rules of a trade union, which could be altered at the will of the general council, provided that, if a member became insane, his wife, family, or parent, if dependent upon him, should be eligible to receive sick benefit for one year. In an action at the instance of the wife of an insane member against the union for recovery of sick benefit, the defenders maintained, first, that, as the rules could be altered, the pursuer had no indefeasible jus quæsitum tertio, and so had no title to sue; and secondly, that, as this was an action to enforce an agreement to provide benefits to members, it could not be entertained by the Court :—Held, first, that, as the agreement embodied in the rules, though revocable, had not been revoked when the pursuer's claim arose, she had a good title to sue; and secondly, that, as the agreement was not one for the provision of benefits to a member, but to the dependant of a member, the jurisdiction of the Court was not excluded. Love v. Amalgamated Society of Lithographic Printers, [1912] S. C. 1078—Ct. of Sess.

Society Illegal at Common Law—Rules of Society — Benefit Funds of Society — Separability of Lawful from Unlawful Purposes.]—In an action by the widow of a member of the respondent society for sick and superannuation benefits to which her husband had become entitled,—Held, on various grounds, that the action was not maintainable—by the Lord Chancellor because it was an action, made unlawful by section 4 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, to enforce a contract for the benefit of members; by Lord Macnaghten, that some of the rules were unreasonable, oppressive, and destructive of individual liberty; by Lord Atkinson, that the action was a common law action, and that in such an action the society could not be sued in its registered name nor as represented by its trustees; and by Lord Shaw and Lord Robson, that the lawful and unlawful purposes of the society could not be separated from each other. Russell v. Amalgamated Society of Carpenters and Joiners, 81 L. J. K.B. 619; [1912] A.C. 421; 106 L. T. 433; 56 S. J. 342; 28 T. L. R. 276—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (79 L. J. K.B. 507; [1910] 1 K.B. 506) affirmed. Ib.

An action was brought by a member against the defendant trade union to recover an amount in name of sick benefit :—Held, that, apart from the provisions of the Trade Union Act, 1871, the trade union was an illegal association, as its rules were in restraint of trade, and that the action could not be maintained. Thomas v. Portsmouth Ship Construction Association, 28 T. L. R. 372—D.

Trade Dispute—Acts Done in Furtherance or Contemplation of.]—The plaintiff, who was a bandmaster, brought an action against the defendants, who were officials of a trade union, for inducing persons who had been engaged to perform at a concert to refuse to perform at the agreed rates. It was alleged that this was effected by threats of penalisation by the union and by the posting of pickets. The defendants relied on section 3 of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, and the Judge told the jury that this defence was dishonest, and the jury found that the defendants' acts were not done in furtherance or contemplation of a trade dispute :—Held, on the facts, that the defendants' acts were done in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, that the Judge's statement to the jury was irrelevant, and that the defendants were entitled to judgment. Dallimore v. Williams, 58 S. J. 470; 30 T. L. R. 432—C.A.

"Trade dispute."] — A "trade dispute" within the meaning of that expression in the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, is not confined to a dispute between an employer and his workmen or between the workmen themselves. A person may be entitled to the protection of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, notwithstanding that the act done by him was not done entirely in furtherance of a trade dispute, or that in doing the act his mind was not altogether free from malice. Ib.

A dispute between an employer and other employers in the same line of business is not a "trade dispute" within the meaning of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, and it does not become a trade dispute merely because the officials of a workmen's trade union choose to assist one side or the other. Therefore, where an employer refused to join an association of employers, which the officials of a workmen's trade union thought would be for the advantage of the workmen employed, and such officials thereupon induced his workmen, with whom he had no dispute whatever, to break their contracts and leave his employment, in order to force him to join the association,—Held, that the officials of the trade union were not protected by the provisions of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, in an action for conspiracy. Larkin v. Long, 84 L. Decision of the Court of Appeal in Ireland ([1914] 2 Ir. R. 285) affirmed. Ib.

—— Effect of Rules of Trade Union Containing Provision for Parliamentary Fund.]—In an action by the plaintiffs for damages and for an injunction against the defendant trade union and the defendant T., who was an agent for the trade union, alleging that the defendants had wrongfully procured or induced the plaintiffs' employers to cease to employ them, the Judge dismissed the action on the ground that there was a trade dispute and that the defendant trade union was protected by section 4 of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, and that as regards the defendant T. he was protected by section 3 of the Act. On appeal,—Held, that the Judge was right in dismissing the action. The fact that the rules of a trade union make provision for the formation of a Parliamentary fund in the manner held illegal in Amalgamated Railway Servants' Society v. Osborne (79 L. J. Ch. 87; [1910] A.C. 87) does not have the effect of taking the trade union out of the protection of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906. Gaskell v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation, 56 S. J. 719; 28 T. L. R. 518—C.A.

—— Registered Name—Right to be Sued in.]—Section 4 of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, does not prevent proceedings from being taken against a trade union by a member in respect of (a) misapplication of the funds of the union, and (b) illegal expulsion, such proceedings being founded in contract. Parr v. Lancashire and Cheshire Miners' Federation, 82 L. J. Ch. 193; [1913] 1 Ch. 366; 108 L. T. 446; 29 T. L. R. 235—Neville, J.

Certificate of Registration.]—Where one of the objects of a trade union is declared to be illegal, its certificate of registration under section 6 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, can still be relied on, unless and until it has been cancelled in accordance with the provisions of section 8 of the Trade Union Act Amendment Act, 1876. Ib.

Unregistered Trade Union — Representative Action.]—An unregistered trade union can be sued in a representative action, and where its president, vice-president, secretary, and treasurer are sued they may be taken sufficiently to represent the whole body for the purposes of the action. Ib.

—— Alteration of Rules — Whether Ultra Vires.]—By the rules of a trade union it was provided that a delegate meeting should not have power to alter any rule unless notice of the proposed alteration had been given:—Held, that this did not mean that a rule could not be altered unless notice of the identical alteration ultimately adopted had been given; it merely meant that notice of an intention to alter the rule must be given, and then the delegate meeting could by discussion alter it in the way they might there and then determine. Amalgamated Society of Engineers v. Jones, 29 T. L. R. 484—Bailhache, J.

Expulsion of Member—Action to Restore—Construction of Rules—Restraint of Trade—Right to Maintain Action.]—The plaintiff, formerly a member of a trade union society, was expelled therefrom by a resolution of the executive committee. He now brought this action alleging by his statement of claim that he had been unjustly expelled with a view to punish him for having successfully invoked the aid of the Courts to prevent the application of the funds of the society for illegal purposes, and claiming in substance by way of relief his restoration to membership of the society. The defendant society by way of defence contended that no cause of action was disclosed by the statement of claim, and pleaded the Trade Union Act, 1871, s. 4; and the point of law so raised was set down for hearing under Order XXV. rule 2. The rules of the society did not provide that when a strike was sanctioned by the executive committee every member was bound to strike, but provided that strike notices might be issued to the members for signature, and the strike was to go forward only if the notices were signed by two-thirds of the members, and there was nothing in the rules to prevent men who had struck from resuming work if they thought fit:—Held, that (assuming that the rules of the society were in restraint of trade so as to render it an illegal association at common law independently of the Trade Union Act, 1871) the action was still maintainable, since the relief claimed did not fall within the provisions of section 4, sub-section 3 (a). Rigby v. Connol (49 L. J. Ch. 328; 14 Ch. D. 482) and Chamberlain's Wharf, Lim. v. Smith (69 L. J. Ch. 783; [1900] 2 Ch. 605) considered. Osborne v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, 80 L. J. Ch. 315; [1911] 1 Ch. 540; 104 L. T. 267; 27 T. L. R. 289—C.A.

Held also, that, on the true construction of the society's rules, they were not in restraint of trade so as to render the society illegal at common law. Ib.

A society is not to be found illegal by reason of difficulties in interpreting the rules, but by finding in sufficiently plain language that there are in the rules provisions so in restraint of trade as to render the society illegal at common law. Ib.

—— Breach of Contract Contained in Rules—Claim for Damages — Right to Maintain Action.]—A member of a trade union who has been illegally expelled by the committee under the rules of the association can maintain an action against the trade union for a declaration that he was still a member and for an injunction, such action not being barred by section 4 of the Trade Union Act, 1871, but he cannot recover damages for breach of the contract contained in the rules, since the committee who were responsible for breaking the contract were acting as agents for the plaintiff equally with his fellow members. Judgment of the Divisional Court (84 L. J. K.B. 557) varied on the question of damages. Kelly v. National Society of Operative Printers' Assis- tants, 84 L. J. K.B. 2236; 59 S. J. 716; 31 T. L. R. 632—C.A.

—— Unlawful Combination — Branches and Delegates.]—A person whose entrance fee and contributions to a trade union have been acknowledged by a responsible official and who has received a card of membership, is entitled to be a member of the union, and cannot, in the absence of express rules, be expelled by an arbitrary resolution of the executive. Luby v. Warwickshire Miners Association, 81 L. J. Ch. 741; [1912] 2 Ch. 371; 107 L. T. 452; 56 S. J. 670; 28 T. L. R. 509—Neville, J.

Implied Repeal of Statute by Conflicting Provisions of Later Act.] — In view of the recognition of trade unions by numerous Acts of Parliament and by the Courts, they cannot, even where their organisation embraces affiliated branches and delegates, be considered "unlawful combinations" or "criminal associations" within the meaning of the Unlawful Societies Act, 1799, or the Seditious Meetings Act, 1817. The applicability to them of these statutes is impliedly repealed by the later Acts of the Legislature. Ib.

Funds — Purchase of Shares — Newspaper Company — Promotion of Policy of Political Party—Illegality of Purchase.]—The rules of a registered trade union provided that its objects were the support of members in cases of sickness, accident, and unemployment, the regulation of the relations between workmen, the assistance of other similar societies, and the formation of a fund for cases of distress, and that all moneys subscribed by members should be held by the trustees in trust for the members generally. In accordance with instructions from the general council of the union the trustees applied and paid for shares in a company formed to publish a newspaper for the purpose of promoting the policy of a political party called the Labour Party. In an action by a member against the union and the trustees,—Held, that the application of the funds of the union for the above purpose was unauthorised and ultra vires, and that the trustees must refund the money to the union. Bennett v. National Amalgamated Society of Operative House and Ship Painters and Decorators, 31 T. L. R. 203—Warrington, J.

The executive council of a registered trade union applied a portion of the funds of the union in subscribing for shares in a company formed for the purpose of publishing a political newspaper. The transaction was not really an investment, but a contribution towards the expenses of publishing the newspaper :—Held, following Bennett v. National Amalgamated Society of Operative House and Ship Painters and Decorators (31 T. L. R. 203), that this application of the funds was not within any of the objects of the trade union as defined by its rules, and that therefore the members of the council were personally liable to repay the amount to the union. Carter v. United Society of Boilermakers, 60 S. Payment by Union in Accordance with Rules to Member—Agreement by Member to Repay in Certain Events—Claim for Repayment—Agreement for Application of Funds to Provide Benefits to Members — Proceeding Instituted with Object of Directly Enforcing Agreement.] —The defendant, a member of a trade union, having met with a severe accident at his work, received from the trade union, in accordance with their rules, a sum of 100*l.*, and by a written agreement which by the rules he had to execute he agreed to repay that amount in the event of his returning to his trade. The agreement so executed recited the rules under which the payment was made and under which it was repayable, and after an acknowledgment by the defendant of the receipt of the 100*l.* and an agreement by him to repay it in the said event, empowered the plaintiffs, the officers of the trade union, to sue for it if it was not paid on the happening of that event. The defendant having returned to his trade, and the 100*l.* not having been repaid by him, the plaintiffs sued for its recovery :—Held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., and Buckley, L.J.; Kennedy, L.J., dissenting), that the agreement sought to be enforced was one for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits to members within section 4, sub-section 3 (a) of the Trade Union Act, 1871; and that by virtue of that section the action was not maintainable. Baker v. Ingall, 81 L. J. K.B. 553; [1912] 3 K.B. 106; 105 L. T. 934; 56 S. J. 122; 28 T. L. R. 104—C.A.

Decision of the Divisional Court (80 L. J. K.B. 699; [1911] 2 K.B. 132) reversed. Ib.

The rules of a trade union provided that a member permanently disabled should receive the sum of 100*l.*, but that if he should resume work he must refund the 100*l.*, and that at the time of receiving the benefit he must sign an agreement to refund it should he resume work. A member of the union received a payment of 100*l.* in respect of permanent disablement, and, in accordance with these rules, he signed a memorandum of agreement undertaking to refund that sum if he resumed work. The union, averring that the injured man had resumed work, brought an action for recovery of the 100*l.*, and founded on the memorandum of agreement. The defender maintained that the action was rendered incompetent by section 4 of the Trade Union Act, 1871 :—Held (diss. Lord Johnston), that the action was competent in respect that the agreement sued on was not one of the agreements specified in section 4 of the Act, and, in particular, was not an agreement for the application of the funds of the union to provide benefits to members within the meaning of sub-section 3 (a) of that section. Wilkie v. King, [1911] S. C. 1310—Ct. of Sess.

Action of Tort—Competency.]—By section 4, sub-section 1 of the Trade Disputes Act, 1906, no action in respect of any tortious act alleged to have been committed by or on behalf of a trade union can be entertained by any Court, whether such tortious act was or was not committed in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute, and under Order XXV. rule 4, such an action may summarily be dismissed.

Slander of Official—Loss to Union—Action by Official — Common Interest.] — An agreement by a trade union to indemnify any of its officers who take proceedings against a slanderer for slander is void on the ground of maintenance. The fact that the slanders complained of injure the trade union as well as the officer does not create a common interest which would justify the trade union in maintaining the action. A common cause is not a common interest. Oram v. Hutt, 83 L. J. Ch. 161; [1914] 1 Ch. 98; 110 L. T. 187; 78 J. P. 51; 58 S. J. 80; 30 T. L. R. 55—C.A.

Costs—Payment by Union—Ultra Vires—Maintenance.]—A trade union is not justified in defraying the costs of legal proceedings by its members whenever an indirect benefit may be expected to result from the proceedings. Alabaster v. Harness (64 L. J. Q.B. 76; [1894] 2 Q.B. 897; [1895] 1 Q.B. 339) considered and followed. Ib.

Threat or Warning to Employer not to Employ Plaintiff.] — The plaintiff, a cigar maker in the employment of a company, sued the defendants, who were in the same employment, for damages and an injunction to restrain them from inducing her employers to cease to employ her. The plaintiff was a member of the Independent Cigar Makers' Union. The defendant B. and the other employees were members of the Cigar Makers' Mutual Association. When the plaintiff entered into the employment B. asked her if she belonged to the association. She replied that she did not. B. said, "You'll have to join next week or we won't work with you." A week later the plaintiff was asked if she had joined, and on her answering in the negative B. said, "You can't work here." The plaintiff replied, "You can't sack me. Mr. Phineas Phillips took me on; he alone can sack me." B. thereupon said, "Then we'll strike." The defendants then went to Mr. Phineas Phillips, who thereafter said to the plaintiff, "My workpeople refuse to work with you, and will go on strike if you don't join; you'll have to go." Mr. Phineas Phillips at the trial stated that B. said that the plaintiff had refused to join their union, and that their union instructed them that if she stayed they would not stay there. He said that he felt compelled to discharge her, as he did not care to see his employees go out. The County Court Judge held that there was no evidence of a threat to go to the jury, and nonsuited the plaintiff:—Held, that the County Court Judge was right in so holding. Santen v. Busnach, 57 S. Intimidation—Right of Police to Prefer Information—Liability of Persons Conniving at Acts of Intimidation.] — The appellants were charged on an information preferred by the respondent, a police superintendent, with having, with a view to compel one A. to abstain from working at the L. motor works where A. had a legal right to work, intimidated him by assembling in large numbers and throwing eggs at him when he was on his way from work. The evidence was that while A. was returning from the L. works some of the appellants, each of whom was wearing a white ribbon, and all of whom had recently been working at the L. works, but were no longer in such employment, threw eggs, two of which struck A. Some of the appellants were not proved to have thrown eggs, but they were with the appellants who did so. There were shouts of "Blacklegs" and "Dirty scabs." A. had not authorised the respondent to lay the information, but he stated that he would have proceeded if the police had not done so. The Justices convicted the appellants:—Held, first, that the respondent was entitled to lay the information; and secondly, that all the appellants were rightly convicted, notwithstanding that the evidence only shewed that two of them had thrown eggs at A. Young v. Peck, 107 L. Lease—Contract for Repairs between Lessor and Contractor—Negligence of Contractor—Liability to Lessee—Damages—Derailment of Tramcar—Compensation Paid to Injured Passengers—Right of Lessee to Recover.]—The plaintiff company were the assignees of a lease of a tramway granted by the corporation of a borough. Under the lease the repairs of the tramway were to be executed by the corporation at the cost of the company, and an agreement was entered into between the corporation and the plaintiffs which provided that facilities should be afforded enabling the company to maintain the service of tramcars during the execution of the works, and that the corporation should insert in the contract to be entered into by them a provision imposing upon the contractor responsibility for all claims resulting from accident sustained by the company from the execution of the works. The corporation entered into an agreement with the defendant for the relaying of the track, by which the defendant agreed to indemnify the corporation and to be responsible for all damage arising out of the execution of the work. The plaintiffs were not parties to this agreement. Owing to the negligent manner in which the work was carried out by the defendant's servants, one of the plaintiffs' tramcars, while passing along the tramway, was derailed and fell into the excavation, and several of the passengers were injured. In an action brought by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendant the sums paid as compensation to the injured passengers,—Held, that the defendant had injuriously affected both the proprietary rights of the plaintiff company as lessees of the tramway and also their rights of passage on the highway, and was therefore liable. Held, further, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the amounts paid by them as compensation to the passengers. Birmingham City Tramways Co. v. Law, 80 L. Compulsory Purchase of Undertaking by Local Authority — Previous Assignment of Undertaking by Promoters to Company—Consent of Board of Trade to Assignment.]—In 1895 the promoters of an undertaking for the construction of tramways in the borough of West Hartlepool obtained a provisional order which was confirmed by an Act passed in 1895. By that Act the defendant corporation had the option reserved to them of acquiring the undertaking after the expiration of fourteen years. In 1896 the promoters entered into an agreement with the Electric Traction (Pioneer) Co., Lim. to sell the undertaking to them; and a further agreement made in October, 1896, purported to sell the undertaking, with the concurrence of that company, to the plaintiff company. Neither of these agreements was formally approved by the Board of Trade in pursuance of a provision in the Confirmation Act, that no sale or assignment of the undertaking should be valid without the approval of that Board signified in writing by their secretary or assistant secretary. The tramway was completed in March, 1897, and in January, 1910, the defendant corporation gave notice to the promoters to sell the undertaking to them. The matter was referred to an arbitrator, who assessed the value at 12,963*l*. In an action by the company "and all others the promoters of the Hartlepool Electric Tramways Order, 1895," to recover the sum awarded, the corporation contended that they could make no valid payment to the original promoters, who had no legal title to the tramways constructed by the company, nor could they pay anything to the company, since the assignment to them had not been duly approved by the Board of Trade:—Held, that the assignment of the rights of the promoters, who had not constructed the tramways, did not require the approval of the Board of Trade, and that the Board had by certain documents, signed by an assistant secretary of the Board, sufficiently recognised the company as the transferees of the undertaking. Hartlepool Electric Tramways Co. v. West Hartlepool Corporation, 9 L. Statutory Powers — Corporation Licence — Consent of the Board of Trade—Adjacent Districts.] — The Eccles Corporation, by the Eccles Corporation Act, 1901, were empowered to lay down, use, and maintain tramways within their district and to enter into agreements with owners of tramways in adjacent districts with regard to the construction, working, use, and management by the contracting parties of their respective tramways, subject to the approval of the Board of Trade. Under an agreement, approved by the Board of Trade, made between the Eccles and the Salford Corporations, the Eccles tramways were constructed by the Salford Corporation, and the latter were to be entitled to a lease thereof for thirty-five years. By the Salford Corporation Act, 1899, the corporation tramways, unless the subject or context otherwise required, were defined to include any tramways demised to or worked by the corporation, and the Salford Corporation had powers of entering into working agreements with regard to their tramways with adjacent tramway owners similar to those in the Eccles Act, save that there was no provision as to the approval of the Board of Trade. Whilst the agreement was current, the Salford Corporation, without the leave of the Eccles Corporation or of the Board of Trade, granted to the South Lancashire Tramway Co. a revocable licence to use a portion of the Eccles tramways adjoining the tramway company's system:—Held, that the Eccles tramways were not a portion of the Salford tramways within the definition clause of the Salford Act, because the subject or context did otherwise require, and that the licence was ultra vires, no consent of the Board of Trade having been obtained as required by the Eccles Act. Salford Corporation v. Eccles Corporation, 81 L. J. Ch. 561; [1912] A.C. 465; 106 L. T. 577; 76 J. P. 249; 10 L. G. R. 341; 56 S. J. 428; 28 T. L. R. 343—H.L. (E.)

By-law Requiring Passenger to Leave Tramcar by the "hindermost" Platform — Car Stationary at Terminus.]—A by-law required passengers to leave the tramcars by the "hindermost" platform. When a car had arrived at and was stationary at the terminus, the respondent left the car by the platform which, during the journey just made by him on the car, had been the foremost platform:—Held, that the word "hindermost" must be construed with reference to the particular passenger and the journey on which he was engaged, and that "hindermost" with reference to the respondent meant hindermost with reference to the journey he had just taken, and that in leaving the car as he did he had offended against the by-law. Monkman v. Stickney, 82 L. J. K.B. 992; [1913] 2 K.B. 377; 109 L. T. 142; 77 J. P. 368; 11 L. G. R. 612; 23 Cox C.C. 474—D.

Passenger Travelling without Paying Requisite Fare—Proof of Fraud.]—Section 51 of the Tramways Act, 1870, enacts that any person who, "having paid his fare for a certain distance, knowingly and wilfully proceeds in any" tramway car "beyond such distance, and does not pay the additional fare for the additional distance" shall be liable to a penalty :– Held, that a person cannot be convicted of an offence under this section unless it appears that he acted with a fraudulent intention. Nimmo v. Lanarkshire Tramways Co., [1912] S. C. (J.) 23—Ct. of Just.

—— Passenger in Tramcar Suspected of Avoiding Payment of Fare—Ejected by Conductor—Action for Assault—Liability of Tramway Authority.]—The conductor of a tramcar belonging to the respondents, a tramway authority, in thinking that the appellant, a passenger in the car, was attempting to avoid payment of his fare, ejected him from the car with such force that he suffered injuries. The appellant brought an action in the County Court against the respondents, claiming damages for the assault committed on him by their servant. The respondents denied their liability on the ground that sections 51 and 52 of the Tramways Act, 1870, and their by-laws gave them power to detain and bring before a magistrate, who might impose a fine on a person who had committed the offence alleged against the appellant, but that they had no power to eject such a person from a car, and could not therefore delegate the power to eject him to their servant, who had acted outside the scope of his authority :—Held, on appeal, that the remedies given to the respondents by sections 51 and 52 of the Tramways Act, 1870, being in addition to, and not exclusive of, their common law right as owners of the tramcar to eject a trespasser from their property, using no more force than might be necessary for the purpose, the respondents had power to eject from one of their cars a person who refused to pay his fare; that they could delegate that power to a servant; that the tort of the conductor was consequently committed in the course of his service; and that the appellant was therefore entitled to recover his claim against the respondents. Whittaker v. London County Council, 84 L. J. K.B. 1446; [1915] 2 K.B. 676; 113 L. T. 544; 79 J. P. 437; 13 L. G. R. 950; 31 T. L. R. 412—D.

The plaintiff claimed damages against the L.C.C. for having been injured by one of their tramway conductors, who angrily threw him off a tramcar. At the trial the defendants, who called no evidence, submitted that, inasmuch as the powers of the Council were derived from their by-laws, which did not, in terms at any rate, give power to eject a passenger for non-payment of fare, the conductor, who presumably ejected the plaintiff for that reason (although in fact he was willing and able to pay his fare), had acted from private spite and malice, for the consequences of which they were not liable. Neither the plaintiff nor the defendants were able to trace the car nor identify the conductor. Ridley, J., nonsuited the plaintiff, and the Court of Appeal upheld his decision :—Held, that, under the by-laws, a passenger who does not pay, or shews no intention of paying, his fare can be treated as a trespasser and ejected with the use of reasonable force. That it was a question for the jury to decide what was the motive in this case which prompted the conductor to eject the plaintiff; and there must be a new trial. Whittaker v. London County Council (84 L. Tramcar—Upper Compartment Covered in —"Inside"—Specified Number of Passengers — Greater Number Conveyed in Car.] — By section 13 of the Railway Passenger Duty Act, 1842, "no stage carriage shall be allowed to carry at one time a greater number of passengers in the whole, or in the inside or on the outside thereof, than the same is constructed to carry according to the regulation of the Act; . . ." And by section 15 if a greater number of passengers is conveyed at any one time, in, upon, or about any stage carriage, a penalty is imposed upon the driver and conductor. By section 27 of the London County Council (Tramways and Improvements) Act, 1913, "Notwithstanding anything to the contrary contained in any Act . . . the Council may . . . on special occasions carry inside any carriage used by them on any tramways an additional number of passengers not exceeding one-third of the number of inside passengers which such carriage is licensed to contain." The respondent was the conductor of a tramcar which was constructed to carry passengers in two compartments, both of which were covered in. The car was constructed to carry in the lower compartment thirty passengers, and in the upper forty-four passengers. Upon an occasion, which was a "special occasion" within the meaning of section 27 of the Act of 1913, the number of passengers conveyed in the upper compartment was forty-eight. On an information charging the respondent with having conveyed in, upon, and about a stage carriage a greater number of passengers than the carriage was constructed to carry, the magistrate held that the word "inside" in section 27 of the Act of 1913 included both the lower and the upper compartments of the car, and dismissed the information :—Held, that under the two enactments "inside" must be treated as correlative with the lower compartment, and "outside" as correlative with the upper compartment, and that the respondent had therefore committed an offence under sections 13 and 15 of the Act of 1842. Phesse v. Fisher, 84 L. To Land — Justification — Necessity — Act Done in Preservation of Sporting Rights — Setting Fire to Heather—Reasonable Necessity —Actual Necessity.]—To justify a trespass on the ground that intervention was necessary in order to prevent destruction of property, it need not be shewn that if the intervention had not taken place the property would have been destroyed or injured; it is sufficient to shew that the intervention was in the circumstances, at the time when it took place, in fact reasonably necessary. Cope v. Sharpe, 81 L. J. K.B. 346; [1912] 1 K.B. 496; 106 L. T. 56; 56 S. J. 187; 28 T. L. R. 157—C.A.

The plaintiff, who was a landowner, let the shooting rights over a part of his land to a sporting tenant. A serious heath fire having broken out on that part of the plaintiff's land, the defendant, who was the bailiff and head gamekeeper of the sporting tenant, with the view of protecting his master's property, set fire to patches of heather between the main fire and a covert in which his master's pheasants were being preserved, in order that the main fire when it reached the bare patches so caused should have nothing to feed on and should thus die out. The fire was in fact extinguished independently of what the defendant so did. The plaintiff having brought an action against the defendant claiming damages for trespass and an injunction, the jury found in answer to questions left to them—first, that the method adopted by the defendant was not in fact necessary for the protection of his master's property; secondly, that it was reasonably necessary in the circumstances:—Held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), that the meaning of the findings of the jury was not merely that the defendant bona fide believed what he did to be necessary, but that, although in the result it turned out to have been unnecessary, it was in fact, at the time when the defendant did it, reasonably necessary in the circumstances. Ib.

—— Adjoining Land—Incursion of Locusts—Right to Divert on to Neighbour's Land.]—The owner or occupier of land has a right to repel a danger threatening his property and to trespass on his neighbour's land for that purpose, even though the result may be to transfer the danger and consequent mischief from his own to his neighbour's property. Greyvensteyn v. Hattingh, 80 L. J. P.C. 158; [1911] A.C. 355; 104 L. T. 360; 27 T. L. R. 358—P.C.

—— Adjoining Premises — Excavations — Danger to Plaintiff's Wall—Underpinning by Defendants — Claim for Indemnity.]—The plaintiff was the landlord of certain premises, and the defendants entered into a contract with the Commissioners of Works for the extension of adjoining premises. A clause in the contract provided that the defendants should indemnify the Commissioners against claims for damage, this clause not being limited to damage caused during the progress of the work. The defendants placed beneath the plaintiff's wall a mass of brickwork and concrete, some of which would require to be cut away in the event of the plaintiff desiring to make a cellar. During the excavations there was danger of one of the plaintiff's walls collapsing, and the architect representing the Commissioners ordered the defendants to underpin the wall. The defendants underpinned the wall without the plaintiff's consent, although the danger was not so imminent as to make it reasonably necessary to do the work without it. The plaintiff brought an action of trespass against the defendants, and the latter claimed an indemnity from the Commissioners as third parties:—Held, that the imminence of the danger did not affect the right of the plaintiff to complain of injury to his premises, and that the defendants had not justified the trespass and were liable to pay damages to the plaintiff, but that they were entitled to an indemnity from the Commissioners, as the contract provided that they were to proceed with the work in accordance with the instructions of the Commissioners' architect. Kirby v. Chessum, 79 J. Demand and Refusal to Return Goods after Issue of Writ—Evidence of Prior Conversion.]—The plaintiff's watch was stolen and pledged with a pawnbroker, and was afterwards sold as an unredeemed pledge by public auction by auctioneers at their City auction rooms on the first floor of a building in the City of London. It was subsequently bought by B., a bona fide purchaser, and was afterwards sent to the defendant, a jeweller, from whom it had originally been bought by the plaintiff, for examination. On receipt of the watch from B., the defendant, who recognised the watch, wrote to him informing him that it had been stolen; he also informed the plaintiff of his discovery, and said that B. was willing to give up the watch on being paid the price he had given for it. The plaintiff then through his solicitor made a formal demand for the watch, and, on its being refused, the writ in the action, which had been issued early on the same day, was served on the defendant :—Held (Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), without expressing any opinion on the question of market overt, that upon the facts of the case there was no evidence of a wrongful detention or conversion before the issue of the writ so as to enable the plaintiff to maintain the action. Clayton v. Le Roy, 81 L. Declaration of Trust — Appropriation of Trust Funds—Entries in Account Books—Intention to Create Charge—Equitable Charge—Non-communication to the Cestuis que Trust—Interest in Land — Writing Signed by the Party Enabled to Declare the Trust.] — In order to constitute a good declaration of trust the Court must be satisfied that the declaration of trust purported to be created is irrevocable. Where the declaration of trust is not communicated to any one, that raises a strong inference that it is not irrevocable. Where an interest in land is affected by the declaration of trust the same must be in writing signed by the party by law enabled to declare the trust in order to satisfy section 7 of the Statute of Frauds. Cozens, In re; Green v. Brisley, 82 L. J. Ch. 421; [1913] 2 Ch. 478; 109 L. T. 306; 57 S. J. 687—Neville, J.

A trustee appropriated trust funds. As appeared by his account books after his death, his custom was to insert the date and amount of the appropriation and put a note in the margin of the account indicating that the sum was advanced to himself. On some occasions he also inserted the letters "Ecc" (an abbreviation for "Ecclesbourne," the name of his house), or the words "advanced on equitable deposit." In some of the entries his name or initials were inserted, in others they were not. The entries were for the most part in pencil, and erasures and alterations had been made. It was contended that these entries constituted a good charge by way of declaration of trust of the deceased trustee's house to answer the sums so appropriated. For seventeen out of the twenty years during which the appropriations were taking place the deeds of the trustee's house Ecclesbourne were deposited or mortgaged with other persons. Neither the entries nor the fact of the appropriations were communicated to any one, and the only evidence was the entries in the books :—Held, that they did not constitute a valid declaration of trust. Ib.

Secret Trust—Parol Evidence—Communication to Trustees.]—A testatrix, by her will, appointed the appellant L. and his daughter W. her executors and trustees, and, after leaving money for a charitable bequest, directed that her said trustees and executors should "expend all or any the residue of my estate in such manner as they know to be most in agreement with my desires." There was evidence that the testatrix had been for a long time on very intimate terms of friendship with L. and his family, and that she had told them on more than one occasion that she intended to leave her property to L.'s daughters :—Held, that the evidence was not sufficient to establish a trust in favour of the daughters, and that the residue must go to the testatrix's next-of-kin. Fleetwood, In re; Sidgreaves v. Brewer (49 L. J. Ch. 514; 15 Ch. D. 594), doubted. Le Page v. Gardom, 84 L. J. Ch. 749; 113 L. T. 475; 59 S. J. 599—H.L. (E.)

—— Charitable Gift — Trust for Protection and Benefit of Animals.] — A testatrix appointed C. W. to be one of her executors and trustees, and bequeathed the residue of her estate to him absolutely. It appeared, however, that the testatrix had in her lifetime stated to C. W. that she wished him to apply the residue for the protection and benefit of animals; and that as it would be difficult to draft a will giving him the latitude that she desired, the best method of carrying out her wishes would be to bequeath the residue to C.W. absolutely, leaving the spending thereof, both capital and income, in the way intimated to C. W.'s absolute discretion, relying upon his love of animals :—Held, that the bequest was not an absolute gift to C. W. beneficially, but was subject to a secret trust. Wedgwood, In re; Allen v. Wedgwood, 84 L. J. Ch. 107; [1915] 1 Ch. 113; 112 L. T. 66; 59 S. J. 73; 31 T. L. R. 43—C.A.

Subscriptions for Special Object—Unapplied Surplus—Appropriation of Payments—Resulting Trust for Subscribers.]—A fund was raised by subscription to aid the wounded in the Balkan War, and at the end of the war an unapplied surplus remained of the funds so subscribed, which was distributable among subscribers by way of resulting trust. The accounts shewed that the amount actually subscribed up to November 8, 1912, was the exact amount actually expended in aiding the wounded in the war. It was contended that the rule in Clayton's Case (1 Mer. 572, 608) applied so that those who had subscribed after November 8, 1912, were entitled to be paid back their subscriptions in full out of the surplus :—Held, that the principle of Clayton's Case (1 Mer. 572, 608) had no application to this case, and that subscribers were entitled to such proportion of their subscriptions as the total amount unexpended bore to the total amount subscribed. British Red Cross Balkan Fund, In re; British Red Cross Society v. Johnson, 84 L. —— Property Settled by Father on Daughter's Marriage—No Trusts in Default of Issue—Bequest by Father on Trusts of Settlement—Failure of Trusts.]—A father transferred a sum of stock to the trustees of his daughter's marriage settlement, to be held as part of "the trust estate hereby constituted." There was no declaration of ultimate trusts of the wife's fund in case of the husband dying before the wife and there being no child of the marriage, which events happened. The wife's father during the lifetime of the husband and wife made his will, declaring thereby that his trustees should stand possessed of one-fourth of his residuary estate, referred to in his will as his daughter's "share," upon trust to transfer the same to the trustees of her settlement, to be held by them upon trusts by that settlement declared concerning "the fortune brought into settlement by or on behalf of" his daughter :—Held, that as regarded the stock there was a resulting trust (subject to the life interest of the daughter) in favour of the father, but that the fourth share of his residuary estate had been completely severed from the father's estate and given to the daughter's trustees for her benefit, and that there was an ultimate resulting trust of this share in favour of the daughter. One Cestui que Trust in Disagreement with Trustees—Scheme for Maintenance Ordered by Court — Surviving Husband of Other Cestui que Trust—Appointment of his Solicitor as Co-trustee — Objection to — Court will not Declare Invalid.] — An appointment as new trustee by a surviving trustee of a member of the firm of solicitors who had acted for the trustees in a dispute between them and a cestui que trust is a valid appointment, and although the Court would not itself make such an appointment it will not order the removal of such trustee already appointed. When an administration order has not been made by the Court, but certain specific directions only have been given, such as for a scheme for maintenance, the sanction of the Court to an appointment of new trustees is not required. And the persons having the power of appointment can exercise that power in the ordinary way unless the order made is such that the exercise of the power by the persons entitled to exercise it will interfere with its being carried out by the Court. Cotter, In re; Jennings v. Nye, 84 L. Sole Trustee Appointed by Settlor—Right of Beneficiaries to Appointment of a Second Trustee—Power Reserved to Settlor to Appoint Additional Trustee.]—Where a sole trustee is originally appointed by a settlor or testator there is no absolute right in the beneficiaries to the appointment of a second trustee. Although in many cases the Court would desire to secure for the beneficiaries the protection afforded by a second trustee, there are cases in which the settlor or testator has deliberately elected to commit to a single individual the execution of the trust; and in such cases the Court ought to give effect to the intention of the settlor or testator. Badger, In re; Badger v. Woolley, 84 L. Appointment of Husband of Tenant for Life Restrained from Anticipation.]—The donee of the power of appointing new trustees of a will appointed the husband of a tenant for life entitled for her separate use without power of anticipation to be a trustee of the will together with a continuing trustee:—Held, that the appointment, if undesirable, was not invalid. Coode, In re; Coode v. Foster, 108 L. Reference to Chambers to Appoint New Trustees — Right to Nominate.] — An order directing a reference to chambers to appoint new trustees of a will suspends the power given by the will to appoint new trustees, but it does not disqualify the donee of the power from nominating fit and proper persons to be new trustees, and in the absence of misconduct the Court will appoint the persons nominated by the donee of the power in preference to those nominated by other parties. Gadd, In re (52 L. Discretion to Apportion between Charitable and Non-charitable Objects.]—When trustees have a discretion to apportion between charitable objects and definite and ascertainable objects non-charitable, the trust does not fail, and in default of apportionment by the trustees the Court will divide the fund equally between the objects charitable and non-charitable. Gavacan, In re; O'Meara v. Att.-Gen., [1913] 1 Ir. Failure of Object—Direction for Gift Over — Duty of Trustees.] — An abbey was conveyed to trustees for the benefit of a society or community founded for the advancement of religion according to the principles of the Church of England, and the deed provided that if it should appear to the trustees impracticable to carry on the society, they should convey the property to the English Abbeys Restoration Fund. Subsequently all the members of the community, except two, acknowledged the supremacy of the Pope, and were admitted to the Roman Catholic Church. A meeting of the trustees resolved to give effect to the gift over, and two of them applied to the Court for directions as to whether they ought to join in executing the deed of conveyance:—Held, that in the circumstances they must join in executing the deed. Malling Abbey Trusts, In re; Beaumont v. Dale, 31 T. Different Wills—Maintenance of Legatee—Discretionary Power under Each Will—Right of Contribution.]—With respect to the exercise by trustees of discretionary powers in respect of the same legatee conferred by different wills, of which the trustees and trusts are different, there can be no right of equitable contribution between the several sets of trustees, there being no common obligation between them. Smith v. Cock, 80 L. J. P.C. 98; [1911] A.C. 317; 104 L. T. 1—P.C.

Under a testator's will the trustees had discretionary power to pay an annuity not exceeding a certain amount on trust for a daughter of the testator. There was a similar trust under the will of another daughter, on whose death the amount paid under the first trust was largely reduced. The two sets of trustees and the trusts in the two wills were distinct. In a suit (in which the common legatee took no part) for contribution by a beneficiary under the second will against the trustees of the first,—Held, that, there being no common obligation, there was no right of equitable contribution between the two sets of trustees. Ib.

Fire Insurance—Trust of Mansion House, Buildings, and Farms—Tenant for Life and Remaindermen—"Necessary expenses."]—A testator devised his mansion house, outbuildings, and farms in W. to three trustees upon trust "after payment thereout of all necessary expenses," to pay the balance of the rents and profits to his widow for life, and then to his son for life with remainders over. The widow and the son were two of the testator's executors and trustees. The premises were insured against fire at the testator's death for much less than their value. On an originating summons by the third trustee against the first tenant for life and remainder asking the direction of the Court as to adequately insuring the devised premises out of income,—Held (but without deciding anything as to whether the trustees ought to insure the premises at the expense of the testator's estate generally), that neither under the trusts of the will as coming under the head of "necessary expenses," nor as a statutory obligation under section 18, sub-section 1 of the Trustee Act, 1893, ought the trustees to maintain the fire insurance upon the premises devised in trust at the expense of the tenant for life. McEacharn, In re; Gambles v. McEacharn, 103 L. Defaulting Trustee—Liability to Make Good Default before Taking Share in Fund—Share in Different Fund Held on Different Trusts under Same Instrument—Right to Retain.]—The principle—stated in Doering v. Doering (58 L. J. Ch. 553; 42 Ch. D. 203)—that a defaulting trustee and his assignees cannot take a share in a trust fund without making good to it the amount in respect of which he is in default does not apply to his interest in another fund under the same instrument in which the parties as against whom he is in default have no interest, and in regard to which he is not in default:—Held, therefore, that the assignees of a specific legacy bequeathed to a trustee were entitled to retain it in the administration of the estate although the trustee had misappropriated part of the residuary estate. Towndrow, In re; Gratton v. Machen, 80 L. —— Legacy—Set-off.]—Where a trustee misappropriated trust funds, and paid them into his own account at his bank:—Held, that his co-trustee, when he discovered the misappropriation, could follow the trust funds, and that he had a charge on the defaulting trustee's balance at his bank:—Held, also, that the co-trustee could retain or set off against the misappropriated trust money such part of the legacy as devolved by derivative title beneficially on the defaulting trustee. The principle of Jacubs v. Rylance (43 L. J. Ch. 280; L. R. 17 Eq. 341) or the principle of Cherry v. Boultbee (7 L. J. Tenant for Life—Remainderman—Repairs—Leasehold and Freehold Properties—Liability of Corpus or Income for Repairs.]—The tenant for life is only liable to keep leasehold properties in such a state of repair as they were in when he became tenant for life on the death of the settlor, and accordingly the trustees of the property should, at the date of the death of the settlor, do all repairs necessary to put the property in a proper state of repair, to satisfy the covenants in the leases, and pay the same out of the corpus of the estate. Repairs to freeholds must be borne by the corpus. Sutton, In re; Sutton v. Sutton, 56 S. J. 650—Neville, J.

Power to Grant Mining Leases—Unopened Mine.]—A testator gave power to the trustees of his will to let from year to year, or for a term of years, his real or leasehold property at such rent and subject to such conditions as they should think fit, and to accept the surrender of leases and tenancies, to expend money on improvements, and generally to manage the property according to their absolute discretion. There were opened and unopened mines on the estate:—Held, that the trustees had no power to grant leases of unopened mines. Harter, In re; Harter v. Harter, 57 S. J. 444—Warrington, J.

d. Powers of and Trusts for Sale.

Trust for Sale—Power to Postpone Conversion—Share Vested in Possession—Personal Property—Right of Beneficiary to Immediate Sale and Division.]—A testator gave the residue of his personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and to stand possessed of the proceeds of sale in certain shares for his sons and daughters. The will contained a power to the trustees in their uncontrolled discretion to postpone sale and conversion. Some of the shares were settled upon trusts which were still subsisting. Beneficiaries who were absolutely entitled to other shares in the estate requested the trustees to transfer to them, in satisfaction of their shares, certain of the shares in a limited company which represented the residue of the estate retained by the trustees. This request was opposed on the ground that it was desirable that the shares should be retained by the trustees in the exercicse of their discretion to postpone conversion until the ultimate division of the estate, so that in the interest of all the beneficiaries they might exercise the voting power in respect of these shares in the management of the company's affairs:—Held, that in the absence of special circumstances a person absolutely entitled to an undivided share of personal property vested in trustees may call for immediate payment or transfer of his share, and that the power to postpone conversion in the will did not entitle the trustees to refuse to transfer their shares to persons absolutely entitled. Marshall, In re; Marshall v. Marshall, 83 L. —— Unauthorised Investments—Leaseholds—"Absolute discretion" of Trustees—Appropriation in Specie—Approval by Parties—Leave of Court.]—By an ante-nuptial settlement dated March 25, 1887, a husband assigned leasehold property to trustees upon trust to sell as and when they in their absolute discretion should think fit and to apply the income of the proceeds upon such trusts (after life interests) for his children as he should by deed or will appoint; the investment clause enabled the trustees to invest (inter alia) in leaseholds for a term of not less than sixty years unexpired at the date of the investment. There was no express power to retain the original investments, nor any express power of appropriation. The husband died in August, 1898, having by his will appointed a one-seventh share of the settled property on trusts in favour of one of his sons for life, with remainders over. The residue he appointed among his other children. The trustees had retained the leaseholds on account of the difficulty in selling, and in 1913 proposed to appropriate three leasehold properties to satisfy the settled share. One of these leaseholds was for a term of forty-six years only, unexpired, and another was subject to a mortgage. The persons entitled in remainder in default of children of the son were all sui juris and approved of the proposed appropriation :—Held, that the Court had power to sanction the appropriation. Cooke's Settlement, In re; Tarry v. Cooke, 83 L. —— Appropriation of Shares — Unauthorised Investments.]—Where by a will the shares of the estate of the daughters of the testator are settled, and the trustees are given an absolute power to convert followed by a power to delay realisation, the trustees have not power to hold as part of the settled shares shares in a private company which are not investments authorised by the trust for investment contained in the will. Beverly, In re; Watson v. Watson (70 L. J. Ch. 295; [1901] 1 Ch. 681), followed. Brooks, In re; Coles v. Davis 76 L. T. 771), and Fraser v. Murdoch (6 App. Cas. 855) distinguished. Craven, In re; Watson v. Craven, 83 L. J. —— Power to Postpone Sale—Share of Estate Vested in Beneficiary—Real and Leasehold Property—Right of Beneficiary to Immediate Sale and Payment of Share in Cash, or to Appropriation of Share in Specie.]—A testator by his will gave his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell and, after payment of his debts and legacies, to hold the residue of the proceeds upon the trusts therein declared, provided that the trustees might in their absolute and uncontrolled discretion postpone the sale of the estate or any part thereof for such time as they should think fit without being answerable for loss; and he declared that until sale the income arising from such part of his residuary estate as should remain unsold should be paid upon the trusts and to the persons to whom the income arising from the investment of the proceeds of sale would have been payable; and he declared (inter alia) that the trustees should stand possessed of the moneys to arise from the sale of his residuary estate upon trust, subject to an annuity to his widow, for all his children who should attain the age of twenty-one, and if more than one in equal shares as tenants in common. The testator having died and one of his children having attained twenty-one and thus attained a vested interest in a share of the residue, the trustees took out an originating summons to determine whether, notwithstanding the discretionary power given to the trustees to postpone the sale of the estate, that beneficiary was entitled to require a sale of the estate and payment of his share in cash, or an appropriation of his share in specie. The estate consisted principally of freehold and leasehold property :—Held, that so long as the trustees in the bona fide exercise of their discretion deemed it advisable to postpone a sale, the beneficiary was not entitled to call for either a sale and payment of his share, or an appropriation of his share in specie. Horsnaill, In re; Womersley v. Horsnaill (78 L. J. Ch. 331; [1909] 1 Ch. 631), approved and followed. Kipping, In re; Kipping v. Kipping, 83 L. J. Ch. 218; [1914] 1 Ch. 62; 109 L. T. 919—C.A.

Sale — Trustees Described as "my said executors."]—A testator appointed A, B, C, and D to be executors and trustees of his will, and bequeathed the residue of his freehold and personal property "in trust to my executors aforesaid," and authorised and empowered "my said executors" to sell any real property which they might think advisable, and divide the residue in such proportions as they or the survivor or survivors of them might think fit among certain persons. A and B renounced the executorship and predeceased D; C renounced the executorship, and disclaimed by deed the trusts of the will. D, who alone acted in the trusts of the will, in exercise of his statutory power appointed the plaintiff and E (since deceased) trustees of the will in his place :—Held, that the expression "my said executors" was merely a compendious form of designating "executors and trustees," and that the power of sale could be exercised by the plaintiff, the trustee for the time being. Robinson, In re; Sproule v. Sproule, [1912] 1 Ir. Trust to Invest in "Public stocks" and on no Other Investment.] — A testator, by his will dated 1868, directed his trustees to invest the trust funds in "some or one of the public stocks of the Bank of England and on no other investment whatsoever" :—Held, that the trustees could only invest in public stocks, and that the expression "public stocks" was confined to public stocks forming part of the National Debt of this country. Hewitt v. Price (11 L. Power to Invest in Stocks of any British Colony or Dependency—Stocks Issued by Provinces of Canada—"Colony or dependency."] —A power for trustees to invest capital money in any stock or securities of "any British colony or dependency" does not justify an investment in stocks issued by individual provinces of the Dominion of Canada. Maryon-Wilson's Estate, In re, 81 L. Power to Invest in Preference Stock—Preference Shares.]—The testator empowered his trustees to invest the trust funds (inter alia) preference stock of any company in the United Kingdom :—Held, that this did not authorise the trustees to invest in fully paid-up preference shares. Willis, In re; Spencer v. Willis, 81 L. J. Ch. 8; [1911] 2 Ch. 563; 105 L. T. 295; 55 S. J. 598—Eve, J.

Power to Invest "as they should think desirable, but not in the British Funds"—Purchase of Freeholds.]—A will contained the following investment clause : " My trustees being at liberty to sell all my ships, houses, and other property of mine, and 'invest' same as they think most desirable, but not in the British funds, my trustees to be free from all liability in investing any of the money received for the sale of any of my property " :—Held, that the above clause authorised the trustees to invest the proceeds of sale in the purchase of freehold lands in England and Ireland. O'Connor, In re; Grace v. Walsh, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 69—M.R.

Power to Retain—" Meaning of " Investments "—Money on Deposit with Industrial Firm.]—A testator by his will declared that " any moneys liable to be invested under this my will may remain invested as at my death." The testator's estate included a sum of 2,900*l.* on deposit with an industrial firm in whose employment the testator had been for many years :—Held, that the money could not be treated as " invested," and consequently the trustees could not allow the same to remain on such deposit. Sudlow, In re; Smith v. Sudlow, 59 S. J. 162—Eve, J.

Investment on Authorised Security — Jurisdiction to Enquire into Propriety of Retaining Investments.] — The Court has jurisdiction under Order LV. rule 3, without directing the execution of trusts, to give directions as to particular things which are to be done in their administration, and can therefore direct an enquiry whether it is for the benefit of the cestuis que trust that investments on authorised securities made by the trustees should be continued, or whether they ought to be called in. D'Epinoix's Settlement, In re; D'Epinoix v. Fettes, 83 L. J. Ch. 656; [1914] 1 Ch. 890; 110 L. T. 808; 58 S. J. 454—Warrington, J.

Power to Invest on Leasehold Security — Advances on Under-leases.]—While a power to invest on leasehold securities may in some cases authorise trustees to advance money on under-leases, trustees proposing to make such an advance ought to consider very seriously whether the investment is a prudent one, in view of their inability to control the acts and defaults of the original lessee. Ib.

Discretion — Retention of Investments — Loss.]—Trustees who have a trust for sale and conversion with powers at their discretion to postpone conversion and to retain existing investments, are not under any duty to make or preserve evidence that they have exercised such discretion. The assumption is, if they postpone conversion and retain existing investments, that they have properly exercised their discretion. Observations on the duties of trustees with respect to the retention of investments. Oddy, In re; Connell v. Oddy, 104 L. T. 128—Joyce, J.

Purchase of Land by Trustees by Way of Investment — Absence of Express Power to Vary Investments — Implied Power.] — The power of investment ordinarily given to trustees of a settlement implies a power to vary investments; and trustees of a settlement with power to purchase freehold or leasehold property for the personal use or occupation of the tenant for life have an implied power to sell the same. Cooper's Trusts, In re, ([1873] W. N. 87), followed. Pope and Easte's Contract, In re, 80 L. J. Ch. 692; [1911] 2 Ch. 442; 105 L. T. 370—Neville, J.

Advance of Trust Money on Mortgage—Valuing Security—Right of Trustee to Assume that Valuer will Satisfy Himself of Necessary Facts.] — Section 8, sub-section 1 of the Trustee Act, 1893, justifies trustees who are proposing to advance trust money on mortgage in assuming that the valuer whose duty it is to advise them will satisfy himself of the facts as to the property on which it is proposed to make the advance which are necessary to the making of a satisfactory valuation, and relieves them of the liability to make enquiries themselves regarding the personality of the mortgagor and the details concerning the property. —— Property Let on Weekly Tenancies — Right to make Advance on.]—There is no rule precluding trustees from lending trust money on the security of property let on weekly tenancies. The question is in every case one of the amount which may safely be advanced. Ib.

—— Instructing and Employing Valuer "independently of any owner of the property."]—If the relation of employer and employed exists between the trustee and the valuer, and between them only, in regard to the proposed advance, the valuer being entitled to look for his remuneration to the trustees and being responsible to him alone for the due performance of his duty as valuer, the valuer is " instructed and employed independently of any owner of the property " within the meaning of sub-section 1, and the trustee is not bound to enquire whether he has at any time advised or acted for the mortgagor. Ib.

—— Duty of Valuer to Consider Proportion which may be Advanced Independently of " Two-thirds " Rule.]—It is the duty of a valuer acting for trustees to consider not only the value of the property, but the proportion which in his opinion as an expert and a practical man the trustees would in each particular case be justified in advancing, independently of any supposed rule relating to two-thirds of the value; though if he advises that the trustees may safely advance two-thirds, and no more, they are justified in acting on his report. Ib.

—— Making Advance "under the advice of the surveyor or valuer expressed in the report."]—It is not necessary for a surveyor or valuer expressly to advise trustees to advance a particular sum. If he is instructed to survey a property and report on its value and the amount which the trustees can advance on it, and states in his report what he considers to be the value, and that the property forms a sufficient security for the proposed advance, the trustees in making the advance are making it "under the advice of the surveyor or valuer expressed in the report" within the meaning of the sub-section. Ib.

Mortgage — Trade Buildings — Valuation — Two-thirds or One-half — Old Valuation — Depreciation.]—There is no rule that in all cases where a portion of the premises, or even a chief portion, is used for business purposes, trustees are guilty of a breach of trust in advancing more than a moiety of the valuation. If the security is really a business plus the premises, the trustees are well advised in having nothing to do with it; and if they are so inseparable that the discontinuance of the business must or may depreciate the premises, then the trustees ought not to advance more than one-half. But where there is a freehold property situate in a busy thoroughfare adaptable for various kinds of business, there is no rule that trustees are limited to advancing only a moiety. Palmer v. Emerson, 80 L. J. Ch. 418; [1911] 1 Ch. 758; 104 L. T. 557; 55 S. J. 365; 27 T. L. 320—Eve, J.

—— Breach of Trust—Acting Reasonably—Relief.]—Section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1893, is a relieving section, and does not impose on trustees a statutory obligation to take a valuation. Accordingly, where trustees advanced money on mortgage without a valuation made for the purpose, but relied on a valuation made some two years previously, and the security proved insufficient,—Held, that the trustees had not committed a breach of trust; but even if they had, they ought to be excused under the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, s. 3. Ib.

—— Unauthorised Investment—Dual Position of Tenant for Life and Trustee—Restoration of Capital with Interest—Claim to Excess of Interest.]—A tenant for life is not liable to make goods to the capital fund any excess of interest which he obtains from unauthorised investments, provided the capital fund is not diminished by reason of such investments; and this principle holds good even though the tenant for life may happen to be also a trustee. Hoyles, In re; Row v. Jagg (No. 2), 81 L. J. Ch. 163; [1912] 1 Ch. 67; 105 L. T. 663; 56 S. J. 110—Swinfen Eady, J.

Cestui que Trust Lease to Trustee—Assignment of Beneficial Interest with Trustee's Concurrence—Continuing Liability of Original Cestui que Trust.]—A cestui que trust, who is also the maker of the trust, is personally liable to indemnify the trustee against any loss accruing in the proper execution of the trust, and this liability continues after the cestui que trust has assigned his beneficial interest in the trust property to another person. Matthews v. Ruggles Brise, 80 L. J. Ch. 42; [1911] 1 Ch. 194; 103 L. T. 491—Swinfen Eady, J.

Two partners, C. and M., accepted a lease at the request of all the partners and in trust for the partnership. Subsequently the partners agreed to sell the partnership assets and liabilities to a company. By the agreement, the company covenanted to indemnify the partners and partnership against the liabilities and to take all reasonable steps to effect a novation to the company of these liabilities: and each of the partners covenanted to execute and do any necessary document or thing for vesting the assets of the partnership in the company. C. died and M. subsequently assigned to the company at their request the lease and also certain freehold property comprised in the agreement. Some years afterwards the company became insolvent, and the lessor sued the present plaintiffs, as executors of M., the surviving lessee, for arrears of rent and damages for breach of covenant. The plaintiffs settled the action by payment of a lump sum to cover their existing and future liabilities under the lease. They then sued C.'s executors for contribution in proportion to C.'s share in the partnership. The defendant's contended that the company's liability to indemnify the lessees had been in substitution for the partners' liability; and, alternatively, that M. had forfeited his right to contribution by failing to retain part of the freehold property by way of indemnity against future liability under the lease:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to contribution, for there had been no novation of the lessee's right to indemnity in respect of the liability under the lease, and M. could not have retained part of the freehold property by way of indemnity without a breach of the agreement entered into by all the partners. Ib.

Solicitor Authorised to Receive Trust Money by Having Custody of Deed Containing Receipt—Misappropriation—Permitting Money to Remain in Solicitor's Hands for Unnecessary Time—Knowledge of Trustee of Receipt by Solicitor—Liability for Loss.]—Sub-section 3 of section 17 of the Trustee Act, 1893, does not render a trustee liable for permitting trust money to remain for an unnecessary time in the hands or under the control of a solicitor whom the trustee has appointed, under sub-section 1, as his agent to receive it, by permitting him to have the custody of a deed containing a receipt, unless the trustee knows, or ought to have known, that the solicitor has received the money. Sheppard, In re; De Brimont v. Harvey, 80 L. J. Ch. 52; [1911] 1 Ch. 50; 103 L. T. 424; 55 S. J. 13—Parker, J.

A fund, of which H. and another were the trustees, was invested on a mortgage which was about to be paid off. Both trustees executed, and delivered to B., the solicitor to the trust, a deed of reconveyance containing a receipt for the mortgage money. The other trustee died three days later. During the following four months H. frequently asked B. whether he had received the money, and B. replied that he had not. B., without H.'s knowledge, was in fact selling the property in lots on the mortgagors' behalf, using the reconveyance, which he retained, to make out a title, and receiving from time to time and misappropriating the purchase money, so that the greater part of the fund was lost. B. had previously been solicitor to a second trust, the S. trust, of which H. was a trustee, and H.'s co-trustees, owing to their dissatisfaction with B.'s conduct in matters connected with that trust, had insisted on employing another solicitor in his place. It was not contended that the authority conferred on B. by the delivery of the reconveyance to him was revoked by the death of the other trustee of the mortgage money, or that it did not empower B. to receive that money in instalments:—Held, on that assumption, and treating H. as if he had been a sole trustee, that on the evidence he might reasonably continue to believe in B.'s honesty, notwithstanding the circumstances connected with the S. trust; that since H. had no means of checking B.'s statements regarding the non-receipt of the money except by asking to see the deeds, which were in B.'s possession, notice of the receipt of it by B. ought not to be imputed to him; that he was justified in not revoking B.'s authority to receive the money by withdrawing the reconveyance from B.'s custody; and that he had not been guilty of any breach of trust. Ib.

Mortgage Securities—Depreciation—Distribution of Trust Property — Appropriation of Valueless Security to Settled Share — No Valuation—Negligence—Breach of Trust.]—A trustee with an estate in possession divisible between two beneficiaries handed over the valuable portion to one beneficiary and retained the remainder without enquiring whether it was sufficient to satisfy the other share. The property retained was valueless:—Held, that the trustee ought to have enquired as to the value of the securities at the date of the distribution, and that, not having done so, he was liable for breach of trust and could not claim the protection of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, s. 3. Brookes, In re; Brookes v. Taylor, 83 L. J. Ch. 424; [1914] 1 Ch. 558; 110 L. T. 691; 58 S. J. 286—Astbury, J.

Unauthorised Investment—Payment of Interest by Trustee to Himself as Tenant for Life — Right of Tenant for Life to Retain Excess of Interest.]—A trustee, who was also tenant for life, invested the trust estate in unauthorised investments. No loss had resulted to the trust estate by reason of this proceeding:—Held, that the tenant for life (notwithstanding the fact that she was also trustee) was not bound to account to the trust estate for the excess received by her as interest from the unauthorised investments above and beyond the interest that she would anyhow have received had the trust estate been properly invested. Hoyles, In re; Row v. Jagg (No. 2), 81 L. J. Ch. 163; [1912] 1 Ch. 67; 105 L. T. 663; 56 S. J. 110—Swinfen Eady, J.

5. Liability for Agents Employed by Trustees.

See also Vol. XIV. 797, 2198.

Payment of Duty—Cheque Payable to Solicitor — Misappropriation — Will — Power to Employ Agents — Relief.] — By his will, the testator empowered his trustees and executors to employ agents to act for them, and declared that they should be indemnified out of the trust estate against the acts and omissions of such agents. One of the trustees, who was a solicitor, died, and the remaining trustee employed another solicitor to act for the estate. During the winding up of the estate the trustee gave the solicitor cheques payable to himself for payment of duties. The solicitor misappropriated the proceeds of the cheques. In an action to make the trustee liable for the sums so lost to the estate,—Held, that under the terms of the will the trustee was justified in believing that he might pay the duties through a solicitor, and that, as he had acted honestly and reasonably, he was entitled to relief under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896. Mackay, In re; Griessemann v. Carr, 80 L. Laches or Acquiescence of Beneficiary.] — An annuitant is not guilty of such laches as would disentitle her to recover arrears of her annuity merely on the ground that she has not actively enforced the performance of the duty of the trustees to pay her such annuity regularly. Rix, In re; Rix v. Rix, 56 S. Personal Liability—Compromise on Advice of Law Agent—Duty to Make Annuities Real Burden on the Estate.] — A testator whose assets consisted of heritable and personal property used in his business by trust disposition and settlement disinherited the children of his first marriage and his daughter by his second marriage, leaving them nothing whatever, and directed his trustees to pay to his wife an annuity of 300*l.* per annum during her life, and an annuity of 200*l.* to his son John and Helen his wife during their lives, and to convey to his son George the whole residue of his estate, "but always with and under the burden of the life rent to my said wife of my properties in Glasgow and Girvan and also under burden of the payment of the annuities to my said wife and to my son and his wife." The disinherited children upon the death of the testator threatened to take legal proceedings to set aside his disposition on the ground of want of capacity and undue influence, and also claimed to recover their legitim share of his assets. The trustees (one of whom was the appellant), acting on the advice of a law agent of high standing and acknowledged character in the profession, compromised the claims, and borrowed the sum required to carry out the compromise on the security of the heritable estate. They also allowed the son George to take possession of the business without making the annuities to the son John and his wife primary real burdens on the heritable subjects. After a few years the business failed, and there was not sufficient to pay the annuitants:—Held, that the appellant was not liable for breach of trust, for there was no proof that he and his co-trustees in agreeing to and carrying out the compromise had been guilty of negligence. Eaton v. Buchanan, [1911] A.C. 253—H.L. (Sc.)

Outstanding Debts — No Steps to Require Payment.]—Trustees directed by the will of a testator who died in May, 1896, to convert and invest his estate, having allowed a sum lent by the testator and a debt due in respect of the sale of part of the testator's assets to remain uncollected and without action brought until 1903, the debtor being a director of an important company and possessed of house and share property, held liable for the consequent loss, the Court not being satisfied that no loss had accrued to the testator's estate from the neglect by the trustees of their duty. Dictum of Sir J. Romilly, M.R., in Clack v. Holland (24 L. J. Ch. 13; 19 Beav. 262, 271), applied. Greenwood, In re; Greenwood v. Firth, 105 L. T. 509—Eve, J.

The concluding words of section 21, subsection 2 of the Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), involve the exercise of active discretion on the part of the trustees allowing time for payment and not the mere passive attitude of leaving matters alone. Ib.

Release by Beneficiary—Acting Reasonably —Relief.]—Loss which has arisen from carelessness or supineness of the trustee is altogether outside the sub-section. A beneficiary gave executors a receipt for a share of the estate "as shown by the executors' books" and accounts:—Held, that the receipt was not a release to them in respect of the balance of debts due to the testator's estate then remaining uncollected, and further, that, in the circumstances, the trustees, having allowed the matter of calling in the debts to drift for six years, had not acted reasonably and were not entitled to be relieved under section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896. Ib.

Statute of Limitations.]—Where a policyholder surrendered his policy to the insurance company on the terms that the amount paid to him for the surrender should be invested in shares of the company,—Held, that this was a conversion within section 8, sub-section 1 of the Trustee Act, 1888, which would prevent the policy-holder, a director, from setting up the Statute of Limitations as a defence. Irish Provident Assurance Co., In re, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 352—Palles, C.B.

—— Payment on Erroneous Construction of Will—Acting on Advice of Solicitor—Relief from Liability.]—The defence afforded to a trustee by the Trustee Act, 1888, s. 8, in a case where he is sued in respect of a breach of trust committed more than six years before action brought, arises under clause (b) and not clause (a) of sub-section 1 of section 8 of the Act, and the proviso to clause (b) renders the defence of no avail where the interest of the person claiming in respect of the breach of trust only vested in possession less than six years before action brought. Cases to which clause (a) applies discussed. Semble, that the proviso to clause (b) also applies to clause (a). Allsop, In re; Whittaker v. Bamford, 83 L. J. Ch. 42; [1914] 1 Ch. 1; 109 L. T. 641; 58 S. J. 9; 30 T. L. R. 18—C.A.

The jurisdiction conferred on the Court by section 3 of the Judicial Trustees Act, 1896, enabling it to relieve a trustee from personal liability in respect of "any breach of trust" where the trustee "has acted honestly and reasonably and ought fairly to be excused" applies to the case of a trustee who has distributed an estate on an erroneous construction of a will. Where, therefore, by an innocent mistake the trustee of a small estate acted on the advice of his solicitor and distributed the income of a share of the estate instead of accumulating it owing to an erroneous construction of an obscure provision of a will, the Court exercised its discretion by relieving him from personal liability under the section. Ib.

Kay, In re; Mosley v. Keyworth (or Kay) (66 L. J. Ch. 759; [1897] 2 Ch. 518), applied. Dictum of Parker, J., in Mackay, In re; Griessemann v. Carr (80 L. J. Ch. 237, at p. 240; [1911] 1 Ch. 300, at p. 307), approved. The general principles laid down by Kekewich, J., in Davis v. Hutchings (76 L. J. Ch. 272; [1907] 1 Ch. 356), disapproved. Ib.

—— Money Paid by Trustee to Wrong Person Recovery by Beneficiary whose Money Paid Away—Lapse of Time.]—From 1886 to 1900 the trustee of an annuity paid it to a person who was thought by both to be, but who afterwards proved not to have been, entitled to it. The person who was entitled to it having established his title in 1909, and died, his executrix brought an action against the executor of the person who had been wrongly paid to recover the money. The trustee was not a party to the action:—Held, that the action being in substance a common law demand for money had and received, the Limitation Act, 1623, applied, and the claim was barred by the lapse of six years. Harris v Harris (No. 2) (29 Beav. 110) explained. Robinson, In re; McLaren v. Robinson, 80 L. J. Ch. 381; [1911] 1 Ch. 502; 104 L. T. 331; 55 S. J. 271—Warrington, J.

Company—Liquidation—Assets—Order to Purchase Stock.]—Where a lady sent money to a financial firm to be invested by them in an American concern, and, the stock being short, they paid her money into a special account at a bank, in the joint names of the directors of the firm, to await the time when the stock should be delivered; and subsequently a liquidator of the firm was appointed, and when the stock was delivered the bank applied the money in taking it up:—Held, that the payment into the bank was a clear method of providing for the purchase of the stock, and that the firm were trustees for the lady, who was accordingly entitled to the stock. Chaplin, Milne, Grenfell & Co., In re (No. 1), 59 S. Banking Account—Trust Funds Mixed with Private Moneys—Charge on Balance of Private General Account for Trust Funds.]—W. bought the business of the plaintiff company and agreed to get in certain debts of the business and pay them over to the plaintiff company. W. paid into his private general account a sum of 455*l.*, part of the debts which he had so collected. Two days after paying in this sum he had drawn all the money out of the account with the exception of a sum of 25*l.* 18*s.*, and applied it for his own purposes. Subsequently, he operated on the account in the ordinary way, paying in and drawing out from time to time. On his death there was a credit balance on the account of 358*l.*, which moneys were now in the hands of the defendant, who was a trustee of W.'s property under an administration order in bankruptcy. The plaintiff company claimed a charge on this amount:—Held, that, although W. was a trustee for the company of the 455*l.*, it was not possible for the mere fact of the payment by him of further moneys into this private general account to impart to him the intention of clothing such moneys with a trust in favour of the plaintiff company, and accordingly the only part of this balance of 358*l.* which could be taken by the plaintiff company was the sum of 25*l.* 18*s.*, that being the smallest amount to which the balance had fallen between the date of payment in of the 455*l.* and the death of the debtor, and being the only sum which could be earmarked as the proceeds of the book debts. Hallett's Estate, In re; Knatchbull v. Hallett (49 L. Where a trustee had misappropriated trust funds, and paid them into his own account at his bank, it was held that his co-trustee, when he discovered the misappropriation, could follow the trust funds, and had a charge on the balance of the defaulting trustee at his bank. Hallett's Estate, In re; Knatchbull v. Hallett (49 L. J. Ch. 415; 13 Ch. D. 696), applied. The co-trustee can retain or set off against the misappropriated trust money such part of the legacy as devolved by derivative title beneficially on the defaulting trustee. The principle of Jacubs v. Rylance (43 L. J. Ch. 280; L. R. 17 Eq. 341), or the principle of Cherry v. Boultbee (7 L. J. Ch. 178; 4 Myl. & Cr. 442), applied. Dacre, In re; Whitaker v. Dacre, [1915] 2 Ch. 480; 60 S. J. 44—Sargant, J.

Doubt as to Persons Entitled—Payment into Court—Cost of Trustees on Payment out.]—Where trustees paid a fund into Court to which a certain testator was entitled who had left it to one H. D. absolutely, and H. D. was described in the probate of the testator's will as H. D., the widow of the testator, when, in fact, although the testator had gone through a form of marriage with H. D., his wife was still alive, and his wife and child both made claims to the fund and the trustees paid it into Court:—Held, on a summons for payment out, that they were to be allowed their costs of the summons. Davies' Trusts, In re, 59 S. J. 234—Neville, J.

Payment out to One Trustee—Original Sole Trustee—No Children of Marriage.]—A wife had been deserted by her husband in 1892, shortly after their marriage, and there were no children of the marriage. Funds in Court had been settled by the wife by the marriage settlement, and she petitioned that they should be paid out to her brother, who was the sole and an original trustee of the settlement:—Held, notwithstanding the general rule that funds in Court will not be paid out to a sole trustee, that in the circumstances of this case payment should be ordered to be made to the sole trustee, he undertaking in the event of there subsequently being any children born of the marriage to appoint another trustee of the settlement. Reynault, In re (16 Jur. 233), followed. Leigh v. Pantin, 84 L. H. VESTING ORDERS.

See also Vol. XIV. 961, 2208.

Person Absolutely Entitled — Request in Writing to Trustee to Transfer Trust Funds—Service of Request.]—The Court will make a vesting order under section 35, sub-section 1 (ii.) (d) of the Trustee Act, 1893, where the trustee does not appear on the petition, provided an affidavit is filed stating that the petition has been served on the trustee, and also that the request, in writing, addressed and sent to him in accordance with the terms of such section, has not been returned by the Post Office. Struve's Trusts, In re, 56 S. J. 551—Parker, J.

II. PUBLIC TRUSTEE.

Scottish Marriage Contract.]—The provisions of the Public Trustee Act, 1906, do not extend so as to enable the Public Trustee to act as trustee of a Scottish or foreign settlement. Hewitt's Settlement, In re; Hewitt v. Hewitt, 84 L. J. Ch. 358; [1915] 1 Ch. 228; 112 L. T. 287; 59 S. J. 177; 31 T. L. R. 81—Eve, J.

Appointment of Public Trustee as Sole Trustee of Settlement.]—Under section 5 of the Public Trustee Act, 1906, the Court has express jurisdiction to appoint the Public Trustee sole trustee of a settlement, although the settlement provides that the number of trustees shall not at any time be less than three. Semble, under the combined effect of section 10 of the Trustee Act, 1893, and section 5 of the Public Trustee Act, 1906, the donee of the power in a settlement so framed could himself appoint the Public Trustee to be sole trustee. Leslie's Hassop Estates, In re, 80 L. J. Ch. 486; [1911] 1 Ch. 611; 104 L. T. 563; 55 S. J. 384; 27 T. L. R. 352—Eve, J.

Trustee for Purposes of Settled Land Acts.]—Where a donee of a power or the Court properly appoints the Public Trustee to be a sole trustee, the settlement in such a case must be read as authorising the payment of capital moneys to him as a sole trustee under section 39 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, and as intending the giving of notices to a sole trustee under section 45. Ib.

Real Estate—Powers.]—The scope of the Public Trustee Act, 1906, implies that the Public Trustee has full power to hold land and to take possession of personal property in all cases, and not only under section 3 of the Act. Ib.

Number of Trustees not to be Less than Three.]—Semble,—Under section 25 of the Trustee Act, 1893, the Court can appoint two trustees or even a sole trustee of a settlement, notwithstanding the settlor's direction as to the minimum number being three. Ib.

Consent to Act — Deed of Appointment — Operative Date.]—Rule 8, sub-rule 2 of the Public Trustee Rules, 1912, provides that no appointment of the Public Trustee to be trustee shall be made, except by a testator, unless and until the consent of the Public Trustee to act as such trustee shall have been obtained. Rule 10 provides that the consent of the Public Trustee must be in writing and under his official seal. The executrixes and trustees of a will executed a deed appointing the Public Trustee sole trustee in their place, but it was not their intention that a complete appointment should be made until certain events had happened. After the happening of these events the Public Trustee executed under his official seal a consent to act, and thereupon the date of appointment was dated, and on a later day the Public Trustee executed the deed of appointment:—Held, that as the deed of appointment did not become operative until the day when the Public Trustee completed it, his consent was executed before the appointment was made, and therefore the appointment was in accordance with the Rules. Shaw, In re; Public Trustee v. Little, 110 L. Charitable Funds — Appointment of Corporate Body as Custodian Trustee — Trust Exclusively for Religious or Charitable Purposes—Incorporated Body of Trustees—Power of Trustees of Funds to Appoint as Custodian Trustee—"Instrument" Empowering Incorporated Body to Undertake Trusts.]—The provisions of sub-sections 4 and 5 of section 2 of the Public Trustee Act, 1906, precluding the Public Trustee from accepting certain classes of trusts, including trusts exclusively for religious or charitable purposes, apply only to the Public Trustee, and not to a corporation appointed custodian trustee of such a trust under section 4, sub-section 3; nor is such an appointment open to objection on the ground that it will abridge or affect the powers or duties of the official trustees of charitable funds. Cherry's Trusts, In re; Robinson v. Wesleyan Methodist Chapel Purposes Trustees, 83 L. J. Ch. 142; [1914] 1 Ch. 83; 110 L. T. 16; 58 S. J. 48; 30 T. L. R. 30—Sargant, J.

The appointment of a custodian trustee of charitable funds may be made by trustees having the power of appointing new trustees of the funds; and the "instrument" within the meaning of rule 30 of the Public Trustee Rules, 1912, empowering a body of trustees incorporated under the Charitable Trustees Incorporation Act, 1872, to undertake trusts is their deed of trust and the certificate of incorporation. Ib.

Will — Retiring Trustee — Appointment of Public Trustee — Prohibiting Appointment — Expediency—Expense.]—In cases not involving any exceptional or disproportionate expenditure the mere fact that the appointment of the Public Trustee as a trustee involves the expense contemplated by the Public Trustee Act, 1906, in respect of his remuneration is not a material element in determining whether such appointment is "expedient" under section 5, sub-section 4 of that Act. Firth, In re; Firth v. Loveridge, 81 L. J. Ch. 539; [1912] 1 Ch. 806; 106 L. T. 865; 56 S. J. 467; 28 T. L. R. 378—Eve, J.

Judicial Trustee Retiring—Power of Court to Appoint Public Trustee.]—When a judicial trustee retires, he has no overriding power to appoint his successor, but the Court has jurisdiction to appoint the Public Trustee in his place, and in a proper case will do so. Johnston, In re; Mills v. Johnston, 105 L. T. 701—Neville, J.

Power to Administer — Small Estate Over 1,000*l.*—Reduced to Less than 500*l.* by Distribution.]—The gross capital value of the small estate referred to in section 3 of the Public Trustee Act, 1906, is to be ascertained at the date of the application to the Public Trustee to administer the estate, and not at the date of the death of the testator or intestate. Accordingly the Public Trustee has power to administer an estate the gross capital value of which was more than 1,000*l.* at the death, but which was reduced below that sum by distribution. Deveraux, In re; Toovey v. Public Trustee, 80 L. J. Ch. 705; [1911] 2 Ch. 545; 105 L. T. 407; 55 S. J. 715; 27 T. L. R. 574—Eve, J.

Administration of Trusts.] — Section 3 applies throughout to the estates of deceased persons, and has no application to trusts created by settlements. Ib.

Income Fee as between Annuitant and Residuary Legatee.] — When the Public Trustee is appointed to administer the trusts of a will, which consist in paying a portion of the income of the trust funds to annuitants and the remainder to life tenants of the residue, the income fee payable to him in accordance with the Public Trustee Act, 1906, s. 9, must be duly apportioned as between the annuitants and the life tenants, and must not be thrown entirely upon residue. Bentley, In re; Public Trustee v. Bentley, 84 L. J. Ch. 54; [1914] 2 Ch. 456; 111 L. T. 1097—Astbury, J.

Two Settlements — Conflicting Interests — Power to Compromise.]—The Public Trustee has no more power than a private trustee, where he is in the position of having conflicting interests, to make a bargain with himself, and must accordingly come to the Court in the proper proceedings for sanction to such a bargain. New Haw Estate Trust, In re, 107 L. T. 191; 56 S. J. 538—Parker, J.

Audit of Trust Accounts—Summons by Way of Appeal from Direction as to Costs of Audit.] —Where funds had been properly invested and all reasonable information given to a certain beneficiary under a trust, who nevertheless demanded an audit of the accounts of the trust under section 13 of the Public Trustee Act, 1906,—Held, that the decision of the Public Trustee ordering such beneficiary to pay the costs of such an audit was quite right and must be upheld. Utley, In re; Russell v. Cubitt, 106 L. T. 858; 56 S. J. 518—Swinfen Eady, J.

Section 13 of the Public Trustee Act, 1906, does not give to beneficiaries general powers to obtain audits of the trust accounts at the expense of the trust estate. Ib.

Right of Appeal from Public Trustee — Exercise of Judicial Functions—Investigation and Audit of Trust Accounts—Jurisdiction to Direct Applicant to Pay Expenses.] — Section 10 of the Public Trustee Act, 1906, is not confined to the acts, omissions, or decisions of the Public Trustee under the preceding sections, but gives a right of appeal from his decision, at any rate in all cases where he exercises a judicial as opposed to an administrative function. Oddy, In re, 80 L. J. Ch. 404; [1911] 1 Ch. 532; 104 L. T. 338; 55 S. J. 348; 27 T. L. R. 312—Parker, J.

The Public Trustee ought not to be made a party to an appeal, though the Court which hears it may in matters of doubt ask him to state his reason for his decision. Ib.

In directing, under section 13, sub-section 5 of the Act, the expenses of an investigation and audit of the condition and accounts of a trust to be borne by the party who has applied for the investigation and audit under sub-section 1, the Public Trustee is exercising a judicial function, and an appeal therefore lies, and he ought to hear the parties, if they desire it, before giving the direction. Ib.

The jurisdiction to award costs against such an applicant ought to be exercised so as to control the right of application given by section 13 within reasonable bounds. Observations on this right. Ib.

UNDUE INFLUENCE.

Parent and Child—Mortgage by Unmarried Daughter to Secure Parent's Debt—Presumption of Parental Influence—Onus of Proof.]—Transactions in the nature of bounty from child to parent are in equity always regarded with the greatest jealousy when taking place before the child is completely emancipated from the parental influence, and this principle is not confined to gifts or donations properly so-called, but extends to other benefits—for example, to a security executed in favour of the parent's creditor. In the case of a daughter who, having no means of subsistence of her own, continues, after coming of age, to live under her father's roof, the parental influence almost necessarily continues, and the mere fact that she has for some years been of full age does not put an end to the presumption that she is still acting under that influence. Where, therefore, the parent borrows money upon the security of a document executed by an unmarried daughter living under his roof it is incumbent upon the lender to ascertain and assure himself not only that she understood what she was doing, but also that she was not acting under parental influence. London and Westminster Loan and Discount Co. v. Bilton, 27 T. "Idle and disorderly person" — Street Collection for Strike Funds.]—Section 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, which enacts that a person placing himself in a public place to beg or gather alms shall be deemed an idle and disorderly person, is directed against the class of persons who, at the time of the commission of the acts charged, have given up work and adopted begging as a mode of life and means of livelihood, and not against persons so gathering alms for another purpose. Mathers v. Penfold, 84 L. J. K.B. 627; [1915] 1 K.B. 514; 112 L. T. 726; 79 J. P. 225; 13 L. G. R. 359; 59 S. J. 235; 31 T. L. R. 108—D.

The appellant, a workman out of work through a strike, solicited contributions in the streets towards the strike fund of his union, from which he had, and might again have, benefit:—Held, that he was not "an idle and disorderly person" within section 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824. Pointon v. Hill (53 L. J. M.C. 62; 12 Q.B. D. 306) discussed and commented on. Ib.

Rogue and Vagabond — "Found" upon Premises for Unlawful Purpose.]—Section 4 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, provides (inter alia) that every person "found in or upon any dwelling house . . . for any unlawful purpose" shall be deemed a rogue and vagabond:—Held, that to constitute the offence created by those words the accused must be discovered upon the premises doing the acts or things which of themselves constitute the unlawful purpose, but that actual apprehension upon the premises is not necessary. Moran v. Jones, 104 L. T. 921; 75 J. P. 411; 22 Cox C.C. 474; 27 T. L. R. 421—D.

Frequenting Public Street with Intent to Commit Felony—"Place adjacent"—Entrance Hall of Hotel.]—The entrance hall and staircase of an hotel which opened directly on to a public street,—Held to be a place adjacent to a street or highway within section 4 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824. M'Intyre v. Morton, [1912] S. Male Person in a Public Place Persistently Soliciting for Immoral Purposes — Acts of Solicitation not Observed by Subject Thereof—"Solicits."] — On the prosecution under section 1, sub-section 1 (b) of the Vagrancy Act, 1898, of a male person for in a public place persistently soliciting for immoral purposes, the solicitation not being by words, but by actions, it is not necessary to prove that the subject of the alleged acts of solicitation was aware of them. Horton v. Mead, 82 L. J. K.B. 200; [1913] 1 K.B. 154; 108 L. T. 156; 77 J. P. 129; 23 Cox C.C. 279—D.

—— Previous Conviction as Rogue and Vagabond—Jurisdiction of Court to Punish as Incorrigible Rogue.]—Where a male person has been convicted under section 1, sub-section 1 (b) of the Vagrancy Act, 1898, of persistently soliciting for immoral purposes, having been at some former time adjudged to be a rogue and vagabond, he can be punished as an incorrigible rogue under the provisions of section 10 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824. Rex v. Herion, 82 L. J. K.B. 82; [1913] 1 K.B. 284; 108 L. T. 848; 77 J. P. 96; 23 Cox C.C. 387; 57 S. J. 130; 29 T. L. R. 93—C.C.A.

Living in Part on Earnings of Prostitution—Punishment of Whipping on Second Conviction—First Conviction not on Indictment.]—The conviction of an offence under the Vagrancy Act, 1898, preceding the "second or subsequent conviction . . . on indictment" under the same statute, referred to in section 7, sub-section 5 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, need not be a conviction on indictment. Rex v. Austin, 82 L. J. K.B. 387; [1913] 1 K.B. 551; 108 L. T. 574; 77 J. P. 271; 23 Cox C.C. 346; 57 S. J. 287; 29 T. L. R. 245—C.C.A.

Therefore where a male person was convicted on indictment of trading on prostitution within section 1 of the Vagrancy Act, 1898, and it was also proved that he had been previously convicted under that Act by Courts of summary jurisdiction before the Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1912, had come into operation,—Held, that the Court had power under section 7, sub-section 5 of the Act of 1912, in addition to any term of imprisonment awarded, to order the offender to be once privately whipped. Ib.

Conviction by Court of Summary Jurisdiction of Rogue and Vagabond after Previous Conviction as Rogue and Vagabond—Commitment to Prison until Next General or Quarter Sessions — Jurisdiction of Court of Quarter Sessions to Sentence Prisoner as Incorrigible Rogue.]—A Court of quarter sessions has no jurisdiction to sentence, as an incorrigible rogue, a prisoner committed to prison by a Court of summary jurisdiction under section 5 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, as amended by section 7 of the Penal Servitude Act, 1891, unless he has been convicted by the Court of summary jurisdiction of being an incorrigible rogue. Rex v. Evans, 84 L. J. K.B. 1603; [1915] 2 K.B. 762; 113 L. T. 508; 79 J. P. 415; 59 S. J. 496; 31 T. L. R. 410—C.C.A.

The appellant was convicted by a Court of summary jurisdiction of being a rogue and vagabond after a previous conviction as a rogue and vagabond, and was ordered to be imprisoned and kept to hard labour until the next general quarter sessions of the peace. The Court of quarter sessions, after enquiring into the circumstances of the case, adjudged him to be an incorrigible rogue, and sentenced him to eleven months' imprisonment with hard labour. The appellant appealed against the sentence :—Held, that the Court of quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to adjudge him to be an incorrigible rogue or to sentence him therefor, and that their order sentencing him must be quashed. Rex v. Johnson (78 L. J. K.B. 290; [1909] 1 K.B. 439) followed. Ib.

—— Non-Provision for Family — Sentence Reduced.]—The appellant was sentenced to six months' imprisonment with hard labour and ordered to receive twelve lashes with the whip. The Court, being of opinion that the appellant had not much opportunity of providing for his family since his last release from prison, quashed that part of the sentence which ordered him to be whipped. Rex v. Fidler, 78 J. Letters—Introduction of New Terms—Contract Subject to Approval of Solicitor.] — If documents or letters relied on as constituting a contract contemplate the execution of a further contract between the parties it is a question of construction whether the execution of the further contract is a condition or term of the bargain or whether it is a mere expression of the desire of the parties as to the manner in which the transaction already agreed to will in fact go through. The fact that the reference to the more formal document is in words which according to their natural construction import a condition is generally conclusive against the reference being treated as the expression of a mere desire. North v. Percival (67 L. J. Ch. 321; [1898] 2 Ch. 128) doubted. Von Hatzfeldt-Wildenburg (Princess) v. Alexander, 81 L. J. Ch. 184; [1912] 1 Ch. 284; 105 L. T. 434—Parker, J.

Reference in Letters to Formal Contract—Complete Open Contract.]—Where the agents for the vendor of two warehouses, in a letter accepting an offer by intending purchasers, wrote as follows : "We shall be glad to meet you at your early convenience to receive a deposit on the sale to you, and to arrange for a formal contract, to be drawn out for signature by the solicitors,"—Held, that this was not a conditional acceptance, but a letter completing an open contract, of which specific performance could be enforced as against the purchaser. Rouse v. Ginsberg, 55 S. J. 632—Swinfen Eady, J.

Price — Sale by Auction — "Price which public will be asked to pay."]—By an agreement made between the appellant and the respondents the appellant was to have the right of purchasing certain lots of land to be selected by him, with the concurrence of the respondents, at prices to "be decided by our officials as soon as the surveys are completed . . . our prices . . . will be at least no higher than the price which the public will be asked to pay." The lots were selected, and were offered to the appellant at the prices which similar lots had fetched at a sale by auction. The appellant refused to accept the lots at these prices, contending that "the price which the public was asked to pay" within the meaning of the agreement was the reserve price put on similar lots at the auction, not the price at which the lots were actually sold, and brought an action for specific performance or in the alternative for damages:—Held, that he was not entitled either to specific performance of the contract or to damages for a breach of it. Frewen v. Hays, 106 L. Memorandum in Writing — Signature by Agent "thereunto lawfully authorised" — Solicitor—Signature Affixed "alio intuitu."]—A purchaser verbally agreed with G. to buy certain real estate. He paid a deposit and received a receipt therefore from G., but did not himself sign any document. G. was acting in this matter as agent for the vendor, a fact which subsequently he denied, and upon which he brought an action against the vendor. In this action, in which G. was found to have in fact been acting as agent for the vendor, the purchaser offered to give evidence on behalf of the vendor as to the interview with G. which resulted in the above-mentioned verbal agreement. For this purpose the purchaser prepared a statement and subsequently also some answers to specific questions asked by the vendor's solicitors. Neither the document containing the statement nor that containing the answers to the questions was signed by the purchaser, but each document was sent by his solicitors under cover of a letter signed by them to the vendor's solicitors. In an action for specific performance by the vendor against the purchaser,—Held, that the purchaser's solicitors were acting as agent for the purchaser in forwarding the two documents above mentioned, that they had authority to forward them under cover of a signed letter in the way they did, and that the two documents together with the two letters were a sufficient memorandum in writing to satisfy the Statute of Frauds. Smith v. Webster (45 L. J. Ch. 528; 3 Ch. D. 49) distinguished. Jones v. Victoria Graving Dock Co. (46 L. J. Q.B. 219; 2 Q.B. D. 314) and Griffiths Cycle Corporation v. Humber & Co. (68 L. J. Part Performance—Notice to Quit to Weekly Tenants.]—At a time when arrangements had been made for completion of the contract the purchaser requested the vendor to give notice to quit to two weekly tenants who were in occupation of part of the property contracted to be sold. The vendor complied with the request and the tenants gave up possession:—Held, that this constituted an act of part performance as unequivocally referable to the contract, as if the purchaser had taken possession of part of the property, and in itself prevented the purchaser from relying on the Statute of Frauds as a defence. Ib.

3. Particulars and Conditions of Sale.

Whether Particulars Misleading—Sub-lease —Notice of.]—The advertisement of an intended sale of a public house described it as in the occupation of a tenant at a yearly rent, but did not specify the tenure by which the tenant held. An intending purchaser having seen the advertisement made an offer which was accepted, subject to conditions of sale, an agreement incorporating which she signed, and which stated explicitly that the tenant of the public house held under a lease which had ten years to run. There was a conflict of evidence as to whether the intending purchaser understood before signing the agreement that this lease was outstanding, and she sought to repudiate the purchase on the ground that she was misled by the advertisement into supposing that there was a yearly tenant in occupation of the public house. In an action by the plaintiff for the deposit fraud was not pleaded or alleged, but the jury found in answer to questions put to them that the purchaser was misled by the advertisement, and did not understand when signing the agreement that there was the lease of the public house outstanding:—Held, that there was no question for the jury and that a verdict should have been directed for the plaintiff; that the advertisement was not misleading; and that, applying the principle of Carroll v. Keayes (Ir. R. 8 Eq. 97), it was sufficient to put the purchaser on enquiry as to the tenure under which the occupier held; and that in the absence of fraud she was bound by the agreement which she signed specifying the actual tenure. Clements v. Conroy, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 500—C.A.

Semble, there is no conflict in principle between Carroll v. Keayes (supra) and Caballero v. Henty (43 L. J. Ch. 635; L. R. 9 Ch. 447). Ib.

—— Under-lease for Lease—Lease Dated Prior to Commencement of Title.]—A vendor contracted to sell a leasehold house and premises. It appeared from the abstract of title that the lease was an under-lease and that the property formed part of larger pieces of land comprised in certain head-leases. The purchaser objected that she would be liable to distress for rent for the whole premises comprised in the head-leases and also to eviction under the conditions of re-entry for breaches of covenant committed in respect of the remaining property, and she required the vendor to obtain a release at his own expense. The existence of the head-leases was disclosed in the under-lease which formed the root of title:—Held, that the objection was a good one, that the deposit must be returned, and the purchaser's costs of investigating the title paid by the vendor. Darlington v. Hamilton (23 L. J. Ch. 1000; Kay, 550) and Creswell v. Davidson (56 L. T. 811) followed. Lloyds

Agricultural Land — "Bush fruit" — Improvements—Written Consent of Landlord—Claim for Compensation by Tenant—Liability of Purchaser—Notice of Tenancy Agreement.] —Agricultural lands were put up for sale by public auction. The particulars described certain parts of the lands as "bush fruit." One of the conditions provided that the purchasers were to be deemed to have notice of, and to take subject to the terms of, all the existing tenancies. The purchaser of the lot under "bush fruit" did not inspect, or ask to inspect, the lease or agreement affecting the property, either previously to or at the sale. Before completion, the vendor, at the request of the purchaser, gave the tenant notice determining his tenancy. Subsequently it was discovered that the tenant had received the written consent of his landlord, the vendor's predecessor in title, to plant the land with "bush fruit," and he put in a claim for compensation under the Agricultural Holdings Act, 1908, s. 2, in respect of the improvement:—Held, that the claim for compensation must be borne by the purchaser. Derby (Earl) and Ferguson's Contract, In re, 81 L. Lands Subject to Rentcharges—Sale in Lots by Tenant for Life—Power to Charge Moneys Paid on Foot of Apportioned Part of Rentcharge on Unsold Lot.]—A tenant for life put up for sale by private treaty lands, subject to a rentcharge, in six separate lots, subject to a condition that each lot would be sold subject to the entire rentcharge, but primarily liable for an apportioned part thereof, and that the purchaser of each lot should covenant for the payment of such apportioned part and for the indemnity of the other lots as regards such apportioned part only, and should charge all moneys payable on foot of such covenant on such lot, and that the vendor for the purpose of such condition should stand in the place of and be deemed to be the purchaser of any unsold lot or lots:—Held, that this was a valid condition on such a sale. Biggs-Atkinson and Ryan's Contract, In re, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 125—Barton, J.

4. Liability for Repairing Covenants.

Leasehold House — Sale by Mortgagee — Breaches of Covenant to Repair—No Express Notice of Breaches—Title—Production of Last Receipt for Rent—Liability of Vendor for Past Breaches of Covenant.] — A mortgagee by assignment of leasehold property contracted to sell the premises and all the residue of the term, and the contract provided that the purchaser should covenant to pay the rent and perform the covenants contained in the lease and to indemnify the mortgagee against the said rent and covenants. The lease contained covenants for repair, and there had been breaches of them. The purchaser had inspected the property, but had had no express notice of the breaches of covenant to repair, and at the date of the contract both he and the mortgagee were in fact unaware that there had been such breaches. There was no express agreement on the part of the mortgagee to give a good title:—Held, that the mortgagee as vendor was bound to make good such breaches, and that in the circumstances the production by the vendor of the receipt for rent last due was not, under section 3, sub-section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, in itself conclusive evidence of the due performance of the covenants of lease. Taunton and West of England Perpetual Benefit Building Society and Roberts's Contract, In re, 81 L. Contract for Sale of Land Free from Incumbrances—Improvement Charge on Land—Incidence of Liability to Pay.]—The improvement charge which, under section 61 of the London County Council (Improvements) Act, 1899, may be placed on lands the value of which has been increased by the improvement there referred to, does not become a charge on any land until the assessment for the charge has been approved by the County Council under sub-section 5 of the section and the amount defined by the assessment becomes a charge and incumbrance under sub-section 16. Where, therefore, after the date of a contract for the sale of land free from incumbrances, the County Council approved an assessment of an improvement charge on the land, of which both vendor and purchaser were ignorant, though notice of the Council's intention to impose a charge had been served before the contract,—Held, that the purchaser was not entitled to a conveyance free from the charge. Stock v. Meakin (69 L. J. Ch. 401; [1900] 1 Ch. 683) distinguished. Farrer and Gilbert's Contract, In re, 83 L. J. Ch. 177; [1914] 1 Ch. 125; 110 L. T. 23; 58 S. J. 98—Sargant, J

Covenant — Supply of Water — Farmhouse and Farm Buildings—Conversion of Farmhouse into Mansion — Severability of Covenant.] — A conveyance contained a covenant by the plaintiffs to supply water for a farmhouse and for the farm buildings. The defendant, who became owner of the farmhouse, converted it into a residential mansion:—Held, that the covenant was severable into a covenant to supply the farmhouse and a covenant to supply the farm buildings, and that though the obligation to supply the farmhouse had ceased, the obligation to supply the farm buildings remained. Hadham Rural Council v. Crallan, 83 L. J. Ch. 717; [1914] 2 Ch. 138; 111 L. T. 154; 78 J. P. 361; 12 L. G. R. 707; 58 S. J. 635; 30 T. L. R. 514—Neville, J.

Parcels — Plan — Falsa Demonstratio — "Things omitted or knowingly suffered" — Implied Covenant for Good Right to Convey.] —Where there are several descriptions of the parcels in a conveyance which, when evidence of surrounding facts is admitted, are not consistent one with the other, there is no general rule by which a Court can decide which description ought to prevail, and the order in which the conflicting descriptions occur is not conclusive. The respondent conveyed land to the appellant, and in the deed the parcels were described in four different ways: First, by the name which the premises bore; secondly, by their acreage; thirdly, by the names of the occupiers; and fourthly, by delineation and tint on a plan indorsed on the deed. The first three descriptions were all more or less inaccurate. On the plan a small strip of land was coloured which was not the property of the respondent. It had formerly been a part of the land of the respondent, but he or his predecessors in title had allowed a title by adverse possession to be acquired against him:—Held, that the plan, being a perfectly definite delimitation of the land expressed to be conveyed by the deed, must prevail, and that the purchaser was entitled to damages for breach of the implied covenant for a good right to convey, the extinction of the vendor's title to the strip of land being a "thing omitted or knowingly suffered" within section 7, subsection 1 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. Eastwood v. Ashton, 84 L. 6. Restrictive Covenants.

Restriction on User of Leased Premises—Restrictive Covenant Contained in Deed Relating to other Premises—Surrender of Lease—Acceptance by Landlord without Notice of Restrictive Covenant—Grant of New Lease to Lessee with Notice—Enforceability of Restrictive Covenant on Lessee.] — The defendant I. S. was the lessee of premises No. 137 High Street, East Ham, where he carried on the business of a pork butcher. The lease contained a covenant by him that he would not carry on in those premises any noisy or offensive trade other than that of a pork butcher. He was also the lessee of premises No. 170 High Street, East Ham, where he carried on the business of a general butcher. By a deed of assignment I. S. sold to the plaintiff his leasehold interest in No. 170, and the goodwill of the business carried on there, and covenanted to use his best endeavours to promote the said business and to secure to the plaintiff, his executors, administrators, and assigns, the full advantage of his, the vendor's, connection and custom in the said business, and also that he, his executors, administrators, or assigns, would not carry on or be concerned or interested in or assist any other person to carry on or be concerned or obtain any interest in the trade or business of a butcher within three miles of No. 170 High Street, East Ham, and also that he, his executors, administrators, or assigns, would not deal in fresh meat other than pork at No. 137 High Street. Subsequently I. S. determined to give up the business which he was carrying on at No. 137, and his son, the defendant, G. S., who was also a butcher and who was aware of the last-mentioned restrictive covenant contained in the deed of assignment, was minded to carry it on. I. S. surrendered his lease of No. 137 to the landlord, who granted a new lease to G. S., by the terms of which G. S. was entitled, so far as the landlord was concerned, to carry on in those premises the business of a general butcher. G. S. accordingly commenced to carry on at No. 137 the business of a general butcher. The plaintiff claimed damages against I. S. for breach of the covenants in the deed of assignment, and an injunction against G. S. to restrain him from dealing in fresh meat other than pork at No. 137:—Held, by Scrutton, J., that the plaintiff was entitled to damages against I. S. for breach of covenant and to an injunction against G. S. as claimed. Held, by the Court of Appeal, on an appeal by G. S., that the injunction must be set aside, on the ground that the landlord had no actual notice of the restrictive covenant, and there was nothing to justify the inference that he had constructive notice, and that G. S., being therefore in the position of a purchaser with notice from a previous purchaser without notice, was entitled to use the premises free from any restraint by reason of the restrictive covenant. Wilkes v. Spooner, 80 L. J. K.B. 1107; [1911] 2 K.B. 473; 104 L. T. 911; 55 S. J. 479; 27 T. L. R. 426—C.A.

Building Agreement — Covenant to Keep Windows Closed—Covenant to Run with Land—Flat—Notice to Tenant—Injunction.]—A builder, L., who had entered into an agreement with a landlord by which a lease of certain property was to be granted him on the completion of certain buildings thereon, covenanted with B., the owner of adjoining land, that the windows in the said buildings facing B.'s land should be obscured and fixed. A block of flats was erected and a lease granted to L., by whom it was subsequently mortgaged and the equity of redemption released. The defendant became tenant of one of the flats, and opened one of the fixed windows:—Held, that the covenant was a restrictive covenant, binding on the leasehold interest, of which the defendant had constructive notice, and could be enforced by injunction. Abbey v. Gutteres, 55 S. J. 364—Warrington, J.

Building Scheme — Building Stipulations — Right Reserved to Allow Departure therefrom —"Vendor."]—An owner of a building estate who has sold certain lots thereof subject to a building scheme and restrictive covenants or stipulations, one of which reserves the right to the "vendor" to allow a departure from the stipulations, may allow a departure therefrom to one claiming title from an original purchaser, notwithstanding that the person so claiming title and his predecessors in title have covenanted to observe the stipulations which were set out verbatim in their conveyances; because one of the stipulations is that the "vendor" reserves the right to allow a departure therefrom. Mayner v. Payne, 83 L. J. Ch. 897; [1914] 2 Ch. 555; 111 L. T. 375; 58 S. J. 740—Neville, J.

"Vendor" in such a case, where no definition of the word is given, means the original vendor. Ib.

—— Change in Character of Locality — Injunction.]—In refusing to grant the equitable relief of specific performance of a restrictive covenant by way of injunction the Court is entitled to take into consideration the fact of a general change in the character of the neighbourhood irrespective of any particular acts or omissions of the plaintiff and his predecessors in title. Observations of James, L.J., in German v. Chapman (47 L. J. Ch. 250; 7 Ch. D. 271) and of Lindley, L.J., in Knight v. Simmonds (65 L. J. Ch. 583; [1896] 2 Ch. 294) considered and applied. Sobey v. Sainsbury, 83 L. J. Ch. 103; [1913] 2 Ch. 513; 109 L. T. 393; 57 S. J. 836—Sargant, J.

—— Trade — Change in Character of Neighbourhood—Acquiescence—Fried-fish Shop.]—Purchasers of land laid out upon a building scheme in 1862 covenanted to observe certain stipulations, one of which prohibited any trade or manufacture from being carried on upon the estate. Subsequent purchasers of other land on the estate purchased with notice of and subject to this covenant. One of them had permitted four houses upon land purchased by him to be turned into shops:—Held, that, in the circumstances, his executors were entitled to restrain a purchaser from him from carrying on the trade of a fried-fish vendor on his premises, in breach of the original covenant. To disentitle an owner to enforce a restrictive covenant it is not sufficient to establish a change in the character of the neighbourhood without positive evidence of personal acquiescence in the change on the part of the person seeking to enforce the covenant. Pulleyne v. France, 57 S. J. 173—C.A.

—— Definite Scheme—House not to be Used as Shop—Alteration in Neighbourhood.]—A covenant, which was inserted in a conveyance of a plot of land by the owner of a building estate in accordance with a definite scheme, provided that "No house shall be used as a shop," and a company which purchased the plot with notice of the covenant erected on the plot a building to be used as a club, the ground floor being composed of lock-up shops, which they had let or were intending to let to tradesmen. In an action by the owner of the unsold portions of the estate against the purchasers for a breach of the covenant the defendants contended that the plaintiff had caused a change in the character of the neighbourhood by permitting the erection of shops, and that the covenant merely meant that no dwelling house should be converted into a shop:—Held, that the defendants had failed to prove a change in the character of the neighbourhood, and that they had committed a breach of the covenant and the plaintiff was entitled to an injunction against them. Ramuz v. Leigh-on-Sea Conservative and Unionist Club, 31 T. L. R. 174—Eve, J.

Agreement for Restrictive Covenant in Conveyance Affecting Adjoining Property of Vendor—Adjoining Property Sold before Completion — Covenant not Enforceable.] — In a contract for the sale of land the purchaser agreed that she would covenant in the conveyance for herself, her heirs and assigns, with the vendor, his heirs and assigns, owners and occupiers of adjoining land belonging to the vendor, not to use the premises for any trade which might depreciate his adjoining property. Before the conveyance was executed the vendor died and his executors sold and conveyed away all his adjoining property. The contract did not form part of a building scheme. In the conveyance the purchaser, her heirs and assigns, covenanted with the vendor's executors not to use the premises so as to depreciate the value of the adjoining property:—Held, that the vendors having parted before the conveyance with all the adjoining land, the premises were not subject to the restrictive stipulation. Where there is a conveyance of land it expresses the final and concluded terms of the contract between the parties, and the terms cannot be altered or extended by reference to the antecedent contract of purchase. Millbourn v. Lyons, 83 L. J. Ch. 737; [1914] 2 Ch. 231; 111 L. T. 388; 58 S. J. 578—C.A.

Conveyance Subject to Easements—No Reservation on Reconveyance — Rights of Way and Drainage—Mistake—Rectification—Constructive Notice.]—The G. estate was offered in eight lots by public auction, subject to a stipulation that each lot was sold subject to all occupation ways and methods of drainage enjoyed by the vendors and their tenants. N. purchased the whole estate, and on June 1, 1910, agreed to sell lot 6, which another lot (3) adjoined, to H., upon the conditions read at the auction. The G. estate was conveyed to N. subject to easements. N. conveyed lot 3 to the plaintiffs in February, 1911. N. had previously, in November, 1910, conveyed lot 6 to the defendant H., who mortgaged it to C., the same solicitor acting for H. on his purchase and for H. and C. as to the mortgage. Rights of occupation way and drainage in fact existed over the part of the G. estate conveyed to H.:—Held, that, the conveyance to H. containing no reservation, the fact that lot 6 was sold subject to the privileges in favour of lot 3 would not, if N. had not parted with lot 3, have entitled the plaintiffs to rectification of H.'s conveyance without shewing mutual mistake, which was not proved. At any rate, there was no such right to rectification when N. had conveyed lot 3 by deed to which H. was not a party. Slack v. Hancock, 107 L. T. 14—Eve, J.

The inspection referred to in section 3, subsections 1 and 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1882, does not extend to a personal examination of the property. Ib.

Building Plans to be Approved by Vendor's Surveyor — Liability for Surveyor's Fees —

Custom.]—Where a conveyance of land in the interests of the vendor restricts building by the purchaser and provides that the purchaser's building plans shall be approved by the vendor's surveyor, the surveyor's fees, in the absence of express stipulation, are payable by the vendor who employs him. The purchaser will not be made liable for such charges upon evidence of a general custom where such evidence is not incontestable and does not extend to the locality in which the property is situate. Reading Industrial Co-operative Society v. Palmer, 81 L. Benefit of Restrictive Covenant — Covenant Running with Land—"Negative easement"—Covenant Enforceable in Equity.]—Purchasers of land sold in plots for building in 1880 entered into restrictive covenants with the tenant for life of a settled estate, who had the legal estate therein, and the trustees, who had only a power of sale. There was no general building scheme applicable to the estate as a whole, but similar covenants were entered into by purchasers of property in the same road:—Held, that the benefit of the covenant ran with the land in equity in the same manner as a negative easement, and that an adjoining owner was entitled to enforce the covenant against a purchaser and his tenant, although the original legal estate of the covenantee had ceased to exist. Rogers v. Hosegood (69 L. J. Ch. 652; [1900] 2 Ch. 388) applied. Long v. Gray, 58 S. J. 46—C.A.

Covenant not to Build on Land — Covenant on behalf of Covenanter and Assigns—Sale of Land by Covenantor—Mortgage by Purchaser—Notice of Covenant to Purchaser and Mortgagee—Covenantee Owning no Adjoining Land — Alleged Breach of Covenant — Right of Covenantee to Enforce Covenant against Purchaser and Mortgagee.]—A derivative owner of land, deriving title under a person who has entered into a restrictive covenant concerning the land, is not bound by the covenant even if he took with notice of its existence, if the covenantee has no land adjoining or affected by the observance or non-observance of the covenant. London County Council v. Allen, 83 L. J. K.B. 1695; [1914] 3 K.B. 642; 111 L. T. 610; 78 J. P. 419; 12 L. G. R. 1003—C.A.

In 1907, M.A., the owner of land in the Metropolis, as a condition of his obtaining permission from the London County Council to his laying out a new road on the land, entered into a covenant with the Council "for himself, his heirs and assigns, and other the persons claiming under him, and so far as practicable to bind the land and hereditaments herein mentioned into whosoever hands the same may come" that he or they would not erect or cause or permit to be erected any building, structure, or other erection upon a plot forming part of the land without the consent of the Council. In 1908 M. A. mortgaged the land, including the plot. In July, 1911, his wife, E. A., built three houses on the plot, the consent of the Council not having been obtained. In August, 1911, the mortgage was redeemed, and the mortgagee with the concurrence of M. A., conveyed the land including the plot to E. A. in fee. In October, 1911, E. A. mortgaged the land and houses to N. in fee. The Council did not own any land adjoining or in the neighbourhood of the land in question. The Council brought an action against M. A., E. A., and N. for alleged breach of the covenant. For the purposes of the case it was assumed that E. A. and N. had had notice of the covenant:—Held, that, while the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed as against the defendant M. A., the original covenantor, they were not entitled to succeed as against the defendants E. A. and N., who held on derivative titles, under M. A., inasmuch as they, the plaintiffs, had no land in the neighbourhood capable of enjoying the benefit of the covenant. Ib.

Misrepresentation.]—Where two parties are negotiating at arm's length a general communication, which is in fact untrue, made where there was no duty of disclosure on the party making it, is not such a misrepresentation as to be ground for the rescission of a contract. Kelly v. Enderton, 82 L. J. P.C. 57; [1913] A.C. 191; 107 L. T. 781—P.C.

Latent Defect — Watercourse under Property.]—A purchaser is not entitled to rescission on account of a defect in the property not so material as to be within the principle of Flight v. Booth (4 L. J. C.P. 66; 1 Bing. N. C. 370), although the vendor was aware of it and did not disclose it to him. Carlish v. Salt (75 L. J. Ch. 175; [1906] 1 Ch. 335) distinguished. Shepherd v. Croft, 80 L. J. Ch. 170; [1911] 1 Ch. 521; 103 L. T. 874—Parker, J.

The plaintiffs contracted to sell to the defendant a house and grounds possessing building advantages, the defendant purchasing primarily for residential purposes, but intending in certain eventualities to develop the property for building. A natural underground watercourse ran across the property, culverted or piped throughout its course by the owners through whose lands it passed; and when the property was inspected by the defendant's agents the piping was exposed at the bottom of a hole dug in the lawn of the house. They, however, did not observe it, and the plaintiffs, though aware of the existence of the watercourse, did not disclose it to the defendant. The contract provided that the property was to be sold subject to all drainage, sewer, and other easements affecting it, and also that no compensation was to be claimed in respect of any error or misstatement that should be discovered; but the plaintiffs waived the latter provision:—Held, that the watercourse was not a drain or sewer vested in the local authority, nor an easement affecting the property; but that it was a latent defect, though not so material as that if specific performance were granted the defendant would not get substantially that for which she contracted; and that the plaintiffs were entitled to specific performance with a reduction of the purchase money. Ib.

Quære, whether the plaintiffs, if they had insisted on the provision excluding compensation, would have been entitled to specific performance without a reduction. Ib.

Damage Caused by Vendor to Subject-matter —Duty of Purchaser Repudiating.]—The purchaser of a boarding establishment in leasehold premises took possession by agreement before the date fixed for completion. A distress having been put in for rent due from the vendor, the purchaser gave the boarders notice to quit, and repudiated the contract:—Held, that this circumstance was not so damaging or destructive to the subject-matter as to entitle the purchaser to repudiate. Per Farwell, L.J.: The giving notice to quit was wrongful, as it was the purchaser's duty, even if entitled to repudiate, to take the best care of the subject-matter till the vendor had an opportunity of resuming control. Dotesio v. Biss (No. 1), 56 S. J. 612—C.A.

Deposit Paid to Stakeholder—No Clause in Contract Forfeiting Deposit — Judgment for Specific Performance—Default by Purchaser—Rescission and Payment of Deposit.]—A purchaser on signing the contract for sale paid a deposit to the vendor's solicitors as stakeholders. The contract did not contain a clause forfeiting the deposit on default by the purchaser. The purchaser failed to complete and the vendor obtained judgment for specific performance, which the purchaser failed to comply with:—Held, that the vendor was entitled to rescission of the contract and also to receive and retain the deposit. Howe v. Smith (53 L. J. Ch. 1055; 27 Ch. D. 89) followed. Jackson v. De Kadieh (39 L. J. N.C. 425; [1904] W. N. 168) not followed. Hall v. Burnell, 81 L. J. Ch. 46; [1911] 2 Ch. 551; 105 L. T. 409; 55 S. J. 737—Eve, J.

Time for Completion—Unreasonable Delay—Time not of Essence of Contract in Equity—Effect of Maxim.]—The maxim that in equity the time fixed for completion is not of the essence of a contract does not apply to cases in which the stipulation as to time cannot be disregarded without injustice to one or other of the parties, or where the conduct of either party has been such as to disentitle him to equitable relief; as where a vendor has been guilty of unnecessary delay in completion, and the purchaser has served him with a notice limiting a reasonable time at the expiration of which he will treat the contract as at an end. Stickney v. Keeble (No. 1), 84 L. J. Ch. 259; [1915] A.C. 386; 112 L. T. 664—H.L. (E.)

—— Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-s. 7.]—Section 25, sub-section 7 of the Judicature Act, 1873, does not apply to cases in which the Court is asked to disregard a stipulation as to time in an action for common law relief, if it be established that under the circumstances equity would not, prior to the Act, have granted specific performance or restrained the action. Ib.

Payment into Court to Meet Incumbrance—Amount Paid in Proving Insufficient — Liability of Purchase Money to Make Good Deficiency.]—Where, upon a sale of land which is subject to a charge of capital money—such as by a term of years to secure portions—payment into Court is made of a sum of money under section 5 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, to provide for the charge, the charge does not become extinguished as against the purchase money receive by or on behalf of the vendors, but the purchase money remains liable to make up any deficiency that may arise owing to the money paid into Court proving inadequate to meet the charge in full when it falls due. Wilberforce, In re; Wilberforce v. Wilberforce, 84 L. Covenant to Maintain Vendor.]—A assigned by deed to her son a dwelling house and farm in consideration of natural love and affection, and of the covenants on the part of the son thereinafter contained. The deed contained a covenant by the son that he, his executors, administrators, or assigns, would maintain A and her daughter during their lives and permit them to occupy the dwelling house:—Held, that there was a lien on the lands for such maintenance which was binding as against a subsequent purchaser for value with notice. Richardson v. M'Causland (Beatty, 457) applied and followed. Kelaghan v. Daly, [1913] 2 Ir. Title Depending Partly on Statute of Limitations—Unwilling Purchaser—Rescission.]—A vendor sold land the title to which was to commence, by the conditions of sale, with a certain document. The abstract of title, when delivered, commenced with the document in question; but, instead of tracing the devolution of the land from this document to the purchaser through an uninterrupted succession of documents, it traced it in this manner only to a particular point, and ultimately disclosed a possessory title in the vendor, commencing from this point, which, though good, was good only by virtue of the Real Property Limitation Acts:—Held (Fletcher Moulton, L.J., dissenting), that the title was one that the Court would force upon an unwilling purchaser in an action for specific performance. Games v. Bonnor (54 L. Vendor not Bound to Get in Legal Estate—Conveyance as Beneficial Owner—Implied Covenants for Title—Rectification.]—A contract for sale of an under-lease stated facts shewing that the legal term was outstanding in X, and provided that the purchaser should not require the concurrence of X or on that account of any other person except the vendor in the conveyance to him, nor should the vendor be required to get in any estate which might be outstanding in X. The vendor having conveyed as beneficial owner without qualification and given a collateral indemnity against the outstanding estate,—Held, the vendor was entitled to rectification so as to exclude from the implied covenant for title any covenant that the vendor had power to assign the outstanding legal estate. Fenner v. MeNab, 107 L. T. 124—Neville, J.

Leasehold Property—Two Mortgages Created by Vendor's Predecessor in Title for same Term—Second Mortgage Paid off during Continuance of First Mortgage—Purchaser's Right to Demand Surrender by Second Mortgagee.]—A vendor's predecessor in title of leasehold property created two mortgages for all his unexpired term except the last day. The second mortgage was paid off during the continuance of the first mortgage, and a receipt was given by the second mortgagee:—Held, that the Satisfied Terms Act, 1845, did not apply, and that the purchaser was entitled to demand surrender by the second mortgagee before he completed. Moore and Hulme's Contract, In re, 81 L. Legacies Charged on Land—Sale of Part of Land—Purchase-Money Less than Legacies—Purchase-Money Paid to Trustee—Conveyance Freed from Charge.]—Trustees contracted to sell certain land which together with other trust property was charged with the payment of certain legacies, the unpaid balance of which amounted to 16,000*l.* No mention of the charge was made in the contract. The whole of the purchase money (3,000*l.*) was proposed to be paid to the trustee of the settled legacies. The purchaser objected that a good title could be made without payment to the trustee of the settled legacies of the full balance of 16,000*l.* and interest:—Held, that on payment to the trustee of the 3,000*l.* the premises could be assured to the purchaser freed and discharged from the 16,000*l.* and interest. Morrell and Chapman's Contract, In re, 84 L. Business Premises—Contract Contained in Lease — Windows — Light Enjoyed under Agreements with Neighbouring Owners — Non-disclosure of Agreements Prior to Lease—Warranty as to Ancient Lights—Licence to Enter Premises—Agreements not Binding on Land—Specific Performance—Forcing Title on Purchaser.]—By a contract contained in a lease made in 1900, under which, in an event that happened, the lessee agreed to purchase the demised property, which consisted of certain shops and warehouses described on a plan, but there was no express mention of windows. By two agreements in identical terms made in 1890 between the lessor and adjoining owners he agreed that the user of certain windows, the light through which was admittedly material for his business, should be by licence, that the windows should not open outwards and should be glazed with opaque glass, and that the lessor, his heirs or assigns, would within one month after determination of the licence remove the windows and fill up the openings with like materials as the wall in which they were, and that in default the adjoining owners and all persons deriving title under them might at the expense of the lessor, his heirs or assigns, enter upon the premises, remove the windows, and fill up the openings. The agreements were determinable by notice given by the adjoining owners. No notice of these agreements was given to the lessee, the purchaser, who only discovered them on investigating the title, and, an action for specific performance having been brought against him by the representatives of the lessor, he objected to the title on the ground of material misdescription:—Held, reversing Astbury, J., that the plaintiffs were entitled to a decree for specific performance; that there was no warranty in the contract that the de facto windows were ancient lights; that the consent in writing which prevented the statutory period of prescription from beginning to run did not create an incumbrance on the property, and therefore there was no obligation to put it in the abstract; that the agreements would not bind the purchaser within the principle of Tulk v. Moxhay (18 L. J. Ch. 83; 2 Ph. 774), as they were positive in form and not negative, and involved the expenditure of money; and that, even if they implied a negative, that would not be sufficient to bring the case within Tulk v. Moxhay (18 L. J. Ch. 83; 2 Ph. 774); that the clause in the agreements giving a right of entry was a mere licence, passing no interest in land and not binding upon the purchaser after conveyance, and that if it amounted to an interest in the land it would be void as a perpetuity, and that specific performance should be ordered against the purchaser, inasmuch as, in view of the decision of the Court, the position of the purchaser, after completion, with regard to the windows would not be one of any doubt. Greenhalgh v. Brindley (70 L. J. Ch. 740; [1901] 2 Ch. 324), approved and followed. Bewley v. Atkinson (49 L. J. Ch. 153; 13 Ch. D. 283) considered. Smith v. Colbourne, 84 L. J. Ch. 112; [1914] 2 Ch. 533; 111 L. Contract for Sale of Lease—Obligation to make a Good Title—Landlord's Right of Re-entry after Notice of Dilapidations.] — An assignor of a lease who by non-compliance with a dilapidation notice served upon him by his landlord has rendered the lease liable to forfeiture cannot make a good title under an open contract, although the assignee has tendered and the landlord has accepted rent subsequently to the date of the contract, but before completion has been effected. Martin, In re; Dixon, ex parte, 106 L. T. 381—Phillimore, J.

Registered Title Deeds—Sale According to Plan—Discrepancy in Area between Plan and Deeds.]—In a sale of land in Scotland the previous negotiations, whether oral or written, are admissible in evidence to prove what was in fact the subject of sale—not to alter the contract, but to identify its subject. There is no doctrine of law in Scotland that when an estate is sold under a general name, that name is held to designate the estate as described in the title deeds recorded in the Register of Sasines. The meaning of a descriptive name in a particular contract cannot be determined by a fixed rule of law without regard to the facts of the case. Gordon-Cumming v. Houldsworth, 80 L. J. P.C. 47; [1910] A.C. 537—H.L. (Sc.)

Where land was sold as shewn upon a plan, and there was no dispute on the validity of this contract, and there was a discrepancy between the area comprised in the plan and in that of the registered title,—Held, that the property sold was that which was delineated on the plan, not that of the registered title. Ib.

Settled Land—Contract for Sale—Document Prior in Date to Commencement of Title—Sale by Tenant for Life—Land in Ireland—Order of Court in Ireland Appointing Trustees—Purchase of Land in England—Capital Moneys—Purchaser's Right to Enquire into Source of.] —The vendor contracted to sell land in England under a contract fixing the commencement of title in 1874 and stating that he was selling as tenant for life under his statutory power under the Settled Land Acts. The settlement in question was a compound settlement created by several instruments, some of which, including a will made in 1836, were dated or made prior to the time fixed for the commencement of title, and the last of which was a re-settlement made in 1902. The vendor had, however, voluntarily furnished an abstract of all the earlier documents constituting the compound settlement except the will of 1836, which was recited in one of these documents dated in 1860. The compound settlement originally comprised land in Ireland alone, and by an order of the High Court of Justice in Ireland, made in 1908, the present trustees were appointed trustees of the compound settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts. In 1910 the land in England, the subject of the contract, was conveyed to the trustees and their heirs to the uses, upon the trusts, and subject to the powers, charges, and provisions to, upon, and subject to which under the compound settlement the freehold lands therein comprised stood limited. The conveyance contained a statement to the effect that the purchase was made at the direction of the tenant for life out of capital moneys in the hands of the trustees arising under the compound settlement :—Held, that the purchasers were precluded by the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, s. 3, sub-s. 3, from requiring production of the probate of the will of 1836 or an abstract or copy thereof. Arran (Earl) and Knowlesden, In re, 81 L. J. Ch. 547; [1912] 2 Ch. 141; 106 L. T. 758—Warrington, J.

Held, also, that under the order of the Court in Ireland the trustees were in the position of trustees of the settlement for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts in relation to the subsequently acquired land in England without being reappointed by the Court in England. Ib.

Held, also, that the purchasers were not entitled to go behind the statement in the conveyance or to require other evidence that the purchase moneys arose from the sale of land in Ireland subject to the compound settlement. Ib.

II. DEFENCE OF THE REALM.

King's Prerogative — Right to Requisition Land—Compensation.]—The Crown has power in time of war to requisition lands and buildings which are necessary for the defence of the realm without making any compensation therefor, both under the King's prerogative and also under the Defence of the Realm (Consolidation) Act, 1914, and the regulations made thereunder. X's Petition of Right, In re, 84 L. J. K.B. 1961; [1915] 3 K.B. 649; 113 L. T. 575; 59 S. J. 665; 31 T. L. R. 596—C.A.

High Treason—Aiding and Comforting the King's Enemies — Intent — Assisting German Subjects Resident in England to go to Germany for Military Service — Direction to Jury.] — The appellant, who was born in Germany but was a naturalised British subject since 1905, and German Consul at Sunderland, was indicted on a charge of high treason by adhering to, aiding, and comforting the King's enemies—namely, the subjects of the German Emperor. The overt acts alleged against him were that he incited and endeavoured to procure, and in fact procured, certain German subjects resident in England to leave this country and go to Germany and there enter the military service of the German Emperor, and assisted them with money to do so. His defence was based on two grounds—first, that, at the time he did the overt acts alleged against him, he did not know that a state of war existed between Great Britain and Germany; and secondly, that in doing such acts he had no traitorous intent. The learned Judge at the trial directed the jury that, if they were satisfied that at the time of doing the acts alleged against him, the appellant knew that a state of war existed between Great Britain and Germany, they must find him guilty, and further directed them that the belief of the appellant that the acts were lawful constituted no defence:—Held, on appeal, that, unless the jury were satisfied that the appellant in doing the acts alleged against him was intending to aid and comfort the King's enemies, they could not find him guilty, and that, as there was no direction to them by the learned Judge to that effect, the conviction must be quashed. Rex v. Ahlers, 84 L. J. K.B. 901; [1915] 1 K.B. 616; 112 L. T. 558; 79 J. P. 255; 31 T. L. R. 141—C.C.A.

Communicating Information to Enemy — Indictment—Averment—Intention of Assisting Enemy.]—An indictment under Regulations 18 and 48 of the Defence of the Realm (Consolidation) Regulations, 1914, for attempting to communicate naval and military information to the enemy, is not vitiated by inserting in each count the words "with the intention of assisting the enemy." Rex v. Kuepferle, 31 T. L. R. 461—C.C.A.

—— Attempt—Intention to Assist the Enemy — Count Charging Attempt — Averment of Intent in Same Count—Intent a Question for Jury — Truth or Falsity of Information — Materiality.]—By Regulation 18 of the Defence of the Realm (Consolidation) Regulations, 1914, made under the Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act, 1914, it was made an offence triable by court martial to attempt without lawful authority to communicate to the enemy military information which is calculated to be or might be useful to the enemy. By Regulation 57 a person found guilty of this offence is liable to penal servitude for life or any less punishment, "or, if the Court finds that the offence was committed with the intention of assisting the enemy, to suffer death or any less punishment." By section 1, sub-section 1 of the Defence of the Realm (Amendment) Act, 1915, the offence was made triable by a civil Court with a jury. The appellant was indicted for attempting to communicate military information to the enemy with the intention of assisting the enemy, the averment as to the intent being contained in the same count as the charge of the attempt. The presiding Judge left the question of intent to the jury, and directed them that it made no difference whether the information sent by the appellant was true or untrue, and the appellant was convicted by the jury of committing the offence with intent to assist the enemy:—Held, that the averment as to intent was rightly inserted in the count charging the attempt, that the question of intent was a question of fact and was rightly left to the jury, that it was immaterial whether the information communicated by the appellant was true or false, and that therefore the conviction must be affirmed. Rex v. M., 32 T. L. R. 1—C.C.A.

Information Useful to Enemy—Communication—Validity of Regulation.]—The applicant, who was a newspaper reporter, dispatched from Portland to newspapers in London telegrams giving information as to the sinking of a German submarine, and the information would have been of service to the enemy. The applicant knew that the telegrams would go through the Press Bureau, and he supposed that the officials would strike out anything undesirable. The telegrams were stopped by the Press Bureau and the information never appeared in any of the newspapers. The applicant was convicted under regulation 18 of the regulations made under section 1, subsection 1 of the Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act, 1914. On an application for a certiorari to quash the conviction, on the ground that the regulation was ultra vires and that the conviction was bad,—Held, that the regulation was not ultra vires and that the Justices were justified in convicting. Dyson, Ex parte, 31 T. L. R. 425—D.

Outbreak of War — Effect on Contract — Restraints of Princes.] — By an agreement made in 1910, which was to be in force till 1916, the defendants agreed to carry cement for the plaintiffs by sea from the Thames to the Forth at a certain rate per ton, subject to an exception in the case of "perils of the seas, enemies, pirates, arrests, and restraints of princes, rulers, and peoples." The freight was fixed at a low rate in view of the fact that the defendants did a large trade in carrying coal by sea from the Forth to the Thames. After the outbreak of war many of the defendants' ship were requisitioned by the Government, the ports from which they usually carried coal were closed, restrictions causing delay were placed on ships going from the Thames to the Forth, and the voyage was dangerous. The defendants therefore contended that the contract was suspended and they declined to carry the cement at the agreed rate. They also contended that they were absolved from liability under the above exception and by section 1, sub-section 2 of the Defence of the Realm (Amendment), No. 2, Act, 1915:—Held, that as the Government had not prevented the voyage from being made at all the exception as to restraints of princes did not apply, that the exception as to perils of the seas only applied when a ship had been declared under the contract, that the return coal trade did not lie at the root of the contract, that the parties had not impliedly stipulated for the continuance of peace, and that the above enactment did not relieve the defendants from their obligation to carry out the contract as a whole, and therefore the contract was not suspended. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers v. Cory & Son, Lim., 31 T. L. R. 442—Rowlatt, J.

Proceedings Held in Camera—Jurisdiction of Magistrate. —The object of the Defence of the Realm Acts, and the Regulations issued thereunder, being to prevent the publication of anything prejudicial to the safety of the realm, the provision in Regulation 51A for the hearing in camera of any proceedings under that Regulation is not ultra vires; and, as proceedings under Regulation 51A are not a "trial" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 5 of the Defence of the Realm Consolidation Act, 1914, a magistrate has power to exclude the public from such proceedings. Norman, Ex parte, 85 L. J. K.B. 203; 60 S. J. 90—D.

III. TRADING WITH THE ENEMY.

Sale of Goods—C.i.f. Contract—"Payment net cash in Liverpool in exchange for shipping documents"—Goods Carried in Enemy Ship—Tender of Documents after Outbreak of War—Right of Buyers to Refuse to Accept Documents.]—By a contract dated May 11, 1914, the claimants sold to the respondents "about 300 barrels June and/or July shipment Chilean honey per steamer . . . cost, freight, and insurance to Hamburg. . . . Payment: net cash in Liverpool in exchange for shipping documents on presentation of same." Both the claimants and respondents were English firms of merchants carrying on business at Liverpool. The honey was shipped by the claimants on June 28, 1914, at Penco on board the German steamship Menes, and by the bill of lading was to be carried from Penco to Hamburg and there delivered to the claimants or their assigns. The bill of lading contained a condition that "all questions arising under this bill of lading are to be governed by the law of the German Empire and to be decided in Hamburg." War was declared between Great Britain and Germany on August 4, 1914, and on August 5 a Royal proclamation was issued warning all persons carrying on business in the British dominions against trading in goods destined for persons resident, carrying on business, or being in the German Empire. On the same day a tender of the shipping documents was made on behalf of the claimants to the respondents, who, however, refused to accept the documents. The Menes had not arrived at Hamburg at the date of the tender of documents:—Held, that the respondents were entitled to refuse to carry out the contract, because to carry out the contract would be a direct violation of the proclamation, and therefore illegal. Duncan, Fox & Co. v. Schrempft & Bonke, 84 L. Subjects of Allied State — Contract — Illegality.]—Before the war with Germany the plaintiffs, who were Belgians carrying on business in Antwerp and London, made with the defendant, who was a German carrying on business in Hamburg and before the war in London also, c.i.f. contracts by which the plaintiffs sold to the defendant certain hides. After the outbreak of war the defendant repudiated the contracts. In an action by the plaintiffs against the defendant for damages, —Held, that as the plaintiffs were subjects of a State allied with this country, the contracts, having been made with a person who was a subject of a State now at war with this country, became illegal on the outbreak of war, and after that date there could be no breach of them, and therefore the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover. Kreglinger & Co. v. Cohen, 31 T. L. R. 592—Bray, J.

Branch Business in England — Action on Contracts made by Branch.]—By clause 6 of the proclamation of September 9, 1914, against trading with the enemy, "Where an enemy has a branch locally situated in British, allied, or neutral territory, not being neutral territory in Europe, transactions by or with such branch shall not be treated as transactions by or with an enemy." The plaintiffs, who were cotton-waste manufacturers and were German subjects resident in Germany and had their principal place of business there, but also had a branch in England, brought an action, after the outbreak of war between Great Britain and Germany, upon contracts entered into by the English branch before the war:—Held, that on the outbreak of war the contracts became illegal and the transactions sued on did not come within the above clause, and therefore the plaintiffs could not maintain the action. Wolf v. Carr, Parker & Co., 31 T. L. R. 407—C.A.

Branch Office in Allied Territory—Claim by Branch Office.] — Certain parcels of goods seized as prize were claimed by the shippers, the Japanese branch office of a German company with its head office at Hamburg. The goods were consigned by the claimants from Japan to their order, Hamburg. Section 6 of the Trading with the Enemy Proclamation (No. 2) of September 9, 1914, provides that "where an enemy has a branch locally situated in British, allied, or neutral territory not being neutral territory in Europe, transactions by or with such branch shall not be treated as transactions by or with an enemy":—Held, that this proclamation did not protect the goods from condemnation; that the sole question was whether or not the goods were German goods; and that the goods must be regarded as the property of the German company, and not of the Japanese branch. The Eumaeus, 1 P. Cas. 605; 60 S. J. 122; 32 T. L. R. 125—Evans, P.

Marine Insurance—Insurers Alien Enemies — Branch Establishment in England — Right of Insured to Recover Loss under Policy.]—At common law the question whether a man is to be treated as an alien enemy for the purpose of his contracts, rights of suit, and the like, does not depend upon his nationality, or even upon his true domicil, but upon whether he carries on business in this country or not. If he does, it is not illegal, even during war, to have business dealings with him in this country in respect of the business which he carries on here. The same thing is true of a company which has a head office in Germany, but a branch office here, in respect of business transactions with such branch office. Ingle, Lim. v. Mannheim Continental Insurance Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 491; [1915] 1 K.B. 227; 112 L. T. 510; 59 S. J. 59; 31 T. L. R. 41—Bailhache, J.

Paragraph 6 of the Trading with the Enemy Proclamation, No. 2, of September 9, 1914, provides that "where an enemy has a branch locally situated in British, . . . territory, . . . transactions by or with such branch shall not be treated as transactions by or with an enemy." The Trading with the Enemy Proclamation of October 8, 1914, par. 5, provides that, notwithstanding anything contained in the above-mentioned paragraph, "where an enemy has a branch locally situated in British, . . . territory, which carries on the business of insurance or re-insurance of whatever nature, transactions by or with such branch in respect of the business of insurance or re-insurance shall be considered as transactions by or with an enemy." The plaintiffs, British subjects, insured their goods by a policy dated July 31, 1914, with the Bradford office of the defendants against war risk only, and war was declared by Great Britain against Germany on August 4, 1914. The loss of the plaintiffs' goods occurred about the end of August, and the plaintiffs brought an action for the amount of their loss on September 22. The defendants were a company incorporated in Germany, but carried on business in England at their branch office, registered in accordance with the requirements of section 274 of the Companies (Consolidation) Act, 1908, where service of process might be accepted. On the hearing of a summons to transfer the action to the Commercial List, it was contended by the defendants that payment of the loss under the policy to the plaintiffs would be illegal:—Held, first, that payment was not illegal at common law; and secondly, that it was not a "transaction" within the meaning of, and prohibited by, the proclamation of October 8, 1914. Ib.

Partnership in Germany — English and German Partners—Dissolution Prior to Outbreak of War—Transfer of English Assets to English Partner—Claim by English Partner on Contracts made with Firm before the War —Costs.]—Where an English debt, in pursuance of a dissolution of a partnership business carried on in Germany, is transferred by the German partner to the English partner before the outbreak of war between the two countries, payment of the debt to the English partner is not prohibited by sections 6 or 7 of the Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1914. The plaintiff, a British subject, carried on a business in Germany in partnership with a German subject until August 3, 1914, when the partnership was dissolved and the assets and liabilities of the business were transferred to the plaintiff, the intention being that the German partner should take over the German and Austrian assets and liabilities, and that the plaintiff should take over all the rest and continue to carry on the business in London, which he did. The result of the arrangement was that a balance of some 6,000*l.* in favour of the plaintiff, together with the goodwill of the business, was diverted from Germany to England. The plaintiff, as assignee, sued the defendants, an English firm, on a bill of exchange given by them to the German firm, and for goods sold and delivered by the German firm to the defendants, before the war between Great Britain and Germany:—Held, that he was entitled to recover, but, under the special circumstances of the case, without costs. Wilson v. Rago-

Debt Accruing Due before War—Payment to Third Person in England for Ultimate Benefit of Alien Enemy — Improvement of Alien Enemy's Prospect of Recovering Debt on Termination of War—Payment "for the benefit of an enemy."]—The plaintiff, a British subject in England, claimed payment for goods sold by him to the defendants, a London firm, before the outbreak of war. Part of the sum due was payable by the plaintiff to an alien enemy in Germany:—Held, that as the claim at common law was unexceptionable, the plaintiff was entitled to recover, as he consented to hold the amount recovered until a summons to vest it in the custodian appointed under the Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1914, had been taken out, which would obviate the risk of its benefiting an alien enemy. Held, further, that the fact that such payment improved the present position of the alien enemy by giving him further security that he would ultimately recover the money, did not constitute it the offence of trading with the enemy within the meaning of section 1, sub-sections 1 and 2 of the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1914, as being a payment "for the benefit of an enemy" within paragraph 5 (1) of the Trading with the Enemy Proclamation (No. 2) of September 9, 1914. Schmitz v. Van der Veen & Co., 84 L. Payment by Partner to Neutral of Debt of Partnership Containing Enemy Partners — "Benefit of an enemy."] — The appellant, resident in this country, was a member of a firm which carried on business in Germany, with a branch in England represented by him. The other partners resided in Germany, all the partners being British subjects. At the outbreak of war between this country and Germany the partnership owed a Dutch firm in Holland a sum of money for goods supplied to the partnership in Germany before the war. The appellant proposed to the Dutch firm to enter into direct business relations with him, and they agreed to do so if the above debt were paid. The appellant thereupon paid it to a firm in London for transmission through their branch in Holland to the Dutch firm:—Held, that the appellant was guilty of trading with the enemy within the meaning of section 1, sub-sections 1 and 2 of the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1914, inasmuch as it was a payment "for the benefit of an enemy" within paragraph 5 (1) of the proclamation of September 9, 1914, the result of the payment being that the resources of the enemy were thereby either augmented or protected. Held further, that the payment to the firm in London was not a payment "by or on account of enemies to persons resident" in this country, within paragraph 7 of the proclamation. Rex v. Kupfer, 84 L. J. K.B. 1021; [1915] 2 K.B. 321; 112 L. T. 1138; 79 J. P. 270; 32 T. L. R. 223—C.C.A.

At the trial the jury were directed that the question for them was whether the appellant knew that the payment would in fact benefit enemies:—Held, that this was a correct direction. Ib.

Obtaining "goods, wares, or merchandise" from Germany — Lithographic Transfers — Goods the Property of Appellant.] — By the Proclamation against Trading with the Enemy, dated August 5, 1914, all persons resident, carrying on business, or being in the dominion of Great Britain and Ireland, were warned not to supply to or obtain from the German Empire any goods, wares, or merchandise, under penalties. The appellant O. carried on business in London as a lithographer, and the appellant C. was his manager. O. had arrangements with a firm in Germany, who printed lithographic designs for him, that they should supply him free of charge with lithographic transfers in proportion to the number of copies printed by them for him. These lithographic transfers were used for doing lithographic printing in this country. When war was declared between Great Britain and Germany in August, 1914, the appellant O. was entitled to more than 1,000 lithographic transfers free of charge from the German firm. He employed a man to go to Germany in order to obtain some of these transfers. He also sent C. to Holland to meet the representative of the German firm and to make arrangements for transfers to be sent to him. The appellant O. received a number of transfers from Germany, but he did not make any payments to the firm in Germany in respect of the trading account between them. The appellants were charged with conspiring unlawfully to trade with the enemy, and the appellant O. was charged with having unlawfully traded on certain dates and the appellant C. with having aided and abetted him:—Held, that the lithographic transfers were goods, wares, or merchandise within the meaning of the proclamation, and that the obtaining them in the circumstances mentioned above amounted to an obtaining of goods, wares, or merchandise from the German Empire within the meaning of the proclamation, notwithstanding that no payments were due to be made in connection therewith, and that the appellants had therefore been properly convicted. Rex v. Oppenheimer, 84 L. Goods of English Company—Alien Enemy Shareholders — Condemnation.] — Goods belonging to an English company, of which all the directors are enemy subjects resident in an enemy State and of which all the shareholders are either enemy subjects or resident in an enemy State, are not enemy property, and if they are seized as prize they are not liable to condemnation. The Poona, 84 L. Meaning of "Enemy"—Belgian Company — Business Carried on in England.] — The plaintiff company was incorporated under Belgian law on April 1, 1898, and its registered office was in Antwerp, now, together with the greater part of Belgium, occupied by the enemy. The chairman of the company was still in Antwerp, but three of its five directors, all Belgians, were carrying on its business in London. The company owned and worked copper mines in Portugal, the whole output of which was being sold in France and England. The company deposited money with the defendants, a bank in London, for the purposes of its business, on a current account. On July 26, 1915, the company drew a cheque for 100*l.* on the defendants, who refused to pay on the ground that the company was technically an "enemy," and said that they must make a return to the custodian of enemy property in England. The Trading with the Enemy Act of September 18, 1914, s. 1, makes it illegal to trade during the war with the "enemy," and by the Trading with the Enemy Proclamation (No. 2) of September 9, 1914, "enemy country" is defined as meaning the territories of the German and Austro-Hungarian Empires, and "enemy" is defined as meaning "any person or body of persons of whatever nationality resident or carrying on business in the enemy country. . . . In the case of incorporated bodies, enemy character attaches only to those incorporated in an enemy country." The Trading with the Enemy (Occupied Territory) Proclamation of February 16, 1915, provides: "The Proclamations for the time being in force relating to trading with the Enemy shall apply to . . . territory in hostile occupation as they apply to an enemy country." The Trading with the Enemy (Amendment) Act of November 27, 1914, s. 3, and the Trading with the Enemy (Amendment) Act of July 29, 1915, s. 2, require persons holding enemy property to make returns thereof to the custodian:—Held, by the Court of Appeal—first, that the company was not "ex lex," and could therefore sue; secondly, that it was not an "enemy" within the meaning of the proclamations of September 9, 1914, and February 16, 1915; thirdly, that it was not an "enemy" within the meaning of the Trading with the Enemy (Amendment) Act, 1914, s. 3, or the Trading with the Enemy (Amendment) Act, 1915, s. 2; and that its cheque must therefore be paid, and that no return ought to be made to the custodian. Decision of Younger, J., on the first and third points affirmed, and on the second point reversed. Société Anonyme Belge des Mines d'Aljustrel v. Anglo-Belgian Agency, 84 L. J. Shareholder in English Company — Proxies Tendered for Voting—Election of Directors—Branch of Enemy Corporation in London — Limited Licence.] — All intercourse between citizens of two belligerent States which can possibly tend to the advantage of the enemy State or the detriment of a citizen's own State, whether such intercourse is commercial or not, is inconsistent with the state of war between the two States, and therefore forbidden. Robson v. Premier Oil and Pipe Line Co., 84 L. The employment of a British subject as proxy to exercise the voting power of an alien enemy in an English company is an intercourse between him and the alien enemy which is prohibited. Ib.

At a meeting of a company for the election of directors the chairman rejected votes tendered by proxy in respect of shares held by the London branch of a German banking corporation as security for advances:—Held (affirming decision of Sargant, J.), that the votes were rightly rejected as being for the purpose of obtaining a voice in the management of a British trading company, which might be to the detriment of British interests and the advantage of the enemy. Held also, that the rejection of votes was justifiable on the ground that the transaction was a commercial transaction. Held, further, that the London branch of the German bank was not authorised to exercise the right of voting by virtue of the provisions of clause 6 of the Trading with the Enemy Proclamation, 1914, No. 2. Ib.

Obligations of Citizens of Allied States — Bona Fides—Seizure—Sale—Condemnation.] —Before the war between Great Britain and her Allies on the one hand, and Germany and Austria on the other, a French company contracted to sell to a German company a quantity of silver lead, f.o.b. at Ergasteria in Greece, and chartered a Greek steamer to convey the lead to Newcastle. The war broke out while the loading was being carried out, and a week later the steamer sailed for Antwerp and Newcastle with the cargo on board. The French company diverted her to Swansea and there the silver lead was seized as prize and sold. The Crown admitted that at the time of seizure the property in the goods was still in the French company:—Held, that the facts shewed that the French company had been trading with the enemy after the outbreak of war, and though their action had been bona fide, yet as the citizens of States allied with Great Britain were under the same obligations with regard to trading with the enemy as the citizens of Great Britain, the silver lead was confiscable, and the proceeds obtained by its sale must be condemned as prize. The Panariellos, 84 L. Consent of Attorney-General to Prosecution —No Proof of Consent Given at Trial—Effect on Conviction.]—A conviction for an offence under section 1 of the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1914, shall not be quashed merely because formal proof of the consent of the Attorney-General to the prosecution has not been given at the trial. Rex v. Metz, 84 L. Inciting to Trade with the Enemy.] — The appellant was indicted upon a charge of soliciting and inciting persons to trade with the enemy, contrary to the provisions of the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1914. Evidence was given to the effect that he made a proposition to a British firm in respect of a transaction which, if carried out without a licence being obtained from the Secretary of State or the Board of Trade, would have constituted an offence against the Act. In the course of the negotiations nothing was said by the appellant as to the obtaining of a licence. The jury convicted the appellant :—Held, that the jury were entitled to come to the conclusion that there was no condition in the proposal made by the appellant that a licence should be obtained, and that consequently an offence had been committed. Rex v. Spencer, 84 L. J. K.B. 1457; 112 L. T. 479—C.C.A.

Proposal to Supply Goods to Enemy through Neutral Intermediary.]—Held, that an indictment charging a merchant with writing and posting a letter to a subject of a neutral State residing in the neutral country, requesting him to write and ask certain enemies if goods could be delivered to them through the neutral, was a relevant charge of proposing to supply goods to the enemy contrary to the proclamation and Trading with the Enemy Act, 1914, although the neutral was not the agent or representative of the enemies. Held further, that the posting of the letter was an overt act which might be sufficient to take the offence out of the stage of preparation into that of perpetration. Lord Advocate v. Innes, [1915] S. C. (J.) 40—Ct. of Just.

"Proposing" or "agreeing" to Trade with Enemy—Proposal and Agreement in Letter to Proposer's Own Agent. — An indictment alleged that two members of a Glasgow firm wrote to their agent at Rotterdam suggesting that these agents should deliver to a German firm a cargo of iron ore which was stored on the quay at Rotterdam awaiting the Glasgow firm's instructions, and that they thereafter wrote to their agents agreeing to certain proposed terms for delivering the ore to the German firm :—Held, that counts in the indictment charging the accused with "proposing" and "agreeing" to supply goods to the enemy in contravention of the proclamation against trading with the enemy and the Trading with the Enemy Acts, 1914, were relevant and were not open to the objection that the proposal and agreement were made to and with the firm's own agents and not to or with the enemy or his agents. Held further that subsequent counts in the indictment charging the accused with "supplying" the ore to the enemy were relevant, although they did not specify the locus where the offence had been committed, it being plain from the indictment as a whole that the locus was Rotterdam. Observed that if persons resident and carrying on business in Scotland supply goods to an enemy, they are subject to the jurisdiction of the Court in Scotland, no matter in what country such persons or goods may chance to be when the goods are supplied. Lord Advocate v. Hetherington, [1915] S. C. (J.) 79—Ct. of Just.

"Supplying" Goods to the Enemy.]—The offence of "supplying" goods to the enemy in contravention of the proclamation and Acts of 1914 dealing with trading with the enemy is not affected by any question as to the ownership of the goods supplied; and, accordingly, the offence may be committed even though the person supplying the goods is not the owner and has no right of disposal, and even though the property in the goods has already vested in the enemy at the date when they are supplied. The offence is not affected by the existence of any contractual obligation to make the supply, or by any conditions as to payments or otherwise adjected to the supply, or by the relation to the supplier of any intermediary through whom the supply is made. Ib.

Patent—Action for Infringement—Appeal by Co-plaintiff Companies—One Co-plaintiff Company an Alien Enemy — Separate Causes of Action—Suspension during War.]—An action for the infringement of a patent was brought by a German company and an English company suing as co-plaintiffs. The claim was for infringement by the defendants during six years, for two of which the patent was vested in the German company, and for four of which it was vested in the English company. The action was dismissed. Both plaintiffs gave notice of appeal. War was subsequently declared against Germany. All the members and directors of the English company except one were German subjects, and a controller of that company was appointed under the Trading with the Enemy Act, 1914. On the appeal coming on to be heard,—Held, that the German company could not be struck out as appellants, and that the appeal must therefore be suspended until after the conclusion of the war. Actien Gesellschaft für Anilin Fabrikation v. Levinstein, Lim., 84 L. Vesting Order — German Bank's Running Account with English Bank—Disputed Credit Balance—Application by Creditor of German Bank for Order Vesting Bank Balance in Custodian.] — Where a German bank had a running account with an English bank and the English bank disputed that they had in their hands a balance belonging to the German bank, the Court refused an application under section 4 of the Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1914, by a creditor of the German bank, for an order vesting the credit balance of the German bank in the custodian. Such an order would place the custodian in the position of an assignee of a disputed debt, and that result was not intended by the Act. Bank für Handel und Industrie, In re, 84 L. J. Ch. 435; [1915] 1 Ch. 848; 113 L. T. 228; 31 T. L. R. 311—Warrington, J.

—— Parties to Summons—Debtor to Enemy Respondent.]—A debtor to an enemy is not a person holding or managing property alleged to belong to the enemy within rule 2 (4) of the Trading with the Enemy (Vesting and Application of Property) Rules, 1915, and therefore is not a proper respondent to a summons taken out by a creditor of an enemy under section 4 of the Act. Ib.

Shares in Limited Company Held by Alien Enemies—Vested in Custodian of Enemy Property — Exercise of Shareholder's Rights by Custodian — Winding up.] — An order made under the Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1914, s. 4, vesting shares in an English limited company held by alien enemies in the custodian of enemy property confers on the custodian all the rights of a shareholder under the articles of association of the company, and he can consequently use the powers given to shareholders by the articles to wind up the company without making any further application to the Court. Pharaon, In re, 85 L. J. Ch. 68; 32 T. L. R. 47—C.A.

The custodian may apply to the Court, and the Court has jurisdiction to give directions as to whether it is proper for him to exercise his rights, but the rights themselves are not thereby affected. Semble, on such an application the company has no locus standi. Ib.

Alien Enemy — Internment of a Merchant Ship Belonging to — Ship Subsequently Requisitioned by Crown — Application by Creditors to Vest Ship in Custodian Trustee—Discretion of Court — "Vesting is expedient for the purposes of this Act."] — Where a German ship was seized as a prize by the Crown after the declaration of war with Germany, and was subsequently requisitioned by the Crown and was in the possession of the Admiralty, section 4 of the Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1914, was held to be inapplicable, and that it was not expedient for the purposes of that Act under the circumstances of the case to make an order vesting property of such a nature as a ship in the custodian trustee. Hemsoth, Lim., In re, 113 L. T. 260—C.A.

—— Life Assurance Policies—Enemy Mortgagee—Application by Trustee in Bankruptcy of English Mortgagor.]—The trustee in bankruptcy of an English mortgagor who has mortgaged life assurance policies to an enemy mortgagee is not a person interested in property belonging to an enemy within section 4 of the Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1914, and therefore is not entitled to apply to the Court for an order vesting the policies in the custodian. Ruben, In re, 84 L. Deep-sea Fishing Vessel—Exemption from Capture.] — An enemy vessel, which is shewn by her size, equipment, and voyage to be a deep-sea fishing vessel engaged in a commercial enterprise which forms part of the trade of the enemy country, is not within the category of coast fishing vessels, so as to be exempt from capture, but is good prize. The Berlin, 84 L. Enemy Limited Company — Appearance in Prize Court — Shareholders — Claimants for Disbursements and Services—Bounty of Crown —Mortgagees—Capture at Sea—"Ignorant of the outbreak of hostilities."]—A German merchant steamship, owned by a German limited company resident in Germany, left a British port some hours before war commenced between this country and Germany, and was captured at sea while still ignorant of the outbreak of hostilities. Article 3 of Convention VI. of the Second Hague Peace Conference, 1907, provides that enemy merchant ships which left their last port of departure before the commencement of the war, and are encountered on the high seas while still ignorant of the outbreak of hostilities, may not be confiscated, but are merely liable to be detained, &c. This Convention was signed by Great Britain, but, when signed by Germany, article 3 was reserved. As regards this vessel—first, on behalf of the Crown, a decree of condemnation as prize was claimed; secondly, on behalf of the owners, it was contended that they were entitled to appear against this claim in the Prize Court, though the affidavit filed on their behalf did not shew any special circumstances entitling them to appear; thirdly, on behalf of certain shareholders in the vessel, and other claimants who had paid disbursements or rendered services in respect of the vessel, it was contended that they had some rights in the Prize Court in respect of the vessel; and fourthly, on behalf of neutral mortgagees of the vessel, it was contended that the amount due under the mortgage should be paid out of the proceeds of the vessel when sold:—Held, first, that article 3 of the said Convention VI. did not apply in the circumstances, and that the vessel must be condemned as prize and not merely detained; secondly, that the German owners had no right to appear in the Prize Court, as no special circumstances were shewn entitling them to appear; thirdly, that the shareholders and claimants in respect of disbursements, &c., had no rights in the Prize Court in respect of the vessel, but could only apply to the bounty of the Crown; and fourthly, after a full review of the authorities, that the claim of the mortgagees must be rejected. The Marie Glaeser, 84 L. J. P. 8; [1914] P. 218; 1 P. Cas. 38; 112 L. T. 251; 12 Asp. M.C. 601; 59 S. J. 8; 31 T. L. R. 8—Evans, P.

Capture at Sea—Ignorance of Outbreak of War.]—Apart from international convention, enemy merchant ships, captured on the high seas in ignorance of the outbreak of hostilities, are liable to condemnation. Article 3 of Convention VI. of the Hague Conference, 1907, which provides for the detention, instead of confiscation, of enemy vessels which left their last port of departure before the commencement of war and are encountered on the high seas while still ignorant of the outbreak of war, has no application to German vessels, the German Empire, when signing the convention, having refused its assent to this article. The Perkeo, 84 L. J. P. 149; 1 P. Cas. 136; 112 L. T. 251; 12 Asp. M.C. 600; 58 S. J. 852—Evans, P.

Hospital Ship — Suspicious Movements — Signalling Lights — Destruction of Ship's Papers.]—An enemy vessel, certified by the German Government as an auxiliary hospital ship, and adapted (although inadequately) as such, was encountered off the Dutch coast, near the Haaks lightship, by British warships. She was taken into port to be searched, and was afterwards seized as prize. She had on board 1,220 Very's lights, and rockets and flares suitable for signalling, of which no satisfactory account was given by her. When about to be boarded by an officer from one of the warships, a number of books and documents were thrown overboard, and subsequently others were burnt; and she had shortly before sent a wireless message in code to the German signalling station at Norddeich. She had made two unexplained voyages from the mouth of the Elbe to Heligoland. On the only occasion on which she went out to render assistance after a German naval disaster forty-eight hours elapsed before she arrived on the scene, the distance to be covered being sixty miles; and during the ten weeks that the war had lasted no sick, wounded, or shipwrecked person had been received on board. There was evidence that she had increased speed to evade search by a British submarine. According to her log, her full speed was at least two knots more than was sworn to by her witnesses, and there were other matters not satisfactorily explained:—Held, that the vessel was not adapted and used for the sole purpose of affording aid to the wounded, sick, and shipwrecked; that she was adapted and used as a signalling ship for military purposes; that therefore she had forfeited the protection afforded to hospital ships by Convention X. of the Hague Conference, 1907; and that she must be condemned as lawful prize. The Ophelia, 84 L. J. P. 131; [1915] P. 129; 1 P. Cas. 210; 31 T. L. R. 452—Evans, P.

The serious view taken by Prize Courts of the destruction of ship's papers, and the doctrines laid down with reference thereto, are specially applicable to vessels claiming to be hospital ships, whose papers should be perfectly innocent: and if the ship's papers are not preserved, the inference is strong that if produced they would afford evidence of guilty practices. Ib.

Enemy Yacht—Outbreak of War—Detention in British Port — Days of Grace — Condemnation — Sixth Hague Convention — Violation of its Provisions by the Enemy——Effect—Liability for Repairs—Dry Docking.]—The provisions of the Sixth Hague Convention, with regard to days of grace, are intended to protect vessels engaged in commerce, and do not afford protection to enemy yachts. Therefore a German yacht detained in a British port on the outbreak of war, according to the ordinary law by which enemy property seized in port is confiscable, is subject to condemnation. Claims in respect of repairs executed to the yacht before the detention, and in respect of dry docking, afterwards acceded to by the Crown as an act of grace. Quære, whether a belligerent Power which has violated many of the provisions of the Hague Convention can claim the protection of any of its provisions from other contracting parties. The Germania, 1 P. Cas. 573; 60 S. J. 76; 32 T. L. R. 68—Evans, P.

Submarine Signalling Apparatus—Lease to Shipowners—"Neutral goods."]—A submarine signalling apparatus, fixed partly in the fore hold and partly in the chart room of an enemy's ship, was claimed by a neutral company who, as they alleged, leased the apparatus to the owners of the ship on terms which provided that rent should be paid and that the apparatus should remain the sole and exclusive property of the company:—Held, that the apparatus was not "neutral goods" under enemy's flag within article 3 of the Declaration of Paris, 1856, as "goods" there meant merchandise, which this was not; and that this apparatus being a part of the ship must in the Prize Court be condemned with the ship. The Schlesien, 84 L. J. P. 33; 1 P. Cas. 13; 112 L. T. 353; 59 S. J. 163; 31 T. L. R. 89—Evans, P.

Ship in British Port — Commencement of Hostilities—Order in Council—Days of Grace — Less Favourable Treatment by Enemy — Detention.] — A German merchant steamship was lying in a British port when war was declared to exist between Great Britain and Germany, and was seized on behalf of the Crown by the Collector of Customs of the port as a droit of Admiralty. Article 1 of Convention VI. of the Second Hague Peace Conference, 1907, provided that when a belligerent merchant ship was at the commencement of hostilities in an enemy port, it was desirable that it should be allowed to depart freely, either immediately or after a reasonable number of days of grace; and article 2 provided that a merchant ship, which was not allowed to leave, might not be confiscated, but the belligerent might merely detain it on condition of restoring it after the war. By Order in Council, dated August 4, 1914, it was ordered that enemy merchant ships, which at the outbreak of hostilities were in any British port, should be allowed till August 14 for departing from such port, if information was obtained that the treatment of British merchant ships in an enemy port was not less favourable. This information was not obtained by the British Government, so that effect could not be given to article 1 of Convention VI. The Court was asked on behalf of the Procurator-General for an order for the detention of the ship:—Held, that an order should be made that the ship belonged at the time of seizure to enemies of the Crown, and had been properly seized by the officers of the Crown, and was to be detained by the Marshal till further order. The Chile, 84 L. J. P. 1: [1914] P. 212; 1 P. Cas. 1; 112 L. T. 248; 12 Asp. M.C. 598; 58 S. J. 852; 31 T. L. R. 3—Evans, P.

Sale before War — Enemy Flag — Invalid Transfer — Detention — British Ship.] — On August 1, 1914, a German company, owning two German sailing vessels, both at sea and bound for ports in the United Kingdom, offered by telegram to sell them to an English company, which telegraphed acceptance. The vessels arrived in the ports, and were seized by Customs officers after war had been declared on August 4 between Great Britain and Germany. The English company claimed the vessels as having become their property by a valid transfer:—Held, that the vessels were enemy property—first, because the nationality of a vessel is determined by the flag which she is entitled to fly, whether at sea or in port, and that the flag which these vessels were entitled to fly was German; and secondly, because the alleged transfer was not valid, but was incomplete in certain respects, and amounted in substance to a mere arrangement by the German company that the vessels should be called British ships; and that the claim must be dismissed and an order made for the detention of the two vessels. The Tommi; The Rothersand, 84 L. J. P. 35; [1914] P. 251; 1 P. Cas. 16; 112 L. T. 257; 59 S. J. 26; 31 T. L. R. 15—Evans, P.

Capture at Sea or in Port—Entry to Escape Capture — Whether Protected from Confiscation.]—Held, on the facts, that after the outbreak of hostilities the German steamer Belgia was captured at sea and not in port and was therefore liable to condemnation. Quære, whether a vessel entering a port to avoid possible capture is protected from confiscation by articles 1 and 2 of the Sixth Hague Convention. The Belgia, 1 P. —— "Port"—Detention or Condemnation.]—An enemy merchant ship was captured on August 5, 1914, at a place in the Firth of Forth, which was not within the limits of a "port" in the usual commercial sense, but was within the limits of the "port" of Leith for Customs purposes:—Held, that the word "port" in the Sixth Hague Convention, 1907, did not mean the fiscal port, but must be construed in its usual and limited popular or commercial sense as a place where ships are in the habit of coming for the purpose of loading or unloading, embarking or disembarking; and that the vessel, when captured, was not, within the meaning of article 2 of this Convention, at the commencement of hostilities in an enemy "port" and not allowed to leave, so as to be subject only to detention, but was encountered "at sea" within the meaning of article 3 of this Convention, of which this vessel could not claim the benefit, and that the vessel must therefore be condemned as prize. The Marie Glaeser, 84 L. J. P. 8; [1914] P. 218; 1 P. Cas. 38; 112 L. T. 251; 12 Asp. M.C. 601; 59 S. J. 8; 31 T. L. R. 8—Evans, P.

Requisition of Prize by Crown—Order for Delivery.]—Order XXIX. of the Prize Court Rules, which was authorised by an Order in Council dated March 23, 1915, and which provides that "Where it is made to appear to the Judge . . . that it is desired to requisition on behalf of His Majesty a ship in respect of which no final decree of condemnation has been made, he shall order that the ship shall be appraised, and that upon an undertaking being given in accordance with Rule 5 of this Order the ship shall be released and delivered to the Crown," does not violate the law of nations and is not ultra vires. The Zamora. 1 P. Practice—Enemy Shipowner—Resident in Enemy Country—Affidavit as to Appearance—Insufficiency.]—The writ in this cause was in the prescribed form, and had been issued by the Procurator-General, and was duly advertised. It was addressed to the owners and parties interested in the ship, and commanded them to cause an appearance to be entered for them. Counsel for the German owners, resident in Germany, contended that they were entitled to appear, but the affidavit as to appearance, which was made by a member of a London firm described as agents of the owners, did not state who were the owners of the vessel, or any special circumstances entitling them to appear:—Held, that the affidavit was wholly insufficient to entitle the enemy owners to appear. The Chile, 84 L. J. P. 1; [1914] P. 212; 1 P. Cas. 1; 112 L. T. 248; 12 Asp. M.C. 598; 58 S. J. 852; 31 T. L. R. 3—Evans, P.

—— Dock Owners—Liberty to Apply.]—Dock owners, to whom considerable sums had accrued, and were accruing, in respect of the ship, were given liberty to apply to the Court. Ib.

—— Right to Appear—Enemy Merchant Ship—Enemy Owner.]—Apart from the new practice of the Prize Court, an enemy shipowner who alleges no suspension of his hostile character has no right to appear in the Court to argue that his ship, though enemy property, is not subject to condemnation, but only to detention under a convention of the Hague Peace Conference, 1907. The future practice of the Prize Court shall be that any alien enemy, claiming any protection, privilege, or relief under any such convention, shall be entitled to appear as a claimant and argue his claim before the Court. He should state the grounds of his claim in his affidavit to lead appearance. The Möwe, 84 L. J. P. 57; [1915] P. 1; 1 P. Cas. 60; 112 L. T. 261; 59 S. J. 76; 31 T. L. R. 46—Evans, P. See The Marie Glaeser, supra.

—— Claim for Necessaries — Arrest — Subsequent Seizure as Prize.]—In a Prize Court the rights of the captor take precedence over claims for necessaries, even where the claimants for necessaries have arrested the vessel before she was seized as prize. The Tergestea, 59 S. J. 530; 31 T. L. R. 180—Evans, P.

—— Legal Evidence of Capture—Other Evidence.] — The commander of one of His Majesty's ships who cannot take a captured vessel into port, or put a prize crew on board, ought to enter the time and place of capture in the vessel's log, or make a declaration in the presence of the vessel's master, so as to provide direct legal evidence thereof. But in the absence of such evidence the Court can act on other evidence or reliable information, and draw inferences therefrom under the Prize Court Rules, 1914, Order XV. rules 1, 2 (e). The Berlin, 84 L. Enemy Goods in British Ship—Liability to Capture.]—Enemy goods are not exempt from capture in a British port by reason of the fact that they are on board a British ship. The Aldworth (Cargo ex), 59 S. J. 75; 31 T. L. R. 36—Evans, P.

Enemy Character — British Company — Enemy Directors and Shareholders.]—Goods consigned to a duly incorporated British company, to which the property has passed, are not confiscable as prize by reason of the fact that all the directors and shareholders of the company are enemy subjects, or domiciled in an enemy country. Continental Tyre and Rubber Co. v. Daimler Co.; Same v. Tilling, Lim. (84 L. Presumption as to Cargo on Enemy Vessel —Burden of Proof.]—According to prize law, goods on an enemy vessel consigned to an enemy port are prima facie enemy goods, and the onus is on claimants who allege that the goods belong to them, as neutrals, to satisfy the Court with clear evidence. The Roland, 84 L. J. P. 127; 1 P. Cas. 188; 31 T. L. R. 357—Evans, P.

Goods Afloat—Bona Fide Sale by Enemy to Neutral without Contemplation of War—Outbreak of War.]—Where the owner of goods afloat bona fide sells them without contemplation of war between his country and another country, and after completion war breaks out between those countries while the goods are still in transitu, but the country of the purchaser is neutral, the goods are not subject to capture as prize by that other country's ships of war. The Southfield, 1 P. Cas. 332; 113 L. T. 655; 59 S. J. 681; 31 T. L. R. 577—Evans, P.

Continuous Voyage—Absolute Contraband—Conditional Contraband — Ostensible Neutral Destination — Real Destination an Enemy Government — Condemnation.]—Four vessels belonging to Scandinavians started in October and November, 1914, on voyages from New York to Copenhagen with cargoes of lard, hog and meat products, oil stocks, wheat, and other goods. They were captured by the British on the voyage, and their cargoes were seized on the ground that they were conditional contraband which was alleged to be confiscable in the circumstances, with the exception of one cargo of rubber, which was seized as absolute contraband:—Held, that on the facts some of the goods were intended bona fide for Danish purchasers, but other goods were intended for the German Government, and that as the doctrine of "continuous transportation" applied to conditional as well as to absolute contraband and covered transport by land until the real, as distinguished from the ostensible, destination of the goods was reached, the goods intended for the German Government must be condemned. The Kim (No. 2), The Alfred Nobel, The Björnstjerne Björnson, The Fridland, [1915] P. 215; 1 P. Contract of Sale c.i.f. — Shipment During Peace—War Intervening on Voyage—Seizure as Prize—Refusal of Documents—Test for Condemnation—Passing of Property or Loss by Seizure—Cargo in British Vessel not Excused.]—When goods are contracted to be sold, and are shipped without any anticipation of imminent war, and are taken as prize after war has intervened, the cardinal principle is that they are not subject to condemnation unless under the contract the property in the goods has at the time of seizure passed to the enemy. The Miramichi, 84 L. J. P. 105; [1915] P. 71; 1 P. Cas. 137; 112 L. T. 349; 59 S. J. 107; 31 T. L. R. 72—Evans, P.

Enemy cargo shipped without any anticipation of imminent war, and taken as prize in port or at sea after war has intervened, does not escape condemnation because it is in a British vessel. Ib.

Before any anticipation of imminent war, sellers made a c.i.f. contract of sale of wheat to buyers, and in fulfilment of the contract sub-contracted with a merchant to buy wheat shipped by him and received from him the bill of lading for it, which was indorsed generally. War intervened during the voyage. The sellers were neutrals, and the port of destination was neutral, but the buyers to whom the goods were to be delivered at the port of destination were enemies in the enemy country. The sellers' bankers, who were neutrals, had discounted the bill of exchange drawn by the sellers on the buyers, and had forwarded it and the bill of exchange and the certificates of insurance to a bank in the enemy country for tender of the latter documents against acceptance of the bill of exchange. The vessel was British and was diverted to a British port, where the wheat was seized by the Crown as prize. Shortly after the seizure the enemy buyers in the enemy country refused to take up the documents. The sellers claimed the wheat as their property. It was contended for the Crown that the test for condemnation was whether the enemy or the neutral would suffer the loss if the wheat was condemned, and that, as the sellers had a right of payment against the buyers and had only a jus dis- ponendi as holders of a bill of lading not indorsed to them, they could not recover the wheat:—Held, disallowing the contention of the Crown, that as the goods were shipped without any anticipation of imminent war, the test for condemnation was as to whether the property in the wheat had at the time of seizure passed to the enemy, and that, as it had not at that time passed to the buyers and would not so pass until they took up the documents, the wheat remained the property of the sellers and must be restored to them. Ib.

Goods when Shipped to "selling agents"—Passing of Property.] — Where goods are shipped by the vendors to persons, described as "selling agents," who are paid by commission and to whom the bills of lading are indorsed, and the vendors do not reserve any right of disposal of the goods after shipment, the question whether the property in the goods has passed to the "selling agents" depends upon intention and is a question of fact. An American company shipped in July, 1914, at New York for Hamburg on a German steamer a consignment of pig lead under bills of lading which were made out to the order of the shippers at Hamburg and were indorsed to a German company or order and were sent forward to the German company. The goods were shipped under an arrangement between the American company and the German company which secured to the former the benefit of a previous agreement in which the German company were described as "selling agents," and a draft on demand for the provisional price, as arranged, was sent to an English company, which was connected with the arrangement. On August 5, 1914, the goods were seized as prize, and on presentation of the draft on August 8, 1914, the English company refused, owing to the war, to pay it. The German company were not accountable to the American company as principals for the sum actually received by them as agents from the purchasers to whom they sold the goods, but only for a sum to be fixed by a computation of sales of pig lead supplied by other producers:—Held, that on the facts the property in the goods had passed to the German company and therefore they were enemy goods. The Kronprinzessin Cecilie, 1 P. Cas. 623; 32 T. L. R. 139—Evans, P.

Ante-bellum Contract of Sale—Post-bellum Shipment—Passing of Property—Allied Ship—Trading with the Enemy—Freight.]—Under a contract of July 13, 1914, made between the sellers, a firm of German merchants at Hamburg, with a branch at Valparaiso, and the buyers, a Dutch firm at Veendam, Holland, a cargo of nitrate of soda was loaded at Taltal, Chili, in a Russian sailing ship, which had been chartered by the German firm to carry the cargo to Delfzil, Holland. Loading began in July, but was not completed until after the outbreak of war. The bills of lading, dated August 6, were made out to the order of the sellers. The ship sailed on August 29. On December 6 she arrived at Plymouth, where the cargo was seized as enemy property. The contract of sale provided that payment, to include cost and freight, was due ninety days after receipt of the first bill of lading, and was to be paid three days after maturity, or, in case of an earlier arrival of the ship, against acceptance of the documents. The buyers were to provide a banker's guarantee for 5,000*l.* for the due performance of the contract, the value of the cargo being 22,115*l.* Insurance, including war risk, was to be covered by the sellers, the buyers to accept the policy against payment of the premium. The buyers provided the banker's guarantee, and deposited the purchase price in the sellers' bank with instructions not to part with it until all the bills of lading had arrived. The bills of lading, which were made out in sets of three copies each, were forwarded to the sellers' house in Hamburg. The first copies arrived on September 9, and the third arrived by January 25, 1915; but they remained at the sellers' bank in Hamburg, and were not taken up until after the cargo had been seized. It was contended by the Dutch buyers that the property had passed to them:—Held, that the prima facie presumption—arising from the fact of the bills of lading being to the order of the sellers—that the sellers had reserved the right of disposal, was not rebutted by the requirement of the banker's guarantee; that the parties did not intend the property in the goods to pass to the buyers until the documents were accepted and the price paid; that if the property did not pass on shipment it could not pass while the goods were in transitu so as to defeat the rights of belligerents; and that at the time of seizure the property was in the enemy sellers, and the goods must be condemned. Held, further, that on the outbreak of war between Russia and Germany it became illegal for the Russian shipowners to continue to perform their contract with the German charterers; that, after August 4, when Germany became the common enemy of Russia and of Great Britain, a British Prize Court had power to deal with a Russian vessel engaged in illegal trading; and that strictly the vessel was liable to confiscation, and, although the Crown did not ask for this penalty, that a claim of the Russian shipowners for freight and expenses must be disallowed. The Parchim, 1 P. Cas. 579—Evans, P.

Commercial Intercourse between Subjects of an Allied and an Enemy State—Obligations of Allied Subjects—Bona Fides—Ally's Cargo Condemned.]—In May, 1914, a French company contracted to sell to a German firm at Frankfurt a quantity of silver lead f.o.b. Ergasteria, in Greece. In pursuance of the contract the French company chartered a steamer for a voyage to Antwerp and Newcastle to carry the lead to the purchasers from the German firm. Before the loading, which began on July 29, was finished, war broke out between Great Britain and her allies and Germany. On August 11 the vessel sailed. The French company then entered into negotiations with the London office of the German firm as regards the delivery of the lead, but on August 23 that office was closed by order of the Home Secretary, the negotiations fell through, and the French company diverted the vessel to Swansea, where the cargo, the property in which admittedly remained in the French company, was seized as prize :—Held, that the facts shewed that after the outbreak of war the French company, although acting in good faith, had had commercial intercourse with the German firm which amounted to a trading with the enemy; and the subjects of an allied State being under the same obligations to Great Britain as regards intercourse with the enemy as British subjects, that the silver lead must be condemned. The Panariellos, 84 L. J. P. 140; 1 P. Cas. 195; 112 L. T. 777; 59 S. J. 399; 31 T. L. R. 326—Evans, P.

Submarine Signalling Apparatus—Lease to Shipowners — "Neutral goods."] — A submarine signalling apparatus, fixed partly in the fore hold and partly in the chart room of an enemy's ship, was claimed by a neutral company who, as they alleged, leased the apparatus to the owners of the ship on terms which provided that rent should be paid and that the apparatus should remain the sole and exclusive property of the company :—Held, that the apparatus was not "neutral goods" under enemy's flag within article 3 of the Declaration of Paris, 1856, as "goods" there meant merchandise, which this was not; and that this apparatus being a part of the ship must in the Prize Court be condemned with the ship. The Schlesien, 84 L. J. P. 33; 1 P. Cas. 13; 112 L. T. 353; 59 S. J. 163; 31 T. L. R. 89—Evans, P.

Cargo of Oil—Discharge into Tanks—Droits of Admiralty — Seizure "on land" or in "port"—Enemy National Character—German Company—International Combine—Notice of Detention—Ambiguity—Lawful Seizure.]—A cargo of oil was shipped on a British steamship at Port Arthur, Texas, for delivery at Hamburg. The oil was the property of a German incorporated company, which was an international combine, and most of its shares were held by incorporated companies of nations which were not enemies. During the voyage and after the outbreak of war with Germany the vessel, owing to a request of the Admiralty, was diverted eventually to London and was moored at a wharf. The oil was discharged into tanks belonging to the wharfingers, one hundred to one hundred and fifty yards away from the wharf, by means of the ship's pumps and connecting pipes. Notice by an officer of Customs that the whole cargo was "placed under detention" was delivered on board when most of the oil had been discharged, but the remaining oil was afterwards discharged into the tanks :—Held, first, that the whole cargo of oil should be condemned as droits of Admiralty, and that the case was within the jurisdiction of the Prize Courts; that the oil in the tanks was seizable even if it was strictly "on land" and not in "port," but that the tanks were oil warehouses and the oil therein was seized in "port"; secondly, that the German company, being incorporated and resident in Germany, was of an enemy national character, notwithstanding its international position; and thirdly, that the Customs notice that the cargo was placed under detention was a lawful seizure of the oil as droits of Admiralty, and the contention that the notice was too ambiguous was disallowed. The Roumanian, 84 L. J. P. 65; [1915] P. 26; 1 P. Cas. 75; 112 L. T. 464; 59 S. J. 206; 31 T. L. R. 111 Evans, P. Affirmed, 1 P. Cas. 536; 60 S. J. 58; 32 T. L. R. 98—P.C.

Enemy Owners — Alleged Ownership by Partnership—One Partner an Alien Enemy—Failure of British Partners to Sever Connection — Condemnation.] — Two consignments, consisting of zinc concentrates and leady concentrates, were shipped in a British steamship by the Australian Metal Co., Lim., a British company, at Port Pirie before the war to the order of the shippers or their assigns at Antwerp, the vessel having been chartered by the Metallgesellschaft, a German company. The goods were seized as prize at Brixham on September 23, 1914, and were claimed by Merton & Co., Lim., a British company, because they had accepted the shippers' drafts for the value of the goods, had taken up the shipping documents, and had paid the freight. In the alternative Merton & Co. and the Australian Metal Co. and Vivian & Co. (a British partnership) each claimed a one-fourth share in the leady concentrates, as three members of a pool, of which the other member was the Metallgesellschaft. The Compagnie des Minerais, a Belgian company, also claimed the zinc concentrates as the owners, if it should be held that the property in them had passed from Merton & Co. It was alleged by Merton & Co. that the zinc concentrates were intended to be sold to the Compagnie des Minerais, but that as this company had not paid for them the property belonged to Merton & Co. The Belgian company was formed mainly by the German company :—Held, on the facts, that the zinc concentrates belonged to the Metallgesellschaft, and must be condemned as enemy property. Held further, on the facts, that the Metallgesellschaft were the owners of the leady concentrates, although they had to account to the three other members of the pool for the ultimate profits, and that therefore the leady concentrates must be condemned, and that, even if the pool was a partnership consisting of three British partners and one enemy partner, the goods being the joint property of the four partners, nevertheless, as the three British partners had not taken steps to sever their connection with the enemy partner by reason of the outbreak of war, their shares in the goods must on this footing also suffer condemnation. The Manningtry, 1 P. Cas. 497; 60 S. J. 75; 32 T. L. R. 36—Evans, P.

Enemy Cargo—Claim of Pledgees—Accrual of Right to Sell.]—The pledgees of bills of lading of enemy cargo, which has been properly taken as prize, have no claim which is recognised in the Prize Court; and though the right to sell has accrued to the pledgees by default, until they do sell the general property in the goods remains in the pledgors, who have at any time the right to redeem. The Odessa; The Cape Corso, 84 L. J. P. 112;

—— Consignment to British Port.] — The rights of mortgagees of enemy goods captured as prize are not regarded in a Prize Court, even though the goods have been consigned to a British port, and the mortgagees are persons who have arranged to sell them on commission in this country. The Odessa (supra) followed. The Linaria, 59 S. J. 530; 31 T. L. R. 396—Evans, P.

—— Pledge to Neutral Bankers—Documents of Title Held by British Agents—Effect of Outbreak of War—Right of Pledgors to Redeem.]—The enemy owners of goods seized as prize, who have pledged them to neutral bankers before war, do not lose their right to redeem the goods by reason of the outbreak of war, although the documents of title to the goods may be held by British agents of the bankers, who are prohibited from commercial intercourse with the pledgors; and the bankers are merely in the position of pledgees whose claims cannot be recognised in the Prize Court. The Eumaeus, 1 P. Cas. 605; 60 S. J. 605; 32 T. L. R. 125—Evans, P.

—— Default of Pledgors—Exercise of Power of Sale by Pledgees—Whether Goods Subject to Seizure.] — Certain enemy subjects contracted before the war to sell to a British firm a quantity of vegetable tallow, and it was shipped in a British ship at Hankow for Liverpool before the war. The vendors pledged the goods before the war to Japanese bankers, who were indorsees and holders of the bills of lading at the time of the shipment of the goods and of their arrival at Liverpool, which took place after the declaration of war. The purchasers declined to take up the documents or to take delivery of the goods from enemy subjects, and thereupon the pledgees, having become, owing to the default of the pledgors, entitled to exercise their power of sale, contracted to sell the goods to a British firm. The goods were subsequently seized by the Customs officer at Liverpool on the ground that they were enemy property:—Held, that, whether or not the property in the goods had passed from the pledgees to the firm which purchased the goods from them, the right of the enemy pledgors to redeem the goods was lost when the pledgees contracted to sell them, and therefore the goods were not subject to seizure as enemy goods. The Ningchow, 1 P. Cas. 288; 31 T. L. R. 470—Evans, P.

Claim for Freight—Cargo in British Ship Condemned.] — When enemy cargo, loaded before war for carriage on a British ship, is seized and ordered to be discharged in a British port, and is condemned as prize, such a sum is to be allowed out of the prize to the shipowners for freight as is fair and reasonable in the circumstances. Regard is to be had to the agreed freight—though this is not conclusive—to the extent to which the voyage has been made, the labour and cost expended or any special charges incurred in respect of the cargo before seizure and discharge, and to the benefit to the cargo from carriage until seizure and discharge. No sum is to be allowed, unless in special circumstances, for inconvenience or delay to the ship as the result of her diversion or detention for the seizure and discharge of her enemy cargo. The Juno, 84 L. J. P. 154; 1 P. Cas. 151; 112 L. T. 471; 59 S. J. 251; 31 T. L. R. 131—Evans, P.

Certain parcels of German cargo were loaded shortly before the war on a British ship at Bristol for delivery at Amsterdam, and were destined for places in Germany. The ship proceeded to Swansea to load more cargo, and was kept there by her owners. After war had broken out between Great Britain and Germany these parcels were seized by the Customs officer at Swansea, and ordered to be discharged, and were condemned as prize. The shipowners claimed to receive out of the prize full freight and the expenses of discharging these parcels and of shifting the ship to a discharging berth for the purpose:—Held, that the claim to some freight and to the other expenses should be allowed, and a reference was ordered to ascertain the amount on the principles above stated. Ib.

—— British Vessel — Shipowners' Right to Freight on Cargo — Seizure as Prize before Reaching Port of Destination — Subsequent Release.]—In the Prize Court shipowners have a right to have some freight on cargo which has been seized as prize before reaching its port of destination, but which has been subsequently released. The Friends (Edw. Adm. 346) considered. The Iolo, 1 P. Cas. 291; 113 L. T. 604; 59 S. J. 545; 31 T. L. R. 474—Evans, P.

The quantum of freight is to be decided on the principles laid down in The Juno (supra). The Corsican Prince (84 L. J. P. 121; 1 P. Cas. 178) approved. Ib.

—— Enemy Ship — Released Cargo.] — A captor is not entitled to freight from the owners of cargo which has been brought before the Prize Court and released, unless the cargo has been carried to its port of destination according to the intent of the contracting parties. The Roland, 84 L. J. P. 127; 1 P. Cas. 188; 31 T. L. R. 357—Evans, P.

—— Condemnation.]—Where freight is paid on goods belonging to alien enemies with knowledge that the owners are alien enemies, and with the object of preserving the goods for their benefit, the persons making the payment have no right, in the event of the cargo being seized by the Crown and condemned as prize, to recover back the freight from the shipowners or to obtain from the Crown payment out of the proceeds of the cargo. The Bilbster, 1 P. Cas. 507*n.*; 60 S. J. 107; 32 T. L. R. 35—Evans, P.

—— Contraband — Condemnation — Demurrage.] — A cargo of iron ore destined for Krupp's works in Germany was shipped on September 16, 1914, by a Spanish firm in a Dutch steamer belonging to a Dutch company from Spain to Rotterdam. On September 19 the vessel when off the Isle of Wight was turned into port by a British warship for the examination of her cargo. On September 21 iron ore was placed on the list of conditional contraband. The vessel arrived at Portsmouth for examination on September 26, and the cargo was seized as prize on October 4. The ship was afterwards sent to Middlesbrough and was released, and was ultimately sunk by the Germans. On an application by the Crown for the condemnation of the cargo the shipowners, who were neutrals, claimed freight and demurrage, but the Crown contended that as they were acting as agents for Krupp's forwarding and shipping agents they were not entitled thereto :—Held, that as the effective seizure took place after iron ore had been made contraband, it was liable to condemnation; that as the cargo was not contraband at the time when it was shipped and as on the facts the shipowners' prima facie claim to freight had not been displaced, they were entitled to freight; but that they were not entitled to demurrage, as the detention of the ship was a misfortune to which neutrals were liable in time of war. The Katwyk, 1 P. Cas. 282; 31 T. L. R. 448—Evans, P.

— Claim for Delay—Contribution to General Average Loss.]—By a contract made in 1913 an English company agreed to sell to a German company a quantity of chrome ore and in June, 1914, the ore was shipped from New Caledonia by a Norwegian sailing vessel, chartered by the German company, the bill of lading being made out in favour of the English company, or order, for delivery at Rotterdam. In the same month the buyers paid the sellers half the price plus a sum, advanced for the ship. The vessel put into Pernambuco in September, 1914, and there the master received instructions to go to a Swedish port via the North of Scotland. In October, 1914, chrome ore was declared to be absolute contraband by an Order in Council which adopted some of the terms of the Declaration of London without excepting article 43, which provides that if a vessel is encountered at sea while unaware of the declaration of contraband applying to her cargo the contraband cannot be condemned except on payment of compensation. In November, 1914, the vessel was boarded by British naval officers and taken by a prize crew to Glasgow. In proceedings for the condemnation of the cargo it was claimed both by the sellers and by a Swedish company, the latter alleging that it had been bought for them by the German company as their agents, and the shipowners made a claim for freight, loss by delay, and contribution from the cargo for a general average expense in putting into Pernambuco, but no claim was made by the German company. There was no evidence that up to the capture the vessel was aware of the declaration of contraband applying to her cargo :—Held, that the German company were not in fact agents for the Swedish company, and that at the time of capture the property in the goods had passed to the German company, and the goods must be condemned, and that no compensation could be awarded to the German company, as they had not claimed it and as they had taken part in a dishonest attempt to persuade the Court that they were only agents for a neutral company. Held, further, that though the shipowners were not entitled to make any claim for delay of the ship, yet they were entitled to freight, and inasmuch as a claim for general average by the ship against the cargo existed before capture, they were also entitled to a contribution from the cargo to general average loss on the assumption that they could make out a case of general average loss. Semble, article 43 of the Declaration of London was only intended for the protection of neutrals and does not prevent contraband belonging to the enemy from being liable to condemnation without compensation. The Sorfareren, 1 P. Cas. 589; 32 T. L. R. 108—Evans, P.

British Ship—Deviation from Voyage—Consequent Outlays—Claim by Owners.]—Where a British ship, on a voyage to a German port, has been diverted by the Admiralty on account of the war to a port in the United Kingdom, the owners are not entitled to compensation for outlays incurred by them in consequence of such diversion or for the additional cost of discharging the cargo at such port as compared with the cost of discharging it at the German port. The Tredegar Hall, 1 P. Cas. 492; 60 S. J. 45; 32 T. L. R. 9—Evans, P.

Claimant — Enemy Domicil — Trading in Neutral or British Territory.]—The fact that a person who is domiciled in an enemy country has a house of trade in a neutral country or in British territory will not enable him to avoid the disability, imposed by his enemy domicil, of being disentitled in the Prize Court to succeed in a claim with respect to goods seized as prize. The Clan Grant, 1 P. Cas. 272; 59 S. J. 430; 31 T. L. R. 321—Evans, P.

Goods Owned by Enemy with Neutral Domicil—Change of Domicil before Seizure—Condemnation.]—Two consignments of copper belonging to one H., a German subject carrying on trade in Chile, were shipped from that country to Liverpool, and were seized as prize. H. had left Chile before the seizure, and he appeared to have been in Switzerland not long after it :—Held, that although the country to which H. appeared to have betaken himself was, equally with Chile, a neutral country, yet he had, by leaving Chile, lost the neutral trade domicil which he had acquired by residence there, and that he had thereby revested himself with his original character as an enemy, and therefore the goods were liable to condemnation. The Flamenco. The Orduna, 1 P. Cas. 509; 60 S. J. 107; 32 T. L. R. 53—Evans, P.

Goods — Neutral Property — Requisition by Crown.]—By Order I. rule 2 of the Prize Court Rules, 1914, "Unless the contrary intention appears, the provisions of these Rules relative to ships shall extend and apply, mutatis mutandis, to goods." By Order XXIX. rule 1, where the Lords of the Admiralty desire to requisition a ship and there is no reason to believe that the ship is entitled to be released, the Judge shall order the ship to be appraised and to be delivered to them, "Provided that no order shall be made by the Judge under this rule in respect of a ship which he considers there is good reason to believe to be neutral property." By rule 3, where a ship is required forthwith for the service of the Crown, a Judge can order it to be forthwith released to the Lords of the Admiralty without appraisement. Certain copper was shipped at New York by an American company on board a Norwegian vessel and was consigned to Sweden, and was bought afloat by Swedish subjects under a contract guaranteeing that it was for consumption in Norway and/or Sweden. While the vessel was at sea copper was declared absolutely contraband, and the copper in question was afterwards seized at sea and brought to Liverpool, and the Crown issued a writ in prize claiming that the goods were liable to confiscation. Subsequently an order was made ex parte by the Registrar instructing the Marshal to release the copper to the Lords of the Admiralty, who wished to requisition it. On an application to discharge the order,—Held, that though there was sufficient doubt as to whether the goods were entitled to be released to prevent the order from being bad on the ground that there was reason to believe that they were so entitled, yet as they were neutral property it was impossible for the Crown to requisition them, and therefore the order must be discharged. The Antares, 1 P. Cas. 261; 59 S. J. 384; 31 T. L. R. 290—Evans, P.

Neutral Commercial Domicil—Firm Established in Shanghai — British and German Partners.]—A firm carrying on business in Shanghai consisted of two British and two German partners, and was registered in the German Consulate at Shanghai as a German firm and was subject to German laws under treaty with China. Neither of the German partners lived in Shanghai, but the two British partners lived there. Certain goods, which were the property of the firm, were seized as prize, and they were claimed as the property of the firm and alternatively as the property of the respective partners. There was no sufficient evidence as to whether after the outbreak of war the British partners took proper steps in due time to dissociate themselves from the business:—Held, that in the circumstances none of the partners had acquired or could acquire a neutral commercial domicil in Shanghai, and the firm should be treated as if it were an enemy firm established in Germany, and that the German partners' shares in the goods must be condemned, but that as regards the British partners' shares the question must stand over for further evidence as to what steps they took after the commencement of the war to break off their connection with the business. The Eumaeus, 1 P. Cas. 605; 60 S. J. 122; 32 T. L. R. 125—Evans, P.

Time for Trial.]—Where cargoes consisting of a very great number of different small consignments had been seized as contraband, and the ships had been detained, to be condemned on the ground that they were carrying cargo, more than half of which would be found to be contraband, the full time under Order XV. rule 7 was allowed to the Crown to get ready their case. The Kim (No. 1), 59 S. J. 428—Evans, P.

Enemy Ship—Seizure of Cargo—No Claim by Consignee—Order for Sale.]—Where the consignees of certain goods in an enemy ship had not taken up the bills of lading and they refused to pay the expenses of detention, on which payment the Procurator-General was willing to release to them the goods, and where they, the consignees, made no claim to the goods, which were still incurring continuing charges for warehousing, an order was made under Prize Court Rules, Order XXVII. rule 2, for the goods to be sold and the proceeds of sale to be paid into Court, with liberty to any parties interested to apply for payment out of such proceeds of sale. The Horst Martini, 59 S. J. 221—Evans, P.

Want of Discharging Facilities—Detention of Ship—Condemnation of Cargo—Sale—Compensation to Shipowners.]—When the cargo in a British or allied ship is seized as prize and owing to the want of discharging facilities it remains warehoused in the ship until after it has been sold under an order for condemnation, the shipowners are not entitled in law to compensation for the detention of the ship, but the Court may authorise the Admiralty Marshal to give them a reasonable sum out of the proceeds of the cargo. The Cumberland, 31 T. L. R. 198—Evans, P.

b. Jurisdiction of Prize Court.

Cargo of Oil—Discharge into Tanks—Droits of Admiralty — Seizure "on land" or in "port" — Enemy National Character — German Company — International Combine — Notice of Detention — Ambiguity — Lawful Seizure.]—A cargo of oil was shipped on a British steamship at Port Arthur, Texas, for delivery at Hamburg. The oil was the property of a German incorporated company, which was an international combine, and most of its shares were held by incorporated companies of nations which were not enemies. During the voyage and after the outbreak of war with Germany the vessel, owing to a request of the Admiralty, was diverted eventually to London and was moored at a wharf. The oil was discharged into tanks belonging to the wharfingers, one hundred to one hundred and fifty yards away from the wharf, by means of the ship's pumps and connecting pipes. Notice by an officer of Customs that the whole cargo was "placed under detention" was delivered on board when most of the oil had been discharged, but the remaining oil was afterwards discharged into the tanks:—Held, first, that the whole cargo of oil should be condemned as droits of Admiralty, and that the case was within the jurisdiction of the Prize Court; that the oil in the tanks was seizable even if it was strictly "on land" and not in "port," but that the tanks were oil warehouses and the oil therein was seized in "port"; secondly, that the German company, being incorporated and resident in Germany, was of an enemy national character, notwithstanding its international position; and thirdly, that the Customs notice that the cargo was placed under detention was a lawful seizure of the oil as droits of Admiralty, and the contention that the notice was too ambiguous was disallowed. The Roumanian, 84 L. J. P. 65; [1915] P. 26; 1 P. Cas. 75; 112 L. T. 464; 59 S. J. 206; 31 T. L. R. 111—Evans, P. Affirmed, 1 P. Cas. 536; 60 S. J. 58; 32 T. L. R. 98—P.C.

Freight—Release of Cargo Seized as Prize—Claim by Shipowner in Prize Court—Cargo Owner's Claim in King's Bench Division.]—The jurisdiction to determine questions as to the right of the shipowner to freight on cargo which has been seized as prize is in the Prize Court and not in a Court of common law, although the cargo has been released without being brought before the Prize Court for adjudication. The Corsican Prince, 84 L. J. P. 121; 1 P. Cas. 178; 112 L. T. 475; 59 S. J. 317; 31 T. L. R. 257—Evans, P.

—— Action for Freight in King's Bench Division—Subsequent Motion in Prize Court—Effect.]—A cargo of cotton, wheat, and phosphate rock, laden in a British vessel and consigned to Hamburg, was seized as prize. Before the condemnation suit in prize was tried the Procurator-General ascertained that the phosphate rock, which had been discharged and warehoused at Runcorn, was owned by the consignors, a neutral company, and this portion of the cargo was released. Under the charterparty the shipowners had a lien for freight, and to get possession of their phosphate the cargo owners, under protest, deposited 1,680*l.* with the wharfingers in accordance with the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. The shipowners brought an action in the King's Bench Division, claiming a declaration that they were entitled to the 1,680*l.* or to a sum pro rata itineris. Rowlatt, J., held that the voyage not having been completed, the shipowners were not entitled to full freight, and that, there being no agreement to accept delivery of the phosphate rock at Runcorn in discharge of the obligation to deliver at Hamburg, they were not entitled to freight pro rata itineris. Thereupon the shipowners moved in the Prize Court for a declaration that they were entitled to a sum in lien of freight to be assessed by the Registrar. The cargo owners contended that the matter was res judicata:—Held, that, as the claim arose out of a seizure in prize, the rights of the claimants must be determined in accordance with the principles of prize, and the matter was not res judicata, as the action in the King's Bench Division was upon a contract, and was decided according to common law principles, and not according to the equitable principles by which, in the Prize Court, a sum in lien of the full freight can be given; and that the shipowners were entitled to an order for a reference to the Registrar to assess the amount, if any, which should be allowed them in respect of freight for the carriage of the cargo to Runcorn. The St. Helena, 1 P. Cas. 618—Evans, P.

Power of Court to Review Decree—Rehearing.]—The Prize Court has power to review its decrees and to order a rehearing, but the power should be exercised with great caution. The Oreoma, 1 P. Cas. 402—Evans, P.

"Successors and assigns"—Ultra Vires Sale of Property—Dissolution of Company—"Canal undertaking"—Liability to Perform Statutory Obligations.] — Where a company is incorporated by statute for a public purpose with compulsory powers of acquiring land, and other statutory privileges and obligations, it cannot without the intervention and authority of Parliament transfer its undertaking or its powers or privileges to other persons. Woking Urban Council (Basingstoke Canal) Act, 1911, In re, 83 L. J. Ch. 201; [1914] 1 Ch. 300; 110 L. T. 49; 78 J. P. 81; 12 L. G. R. 214; 30 T. L. R. 135—C.A.

In 1777 the Act of 18 Geo. 3, c. 75 was passed incorporating a company and giving the company "their successors and assigns" power to acquire land and make a canal which was to be open to the public on payment of tolls, and also imposing on them the obligation to make and maintain bridges over the canal. The company carried on the undertaking until 1866, when they were ordered to be wound up. In 1874 the canal, lands, and property were conveyed to a purchaser with the approval of the Court, and in 1878 an order was made dissolving the company. Subsequently the canal, lands, and property frequently changed hands, and in 1908 they passed (with some small exceptions) into the hands of a limited company, which mortgaged the same to a mortgagee. The bridges having fallen into great disrepair the Woking Urban District Council obtained in 1911 the passing of the Woking Urban District Council (Basingstoke Canal) Act, 1911, under which power was given to them to repair the bridges and to recover the expenses so incurred and a share of the costs of preparing and obtaining the Act from "the company," which was defined as meaning the statutory company, "their successors and assigns." By sections 10 and 35 the "canal undertaking" was charged with these costs and expenses:—Held, that the conveyance of 1874 was ultra vires the statutory company, because it purported to pass that without which their statutory undertaking could not be carried on, and that on the dissolution of the statutory company the canal, lands, and property reverted to the persons who had originally conveyed the lands to that company, but that their rights had been since barred by the Statute of Limitations. Held also, that the words "successors and assigns" in the Act of 1777 were without meaning, and that prior to 1911 the limited company were under no obligation to repair the canal or bridges; and held, further, that the Act of 1911 had imposed no new obligation upon them or their mortgagee, and that, as they were not the owners of the "canal undertaking," no charge was imposed on the canal, lands, and property in their hands. Bradford Navigation Co., In re (39 L. J. Ch. 733; L. R. 5 Ch. 600), discussed. Ib.

Right of Support to Canal—Mines and Compulsory Powers—Notice to Stop Working.]—In an action by a mineral owner and his tenants for compensation in respect of a seam of oil shale which they alleged they had been stopped from working by the proprietors of the canal, under the powers of a private Act of 1817, to ensure the safety of the canal,—Held, upon the construction of the correspondence between the parties and of the private Act, that the defenders had not stopped the working of the seam. Linlithgow (Marquis) v. North British Railway, [1914] A.C. 820; [1914] S. Artificial Channel — Temporary Purpose — Permissive Enjoyment — General Words — Interference.]—The plaintiff was the owner of land and buildings including a fellmonger's yard in the occupation of a tenant, bounded on the east side by a river. Between the river and the yard was an open conduit running parallel with the river down to a culvert by which it was carried to the defendant's mill lower down. The premises now owned by the plaintiff and the defendant had been in the ownership of the same person from 1779 until 1907, when the plaintiff purchased his present holding, while the mill was sold to the defendant's predecessor. According to the evidence, for a long period before 1907 the occupants of the fellmonger's yard had used the water in the conduit for the purposes of their business, but the repairs to the conduit had been carried out by the occupier of the mill, who had diverted the flow of water when necessary for that purpose. The conveyance to the plaintiff made no mention of any water right, but the mill was conveyed to the defendant's predecessors "with the full right and benefit of passage and running of water to the said mill and premises as is now and heretofore used and enjoyed therewith":—Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to a right of user of the conduit as enjoyed prior to the conveyance to him in 1907, such right, although permissive at the date of the grant, having become a legal right by virtue of the general words of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 6. Lewis v. Meredith, 82 L. Higher and Lower Riparian Owners—Interference with Bed of River.] — The plaintiffs were the owners of a mill on the river T., and the defendant was an upper riparian owner. In 1910 the defendant removed a large quantity of brickbats, stones, chalk, pieces of iron, &c., from the main branch of the river near to the cut leading to the plaintiffs' mill, and levelled the bed. The plaintiffs complained that these excavations lowered the main branch and diverted a great deal of water which otherwise would have flowed down to their mill, and they brought an action to restrain the defendant from interfering with the bed of the main river so as to divert the water from flowing down the cut to the plaintiffs' mill; and for a mandatory injunction to restore the river bed to the condition it was in before the alleged acts of interference; and for damages. At the trial, the County Court Judge left questions to the jury, which, with their answers, were as follows: (1) Was the bottom of the river at the spot in question the natural bed of the river?—Yes. (2) Were there any brickbats or other foreign matter there?—Yes, a very small quantity. (3) Was any portion of the bed of the river, exclusive of brickbats, &c., removed by the defendant's men on October 18, 1910?—Yes. (4) If so, did such removal lessen the flow of water down the Fishlake Cut to the plaintiffs' mill and interfere with the working of the mill?—Yes. On these findings the County Court Judge gave judgment for the plaintiffs, and granted an injunction and a mandatory injunction as claimed:—Held, that the questions left to the jury were the proper questions to be left, and that the County Court Judge was right in entering judgment for the plaintiffs. Fear v. Vickers, 55 S. J. 688; 27 T. L. R. 558—C.A.

Easement of Taking Surface Water—Covenant to Maintain and Keep all Works "now made and hereafter to be made" in Good and Sufficient Repair—Extent of Obligation.]—The plaintiffs granted to the defendants a perpetual easement of taking surface water from a certain area, and the defendants covenanted to "maintain and keep all their works now made and hereafter to be made in or upon any parts of the [plaintiff's] estate in good and sufficient repair and condition and in particular (but without restricting the general obligation hereinbefore in and by this clause imposed on the [Corporation]) shall at all times keep the dams of ponds B and C in good and sufficient repair and as free from leakage as reasonably may be":—Held, on the construction of the deed containing the above covenant, that the defendants were bound to maintain and keep in repair not only artificial watercourses made by them, but also natural channels existing at the date of the covenant and used by the defendants. Evan-Thomas v. Neath Corporation, 76 J. P. 397—Eve, J.

Compensation Water—Abandonment—Limitation on User of Water.]—By a section of a local Act, "the owners, lessees, and occupiers" of certain furnaces were permitted to take along an existing watercourse from a stream which was being acquired by the local authority, compensation water not exceeding a specified quantity in "any working day." At the time of the passing of the Act, a company held the furnaces on lease from the plaintiff, as tenant for life of certain settled lands, and carried on business there. The watercourse was some two miles long, and part of its course lay over lands other than the settled lands, and the company paid rent for wayleaves over these lands. In 1890 the company ceased to use the furnaces, and in 1895 they gave up the wayleaves. In 1898 the plaintiff assented to the dismantling of the company's works. In the meanwhile, the watercourse had been allowed to get into disrepair, and as from 1895 or 1896 water entering it from the stream escaped by breaches in it, and was lost before reaching the site of the furnaces. In 1909 the defendants diverted the stream so as to prevent any water entering the watercourse, and thereupon the plaintiff brought this action for a declaration as to his right to the water, and for an injunction against the defendants accordingly:—Held, on the construction of the section, that the right to water under it did not depend on the continuance of works at the furnaces, and that the plaintiff, as tenant for life of the site of the furnaces, was entitled to a supply of water to that site, as provided by the section. Held, also, that an abandonment of the right conferred by the section was not proved by shewing that no use had been made of the water during a period when it happened not to be wanted; but that no injunction could be granted at the present time, because the plaintiff had so far suffered no damage from the act of the defendants in diverting the stream. Hanbury v. Llanfrechfa Upper Urban Council, 9 L. G. R. 360; 75 J. P. 307—Neville, J.

Sewage — Deposit of Sewage on Land of Riparian Owner—Permanent Injury—Right of Reversioner to Sue.] — Infringement of the rights of a riparian owner by the pollution of the water of a river opposite his property by sewage, and trespass on his land by the discharging, or allowing to escape, into the river, of sewage which is carried by the wind or current on to the land, constitute a permanent injury entitling the owner, though a reversioner, to maintain an action. Jones v. Llanrwst Urban Council (No. 1), 80 L. Statutory Rights of Drainage into Sewers—Claim of Private Person for Injunction.] — Statutory rights of drainage into the sewers of a local authority are not analogous to the prescriptive rights referred to in Att.-Gen. v.

Sewers Vested in Local Authority — Flow into Thames — "Person causing or suffering . . . to flow."]—Two sewers were vested in a local authority, into which sewage matter from a number of private houses drained, and the sewage matter flowed through the sewers into the Thames. In each of these sewers the local authority had constructed a catchpit for the purpose, and largely with the effect, of purifying the sewage matter; but the sewers had not been constructed by them, nor had they done anything to any other part of the sewers, nor dealt in any other way with the sewage matter:—Held, that they had caused the sewage matter to flow into the Thames within the meaning of section 94, subsection 1 of the Thames Conservancy Act, 1894. Rochford Rural Council v. Port of London Authority, 83 L. Sewage Effluents — Sanitary Authority.] — The respondentts discharged sewage effluents from their sewage works into a natural stream, so far purified that they did not affect or deteriorate the purity or quality of the water in the stream, which was already polluted before it received the respondents' effluents, or render it fouler than it was before:—Held, that the respondents had not committed any offence under section 17 of the Public Health Act, 1875. Att.-Gen. v. Birmingham, Tame, and Rea District Drainage Board, 82 L. Natural Stream—Intermittent Flow—Discharge of Crude Sewage — Conversion into Sewer — Vesting in Local Authority — Nuisance.]—Crude sewage was discharged by a local authority into the bed of a natural stream which flowed intermittently. The stream passed through the plaintiffs' land and discharged into a tidal river. Part of the stream was culverted over. The culvert, which had been constructed under private agreements with an owner of the plaintiffs' land prior to the passing of the Public Health Act, 1875, was in bad repair. The culvert permitted sewage to escape on to the plaintiffs' land, which was periodically overflowed and sewage deposited thereon:—Held, that the bed of the stream was a public nuisance and that the culvert had become a sewer and was vested under the Public Health Act, 1875, s. 13, in the local authority, who were liable in damages and must be restrained by injunction. Att.-Gen. v. Lewes Corporation, 81 L. Local Authority Permitting Flow of Polluting Liquid from Factories—Vesting of Sewer in Local Authority—Sewer Made by Landowner for His Own Profit.]—In 1863 a piece of land adjacent to a river was laid out by the owner for the purpose of erecting woollen mills under ground leases granted by him, and he constructed a main sewer or drain for the purpose of carrying off the trade refuse from the mills (when erected) into the river. Subsequently six mills were erected on the land, and later on some hundred water closets in the mills for the use of the employees were connected with the sewer, with the result that a continuous flow of polluting liquid within the meaning of section 4 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, passed into the river. There was no evidence that the landowner had laid out the land as an ordinary building estate, or that any dwelling houses were connected with the sewer except one, for the drainage of which house into the sewer the owner agreed in 1864 to pay, and did pay, to the owner of the sewer, a rental of 5*s.* a year. In 1891 the defendants, the local sanitary authority for the district through which the sewer ran, entered into an agreement, for valuable consideration, with the then owners of the sewer, under which the defendants acquired a right to use the sewer for the drainage of some houses within their district, subject to the rights of user of the sewer by the mill owners and their employees. The plaintiffs, the sanitary authority under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, complained that the defendants caused and knowingly permitted to flow through the sewer into the river the aforesaid polluting liquid from the six mills, contrary to section 4 of the Act, and the County Court Judge granted an injunction forbidding a further commission of the offence :—Held, on appeal—first, that the sewer had been made by the landowner for his own profit within the meaning of section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and consequently did not vest in the defendants; and secondly, that the defendants were not, by reason of the agreement of 1891, guilty of an offence under section 4 of the Act of 1876. *Yorkshire (W. Order in County Court Requiring District Council to Abstain from Committing Offence—Breach of Order—Application for Penalties—Whether Two Months' Notice in Writing Necessary.]—An order was made in the County Court under section 10 of the Rivers Pollution Act, 1876, declaring that an offence against the Act had been committed by the H. District Council, and requiring them to abstain from the commission of the offence. The Rivers Board subsequently applied for penalties for default by the H. District Council in complying with the order :—Held, that in such a case the two months' written notice of intention to take proceedings referred to in section 13 of the Act had no application. *Yorkshire (W. Breaking up Roads—Laying Water Pipe therein—Subsequent Subsidence of Street—Land Injuriously Affected—Compensation for Damage—Jurisdiction of Justices.]—The respondents, in the exercise of statutory powers, laid a water-pipe under a highway repairable by a county council. The work was properly executed under the superintendence of the surveyor to the council. Some months later, as the result of the pipe being so laid, damage was caused to the highway, part of which collapsed. The county council claimed compensation under section 28 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, which was incorporated in the respondents' special Act, for damage done in the execution of their statutory powers, and instituted proceedings to have the amount settled by two Justices :—Held, that the highway was "land injuriously affected by the erection of the works" within the meaning of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, that section 85 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, did not apply, and that the Justices had no jurisdiction. Harpur v. Swansea Corporation, 82 L. Laying of Mains — Power to Lay Mains under Land of Railway Company — Acquisition of Easement, whether Necessary.] —By section 61, sub-section 1 of the Metropolitan Water Board (Various Powers) Act, 1907, "It shall be lawful for the Board to exercise at any place or places within their limits of supply the like powers with respect to the laying of mains and pipes as are exercisable by local authorities under the provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, with respect to the laying of mains and pipes within their respective districts for the purpose of water supply. . . ." By section 96, sub-section 6, "The Board shall not without the consent in writing of the railway companies under their common seal purchase or acquire any of the lands or property of the railway companies, but the Board may acquire and the railway companies shall if required grant to the Board an easement or right of constructing and maintaining works on through in under over or along such lands and property and the sum to be paid for the acquisition of such easement or right shall be settled in the manner provided by the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 . . .":—Held, that the Board were entitled, under the powers conferred upon them by the above enactments, to lay a main under land belonging to the railway company without purchasing or acquiring an easement in respect of such land. Metropolitan Water Board and London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway, In re, 84 L. Unlawfully Cutting Off Supply—Liability of Water Company to Penalty.]—A water company supplied a number of houses with water by a single service pipe, and by agreement the owner of the houses was liable for the water rate. The company, in contravention of section 4 of the Water Companies (Regulation of Powers) Act, 1887, cut off the supply to those houses for non-payment of the water rate, and refused, on tender of the rate, to restore the supply until the owner complied with the company's regulations as to having a service pipe for each house :—Held, that the company were bound to restore the status quo ante before they were entitled to exercise the rights given them by their regulations and their special Water Order, and therefore that they were liable to a penalty under section 5 of the Water Companies (Regulation of Powers) Act, 1887, for cutting off the supply. South-West Suburban Water Co. v. Hardy, 109 L. Repair of Communication Pipe — Right of Consumer to Recover Cost of Repair Executed under Threat of Cutting off Supply—Onus of Proving Ownership of Pipe.]—The owner of a house under the annual value of 10*l.* received notice from the local waterworks company that unless he repaired within forty-eight hours a leak in the communication pipe by which water was supplied to the house his water supply would be withdrawn. Having complied with the notice, he sued the company in the County Court for the sum expended by him in carrying out the repairs as money paid under duress—that is, under the threat to cut off the water :—Held, that in the absence of any finding of fact as to whether the pipe was laid down by the water company, or how or under what statutory provisions (if any) it came to be laid at all, the consumer could not sustain a claim for the amount expended on its repair as money paid under duress. Per Phillimore, J., on the ground that the notice was a mere warning or advice not amounting to duress, the company not being bound to repair the pipe, and not being bound to supply water which would be wasted by reason of the leak in the pipe. Per Avory, J., on the ground that the onus was upon the plaintiff to satisfy the Court that the communication pipe was in fact the property of the company. Colne Valley Water Co. v. Hall (5 L. Negligence—Works Laid in Street—Damage to Passenger from Explosion of Gas—Right and Obligation of Consumer to Open up Streets to Repair Leakages.]—A foot passenger in a public street was injured by an explosion of gas in the basement of an adjoining shop. On investigation, it was found that under the kerb of the footway there was a hole full of water, that a communication pipe, supplying the owner of the shop with water, and crossing a gas main at right-angles, was leaking, and that the gas main was leaking at a rusty place near the leak in the water pipe. By consent, the owner of the shop was dismissed from the action :—Held, that there was no case to go to the jury in respect of the Water Board, though an application to dismiss them from the action on the close of the plaintiff's case was refused, on the ground that, as there was evidence which the gas company must meet, the case presented by the gas company might disclose a cause of action against the Water Board. The grounds for holding that there was no case for the Water Board to meet were—first, that the leaking water pipe was a communication pipe, and that therefore, under the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, the consumer was both entitled and under an obligation to break up the street in order to repair it, the fact that it was an old pipe being immaterial: and secondly, that, whether this was so or not, the Water Board were under no duty towards a third person to repair the pipe. As regards the gas company, the jury ultimately found a verdict in their favour. Chapman v. Fylde Water Co. (64 L. J. —— Stopcock Box on Service Pipe out of Repair—Injury to Foot Passenger—Liability of Water Board.]—The plaintiff, while walking along the pavement of a street within the district of the defendants, the Metropolitan Water Board, sustained personal injuries from catching her foot in a stopcock box which was in a defective condition owing to the absence of a lid. The stopcock box was placed in the pavement over a stopcock in a service pipe which led from a main belonging to the defendants to certain private premises. The service pipe had been laid down before the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, came into operation, but there was no evidence to shew by whom it had been laid down. The service pipe and the stopcock were the property of the owner of the premises to which the pipe led. In order to repair the stopcock box it would not have been necessary to break up the street :—Held, that the defendants were not liable for the injuries sustained by the plaintiff, inasmuch as section 8 of the above Act, which enacts that communication pipes and other necessary and proper apparatus for the supply of water to the owner or occupier of premises are to be provided, laid down, and maintained by such owner or occupier, applies to service pipes in existence at the date of the Act coming into force as well as to pipes thereafter to come into existence. Chapman v. Fylde Waterworks Co. (64 L. —— Dangerous Meter-pit Cover — Injury to Foot Passenger — Liability of Owners and Occupiers of Premises Supplied—Liability of Water Board.] — The plaintiff was injured owing to the dangerous condition of a water meter-pit cover in the highway within the district of the Metropolitan Water Board :—Held, that the owners and occupiers of the premises, for the supply of water to which this cover was part of the apparatus, were prima facie liable, and that the Water Board was not liable, the former, under section 16, subsection 1 of the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, having to maintain such apparatus. Batt v. Metropolitan Water Board (80 L. Factory — "Domestic purposes" — "Trade purposes" — Water Supplied for Lavatories and Water Closets Used by Employees—Payment on Rateable Value.]—Under section 25 of the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, that authority is entitled to charge for water supplied to premises used as a factory as water used for domestic purposes, on the rateable value of the premises, even though the water closets and baths for which the water is supplied be intended for the use of persons employed in the factory. Colley's Patents, Lim. v. Metropolitan Water Board, 81 L. Supply for "domestic purposes"—Supply to Restaurant — Supply "for" "any trade, manufacture, or business."]—In detrmineing whether water is used for "domestic purposes" within the meaning of section 25 of the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, the nature of the user, whether domestic or not, and not the character of the premises in which or of the person by whom it is used must be looked at; and it is none the less used for "domestic purposes" where its use for those purposes is also ancillary to a trade or business. It is a trade use of water, so as to make it a "supply . . . for" the "purposes" of ". . . any trade manufacture or business" within the meaning of the section, and not an increase of its use for domestic purposes, caused by the trade, manufacture, or business, which is excepted by section 25 from the definition of "domestic purposes." Metropolitan Water Board v. Avery, 83 L. The lessee of a public house, in addition to an ordinary public-house business, carried on a small catering business, supplying some twenty or thirty luncheons daily to non-resident customers, whereby there was an increased use of water for what are ordinarily known as domestic purposes, such as the washing of dishes, cooking, and scrubbing floors: —Held, that this extra water was used for "domestic purposes." Colley's Patents, Lim. v. Metropolitan Water Board (81 L. Premises Used for Trade or Manufacturing Purpose—Restaurant—Supply by Meter only.]—Section 20 of the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, gives the Board an option to refuse to supply with water, otherwise than by meter, any house or building which or part of which is used for a trade or manufacturing purpose for which water is used; and the test under the section is the character of the premises to which the water is being supplied, not the purpose to which the water is actually being put:—Held, therefore, that the proprietor of a restaurant was not entitled to a supply of water for domestic purposes in the restaurant otherwise than by meter. Metropolitan Water Board v. Avery (83 L. J. K.B. 178; [1914] A.C. 118) and Frederick v. Bognor Water Co. (78 L. J. Ch. 40; [1909] 1 Ch. 149) distinguished. Oddenino v. Metropolitan Water Board, 84 L. J. Workhouse—"Private dwelling house."]—By the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, s. 53, it is provided that "every owner or occupier of any dwelling house within the limits of the special Act shall" upon certain conditions "according to the provisions of this and the special Act, be entitled to demand and receive from the undertakers a sufficient supply of water for his domestic purposes." The Bristol Waterworks Act, 1862, incorporates the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, "except when otherwise specially provided by this Act," and provides by section 68 that "the company shall at the request of the owner or occupier furnish to every occupier of a private dwelling house . . . a sufficient supply of water for the domestic use of every such occupier" at certain annual rents as there set out. The appellants requested the respondents to supply them with water on the terms specified in this section for the domestic use of the officers and inmates of the workhouse:—Held, that section 53 of the general Act must be treated as controlled by section 68 of the special Act, and that, as a workhouse was not a "private dwelling house" within the meaning of the latter section, the respondents were not bound to supply water for the domestic use of the officers and inmates upon the terms prescribed, but were at liberty to make their own terms. Bristol Guardians v. Bristol Waterworks Co., 83 L. Builder Requiring Supply for Building Purposes—"Require"—Use by Builder of Water Supplied to Building Owner by Meter—Right of Water Board to Charge Builder—Power of Water Board to Determine Percentage Rate of Charge.]—By an agreement between the Metropolitan Water Board and the Secretary of State for War the Board agreed to afford a supply of water by meter to certain barracks for domestic and non-domestic purposes. During the currency of this agreement, the defendants, who were a firm of builders, entered into a contract with the Secretary of State for War whereby the defendants undertook to carry out (inter alia) such building work at the barracks as the Secretary of State might demand during a period of three years. It was a term of this contract that water for the works under the contract might be obtained by the defendants free of charge from any available War Department source. In pursuance of this contract the defendants built two additional rooms at the barracks, and they took the water which they used for the purpose of the work from the supply measured by meter and afforded to the barracks under the agreement between the Board and the Secretary of State. The Water Board sued the defendants in the County Court under section 17 of the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, to recover from them, as being builders who required a supply of water for the purpose of building, the sum of 14*s.*, such sum being calculated at the rate of 7*s.* per cent. on the probable total cost of the work:—Held, that the word "require" in section 17 meant "ask for" or "request," and not "have need of," and that, as the defendants had not asked for or requested a supply of water, the action was not maintainable. Metropolitan Water Board v. Johnson, 82 L. J. K.B. 1164; [1913] 3 K.B. 900; 109 L. T. 88; 77 J. P. 384; 11 L. G. R. 1106; 57 S. J. 625; 29 T. L. R. 603—C.A.

The Water Board, purporting to act in pursuance of the proviso to section 17—which empowers them, if they "so determine" instead of affording to such a builder the required supply by measure, to afford the same at a rate not exceeding 7*s.* per 100*l.* of the probable total cost after making such allowance as they may think reasonable for decorative or iron or steel work not requiring the use of water—had passed a resolution to the effect that all supplies of water for building purposes under section 17 should be afforded not by measure, but at such percentage rate, after making such reasonable allowance:—Held, that, as there was no evidence that the Board had taken into consideration the question whether in this particular case it would be reasonable to make any such allowance, the general resolution was not a determination within the meaning of the proviso. Ib.

Supply of Water by Agreement—Receiver Appointed by Mortgagees—Arrears of Water Rates—Liability of Receiver—"Owner"—Collector of Rent.]—The owner of certain blocks of buildings, containing a number of separate tenements, in 1903 made an agreement with the predecessors of the plaintiffs for the supply of water by meter to the buildings at certain rates. The tenements were each of an annual value less than 20*l.* No payment in respect of the water supplied was made after 1904. In August, 1906, the defendant was appointed receiver of the premises on behalf of mortgagees thereof, and he received the rents of all the tenements with the exception of four. The agreement for the supply of water was never terminated. The rents were actually collected by a collector who resided on the premises, and had, previously to the defendant's appointment as receiver, collected on behalf of the mortgagor. He handed the rents when collected to the defendant. The plaintiffs claimed to recover from the defendant personally the arrears of water rate under the provisions of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and the East London Waterworks Act, 1853:—Held, that the collector was to be deemed the "owner" of the tenements within section 72 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and section 81 of the East London Waterworks Act, 1853, and not the defendant, who could not therefore be made personally liable in respect of the water rate. Metropolitan Water Board v. Brooks, 80 L. J. K.B. 495; [1911] 1 K.B. 289; 103 L. T. 739; 75 J. P. 41; 9 L. G. R. 442—C.A.

Post-Office Premises not on Valuation List and not Rated.]—The plaintiff, who was the occupier of premises used as a post-office within the district supplied with water by the defendants, which premises were not entered on the valuation list and were not rated, demanded a supply of water for domestic purposes, but did not strictly comply with all the regulations made by the defendants, and was unable to agree with the defendants as to the proper amount to be paid for the water supply:—Held, that the premises not being rated, the defendants could not insist on prepayment of water rate by the plaintiff as a condition precedent to their supplying the plaintiff with water, and that the plaintiff was entitled to a supply of water for domestic purposes as of right subject to his complying with the requirements of the defendants' rules and regulations, and on payment of the value of the water supplied, which value should, if necessary, be ascertained in chambers. Postmaster-General v. Nenagh Urban Council, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 238—Ross, J.

Supply Outside Borough but Within Limits of Supply—Provisions of General and Special Acts to be Read together.]—The plaintiff was the occupier of a house which was outside the limits of the borough of Plymouth, but was within the limits of water supply under the Plymouth Corporation Water and Markets Act, 1867, which Act incorporated the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, "except where expressly excepted or varied by this Act." The plaintiff was supplied by the defendants with water under the special Act, but having been compelled to pay a water rate in excess of the scale prescribed by section 22 of that Act, he sought to recover from the defendants the difference between the two rates, contending that by section 53 of the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, and section 22 of the special Act he was only liable to pay water rate in accordance with the scale laid down in the last-mentioned section:—Held, that the action failed, as section 15 of the special Act (relating to supply beyond the borough of Plymouth, but within the limits of supply) varied the provisions of the Act of 1847, and applied so as to entitle the plaintiff to a supply of water only on the terms to be agreed between him and the defendants. Pitts v. Plymouth Corporation, 81 L. Rateable Value—Provisional Valuation List—"Valuation list in force."]—A provisional valuation list made under section 47 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, which is not finally settled by the assessment committee until after the beginning of a quarter, has not, for the purposes of a water rate payable in advance under the Waterworks Clauses Act, 1847, a retrospective operation, and does not supersede a previous valuation list from the date of service of a copy of the list and notice on the occupier; but the rateable value of the premises to be assessed is, by section 13, sub-section 1 of the Metropolitan Water Board (Charges) Act, 1907, to be "determined by the valuation list in force at the commencement of the quarter for which the water rate accrues or (if there is no such list in force) by the last rate made for the relief of the poor." Metropolitan Water Board v. Phillips, 82 L. Non-payment of Water Rate — Owner and not Occupier Liable—Cutting off Supply—Unoccupied Premises.] — By section 4 of the Water Companies (Regulation of Powers) Act, 1887, a water company is prohibited from cutting off the water supply to a dwelling house or part of a dwelling house occupied as a separate tenement for non-payment of the water rate "where the owner and not the occupier is liable" for such payment:—Held, that if at the time the rate accrued due there was an occupier as well as an owner, and the latter was liable for the payment thereof, the prohibition applied, although at the time when the supply was cut off the occupier had gone out of possession and the premises were vacant. Metropolitan Water Board v. Bibbey, 80 L. Officer—Superannuation Allowance.]—The plaintiff, who in 1897 had been engaged as a draughtsman and surveyor by the chief engineer of the New River Co., and who continued to act as an engineer for that company and subsequently for the defendants till 1909, when his services were dispensed with,—Held to be an existing servant or officer of the defendants within the meaning of section 47, sub-section 10 of the Metropolis Water Act, 1902, and, as such, entitled to a superannuation allowance. Webster v. Metropolitan Water Board, 76 J. P. 474; 10 L. G. R. 1025—Avory, J.

—— Statutory Transfer of Officers and Servants of Company to Metropolitan Water Board at Same Rate of Pay whilst Performing the Same Duties—Continuation of Contract with Water Board—Right of Water Board to Determine Contract.] — Section 47, sub-section 1 of the Metropolis Water Act, 1902, provides that, as from the appointed day—that is, November 24, 1904, on which day the undertakings of various London water companies were taken over by and vested in the Metropolitan Water Board—any existing officer of any water company shall "become an officer or servant of the Water Board, and shall hold his office or situation by the same tenure and upon like terms and conditions under the Water Board as he would have held the same under the company if this Act had not been passed, and, while performing the same duties, shall receive not less salary, wages or pay than he would have been entitled to if this Act had not been passed." The plaintiff whilst employed by a London water company, whose undertaking was transferred to the defendants by the above statute, on a verbal agreement made in 1899, by which he received extra pay for overtime work and travelling expenses. The contract of service was subject to seven days' notice to terminate it. The arrangement, with one slight alteration in the amount of payment, was continued until November 24, 1904, the day appointed by the Act for the transfer of the company's servants to the Water Board, and thereafter between the plaintiff and defendants until November 16, 1906, on which day they gave him seven days' notice that at the expiration thereof they would discontinue payment of extra remuneration, and they accordingly at the expiration of the notice refused, and continued to refuse, to pay him the extra remuneration. In an action for arrears of extra pay from November 16, 1906,—Held, that the plaintiff's statutory right, while performing the same duties, to receive not less salary, wages, or pay than he would have been entitled to if the Act had not been passed was subject to the right of the defendants, his new employers, to determine the original contract of service; that the defendants, in giving the seven days' notice, were exercising a right which the water company could have exercised; and that therefore they were entitled to judgment. Rowsell v. Metropolitan Water Board, 84 L. J. K.B. 1869; 79 J. P. 267; 13 L. G. R. 654—D.

Semble, in a claim for compensation by an existing officer for direct pecuniary loss sustained by him by reason of the abolition or relinquishment of his office or otherwise in consequence of the Metropolis Water Act, 1902, the special procedure referred to in section 47, sub-section 5 of the Act must be adopted. Ib.

Whether Roads Highways.]—On the evidence, held, that certain occupation roads (subject to a public footpath over one of them) were not highways. Fuller v. Chippenham Rural Council, 79 J. P. 4—Astbury, J.

Held, on the facts, that certain portions of the roads were highways repairable by the inhabitants at large. Att.-Gen. v. Godstone Rural Council, 76 J. P. 188—Parker, J.

Whether a highway has or has not been dedicated to the public so as to become repairable by the inhabitants at large is a question of fact for the Justices, and if there is any evidence in support of their finding the Court will not set it aside. Folkestone Corporation v. Brockman, 83 L. J. K.B. 745; [1914] A.C. 338; 110 L. T. 834; 78 J. P. 273; 12 L. G. R. 334; 30 T. L. R. 297—H.L. (E.)

In 1827 the tenant for life of certain waste land, over which people had been allowed to wander without interference, made a road over such land, and, under the powers conferred by a private Act of Parliament, let plots of land adjoining the road upon building leases, and houses were erected upon such plots of land. The road was used in connection with the houses so erected, and to some extent by the inhabitants of the neighbourhood. There was a notice board on which the road was described as a "private road," and there were gates and bars across the road, and tolls were charged for the passage of horses and vehicular traffic, but there had never been any interference with the use of the road by foot passengers. There had been no formal dedication of the road under section 23 of the Highway Act, 1835, and it had never been repaired by the local authority. The Justices found that there had been no dedication of the road to the public before the Highway Act, 1835, came into operation, and that it was not a highway repairable by the inhabitants at large, but was a "street" within the meaning of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, and that the frontagers were liable for repairs:—Held (reversing the judgment of the Court of Appeal), that as there was evidence in support of this finding the Court had no power to set it aside. Ib.

Dedication—Evidence—Repairs—Liability of Parish.]—A road may be "made by and at the expense of" an individual within the meaning of section 23 of the Highway Act, 1835, if he has allowed the public by continuous user to acquire a right of way over his land, though he has never laid out and formally dedicated a road over the land in question; and if there be no evidence that the road was so made till after the passing of the Highway Act, 1835, the burden of repairing it cannot be cast on the inhabitants at large. Leigh Urban Council v. King (70 L. J. K.B. 313; [1901] 1 K.B. 747) and Reg. v. Thomas (7 E. & B. 399) disapproved. Cababé v. Walton-upon-Thames Urban Council, 83 L. J. K.B. 243; [1914] A.C. 102; 110 L. T. 674; 78 J. P. 129; 12 L. G. R. 104; 58 S. J. 270—H.L. (E.)

Judgment of the Court of Appeal (82 L. J. K.B. 133; [1913] 1 K.B. 481) affirmed. Ib.

—— Unmetalled Strip—Intention to Dedicate Whole Width of Road—Evidence.]—The appellant, who was the owner of land, proposed to develop it as a building estate, and deposited with the local authority a plan, as required by the local regulations, shewing a road of a certain width with a footpath on either side of it. Houses were built along one side of this road, and the half of the road nearest to the houses was made up and metalled, but the other half was left unmetalled. The whole length of it was fenced, and there was evidence that persons had used the road as they pleased both on foot and with vehicles. The owner of land adjoining the unmetalled half of the road claimed a right to pass on to it from his property both on foot and with vehicles:—Held, that there was evidence of an intention on the part of the appellant to dedicate the whole width of the road to the public, and that the adjoining owner had the right which he claimed. Rowley v. Tottenham Urban Council, 83 L. J. Ch. 411; [1914] A.C. 95; 110 L. T. 546; 78 J. P. 97; 12 L. G. R. 90; 58 S. J. 233; 30 T. L. R. 168—H.L. (E.)

Judgment of the Court of Appeal (82 L. J. Ch. 83; [1912] 2 Ch. 633) affirmed. Ib.

—— Public User since 1820—Land in Lease—Dedication by Previous Owner—Presumption.]—In an action by a landowner against a local authority claiming a declaration that there was no right of way over a footpath upon his land leading from Lucas Green to Bisley in the county of Surrey, it appeared that the owner in fee occupied the land up to 1822, when the land was leased to a tenant until 1842; and that from 1842 up to the commencement of the present action the land was held by various tenants upon tenancy from year to year. Evidence of reputation was given as to user by the public prior to 1822, and as to subsequent user up to the commencement of the action :—Held, that the Court could presume dedication prior to 1822, and that the user while the land was on lease was material as supporting evidence of prior dedication by the owner; that such dedication had been established, and that therefore the plaintiff's claim failed. Shearburn v. Chertsey Rural Council, 78 J. P. 289; 12 L. G. R. 622—Astbury, J.

—— Presumption—Onus of Proof—User.]—The plaintiffs sought a declaration that a certain portion of a lane was a public highway repairable by the defendants. At each end of the portion in question the lane was admittedly a public highway for all purposes repairable by the inhabitants at large. The portion in question was admitted by the defendants only to be a public footpath :—Held, first, on the evidence, both positive and negative, that the portion of the lane in question was a public highway for all purposes and was repairable by the defendants. Applying the procedure as to the onus probandi at the trial of an indictment of the inhabitants of a parish for non-repair of a highway,—Held, secondly (a), that, although the onus of proving that the lane was a highway was on the plaintiffs, proof of user of such a nature that dedication might be reasonably inferred therefrom was sufficient, without proving that during the period of user there was a person capable of dedicating; it was for the defendants to prove that there was no such person, if they relied upon that fact; (b) that the mere fact that there was no evidence that the defendants had ever repaired the way, although relevant on the question whether the way was a public way or not, did not rebut the inference based on public user, and was not by itself evidence to displace their liability to repair; but if coupled with evidence that some one else was liable, it might have some weight; (c) that the plaintiffs need not give evidence of the inhabitants' liability to repair before 1835; (d) that section 23 of the Highway Act, 1835, should be regarded as having opened to the inhabitants, and thus to persons in the position of the present defendants, a new method of displacing their liability at common law, and not as having imposed on persons in the position of the present plaintiffs a new onus of proof; and therefore that it was for such defendants to prove that the way in question was a way to which the section applied, and not for such plaintiffs to prove that the section had no application, although it was possible that if the defendants once proved that the way in question was a way to which section 23 applied, the onus of proving that the formalities required to make the defendants liable had been observed might be shifted. Held, thirdly, that the decision of the Court was without prejudice to the question whether the part of the lane in question was or was not a highway unnecessary for public use within the provisions of the Highway Act. Att.-Gen. v. Watford Rural Council, 81 L. J. Ch. 281; [1912] 1 Ch. 417; 106 L. T. 27; 76 J. P. 74; 10 L. G. R. 364—Parker, J.

—— Wayside Strip—Hedge.]—The plaintiffs claimed that a certain highway extended over the whole width between two hedges. One of these hedges was a natural hedge :—Held, that at its origin it had no relation to the highway, and therefore that there was no presumption that all that lay between the two hedges had been dedicated for highway purposes. Att.-Gen. v. Lindsay-Hogg, 76 J. P. 450—Eve. J.

—— Roadside Waste—Inclosure—Presumption—Right of Way.]—When the lord of a manor incloses a strip of land by the side of a public highway, and within a few feet only from the metalled portion of the road, then, whatever the presumption may have been before, a presumption thereafter arises that what he leaves between the metal and his fence is dedicated to the public. Copestake v. West Sussex County Council, 80 L. J. Ch. 673; [1911] 2 Ch. 331; 105 L. T. 298; 75 J. P. 465; 9 L. G. R. 905—Parker, J.

Any presumption as to the extent of a public right of way ought to be drawn with reference to all the circumstances existing at the time when the question as to the extent of the public right arises, and it would not be right to raise a presumption from a state of circumstances proved to have existed thirty or fifty years ago, ignoring all that had happened since. Ib.

The expression "on the side or sides of any turnpike road" in section 118 of the Turnpike Roads Act, 1822, means not separated from the road by any existing fence. Common or waste land does not include land which has been inclosed from the road in part since the middle of the nineteenth century and in part from 1892. Ib.

—— User of Street by Purchasers.]—No presumption of dedication arises if an owner lays out such a street and grants the right of using it to purchasers of plots upon payment of a yearly sum for its upkeep until it shall be taken over by the local authority. The inference in such a case is that he does not intend it to become a highway until it has been taken over. The fact that the road has been cleansed, lighted, and patrolled by the authority makes no difference. Kirby v. Paignton Urban Council, 82 L. J. Ch. 198; [1913] 1 Ch. 337; 108 L. T. 205; 77 J. P. 169; 11 L. G. R. 305; 57 S. J. 266—Neville, J.

—— Cul-de-sac.] — User of a cul-de-sac by persons going up it for the purpose of knowingly committing a trespass on land beyond will not raise any presumption of dedication. Ib.

—— Question of Intention — Presumption — Absolute Owner—Evidence.]—A public right of way (if not created by statute) must have originated in dedication by the owner or owners of the land over which it passes. Dedication is a question of intention, but a person cannot dedicate what is not his own. It may be established by proof of definite acts of dedication on the part of the owners, or it may be inferred from use and enjoyment on the part of the public. But the use and enjoyment from which it can be inferred must be use and enjoyment as of right known to the owner and acquiesced in by him. Again, this knowledge and recognition on the part of the owner may itself be inferred from the fact that the use and enjoyment has been so open and so notorious as of right as to give rise to the presumption that the owner must have been aware of and acquiesced in it; or during living memory the use and enjoyment has been such that had there been an absolute owner capable of dedicating the way, dedication would have been inferred; and if at the same time the circumstances are consistent with such use and enjoyment having been still more ancient, a jury may properly infer dedication by some owner before living memory. If, however, it be shewn that before a definite date the rights could not have existed, and since that date there has been no owner capable of dedicating the way, dedication cannot be inferred. Webb v. Baldwin, 75 J. P. 564—Parker, J.

—— Strip at Side of Old Turnpike Road—Presumption of Dedication.]—In respect of a strip of waste land between the metalled road and an ancient fence on one side thereof over which the public had walked for over forty years without restriction,—Held, that the presumption of dedication to the use of the public was not rebutted by evidence that the plaintiff as the lord of the manor had given permission for the erection thereon of telephone posts, had given permission to deposit stuff thereon, and had claimed to take trimmings therefrom. East v. Berkshire County Council, 106 L. T. 65; 76 J. P. 35—Neville, J.

—— Dedication Subject to Gates.] — Per Scrutton, J.: There may be a dedication of a road with a right to put a gate to keep beasts from straying. There may also be a dedication by a landowner with liberty to reserve gates for the convenience of his own farming operations. Att.-Gen. v. Meyrick, 79 J. P. 515—Scrutton, J.

—— Footway in Street—Evidence of Dedication to Public—Obstruction.]—In 1852 a plot of land in a street, a public highway repairable by the local authority, was demised by a lease for 999 years. Three cottages were erected on it, with a footway in front abutting on the street and paved with cobbles. Between twenty and forty years ago half the width of the cobble stones was taken up and flags were substituted, but by whom there was no evidence to shew. The other half in front of the cottages remained as it was. In 1890 the cottages were converted into shops. Up to about fifteen years ago the cobbled part was repaired by the leaseholder, and then flags were substituted for the remaining cobbles by the local authority, who had since repaired the whole footway. From 1890 the occupier of one of the shops had a show case standing on the footway in front of his shop, but the public continued to use the whole footway except so far as they were obstructed by the show case. The shopkeeper was prosecuted for obstructing the passage of the public over the footway, and the Justices found that the user of the footway by the public since 1852 until the cottages were turned into shops—a period of forty years—was a dedication of the land the subject of the lease to the public, and that such user had been so notorious as to lead to the presumption that the lessor had acquiesced in the dedication, and that the obstruction since 1890 was not sufficient to rebut the presumption of dedication. The shopkeeper was accordingly convicted. On appeal by Special Case,—Held, that the conviction must be affirmed. The question was one of fact for the Justices, who were entitled upon the statements in the Case to find that the early user of the footway by the public was evidence upon which they could presume dedication, and that the user subsequent to 1890, when the show case was first erected, did not rebut the evidence of dedication at an earlier date. Openshaw v. Pickering, 77 J. P. 27; 11 L. G. R. 142—D.

—— Land under Administration of Court of Chancery and Chancery Division—Land under Building Lease—Cul-de-sac.]—H. was the lessee under a lease granted in 1849 of a house erected under a building agreement of 1844. The garden of the house abutted upon a narrow roadway leading only to a cul-de-sac. H. extended the house to within twenty feet (the prescribed distance) from the centre of this roadway, and at the instance of the trustees of the estate refused to comply with the requirements of a notice of the London County Council under the London Building Acts to set back the extension so that the external fence or boundary of the forecourt between the house and the roadway should be at the prescribed distance from the centre of the roadway, on the ground that there had never been any dedication to the public as a highway. The cul-de-sac had been lighted by the local authority since 1876, and in 1891 had been partially paved and sewered by them under section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855. In 1894 a man had been prosecuted by the local authority, and convicted of causing an obstruction by allowing a van to stand in the cul-de-sac for an unreasonable length of time. From 1854 to the present time the estate had been under the administration, first of the Court of Chancery, and subsequently of the Chancery Division, and no consent to or order of the Court for the dedication of the roadway as a highway had been obtained or applied for:—Held, that since 1854 there could have been no dedication of the roadway without the sanction of the Court. That there could not in any case have been an effective dedication in the absence of evidence to shew—first, that such roadway and cul-de-sac were used by the public as distinguished from persons having business on the premises; secondly, that the freeholders ought to have anticipated that the roadway and cul-de-sac would be used by the public, and nevertheless did not take measures to prevent such user; or thirdly, that there was otherwise an intention to dedicate on the part of the freeholders. London County Council v. Hughes, 104 L. T. 685; 9 L. G. R. 291; 75 J. P. 239—D.

—— Cul-de-sac in City of London.]—A court in the City of London, having a number of small houses and a warehouse erected around it, and having its only means of access by way of a passage leading through the ground floor of a building fronting a street, was included in an area taken, inclosed and cleared in 1878 by the then local authority for the purposes of the Artisans' and Labourers' Dwellings Improvement Act, 1875. The passage and the building through which it passed were not included in the area so taken, and the passage was subsequently used for private purposes only. The improvement scheme was ultimately abandoned, and in 1896 the area taken was sold in building lots. In an action by the owner of the building through which the passage led to restrain the owners and occupiers of building lots in rear, which included part of the site of the court, from removing a barrier erected to exclude them from the use of the passage,—Held, after consideration of the sufficiency of the evidence to raise the presumption of dedication, that the court had been, and the passage still remained, a highway, and that the defendants were entitled to remove the barrier. Josselsohn v. Weiler, 9 L. G. R. 1132; 75 J. P. 513—Scrutton, J.

Accommodation Passage Constructed for Removal of Refuse from Houses—No Evidence of Public User.]—In 1898 a passage intended as a means of access to the backs of houses which had just been built, for the removal of house refuse, &c., was constructed in pursuance of the by-laws of the local authority. It was a cul-de-sac six feet wide. The local authority kept it scavenged, but had never adopted it as a highway, though they had made it up and charged the expenses on the frontagers. It was used by some thirty or forty people a day, but there was no evidence of user of it by any member of the public as such :—Held, that the public had no right of way over the passage. Vine v. Wenham, 84 L. J. Ch. 913; 79 J. P. 423—Sargant, J.

Public Park—Dedication—Park Purposes—Widening Street — Improvement of Park.] — The Court will not readily infer dedication to the public. Where a corporation purchased fifty-three acres, forty of which were intended to be used as a public park, the Court would not infer dedication of the whole of the fifty-three acres simply because the remaining thirteen acres were not fenced off and were used by the public as part of the park. Att.-Gen. v. Bradford Corporation, 9 L. G. R. 1190; 75 J. P. 553; 55 S. J. 715—Eve, J.

Queues in Highway Outside Theatre.]—The owners of a theatre held three performances daily at 2.30, 6.20, and 9.10 P.M., and were in the habit of opening the doors of the theatre about a quarter of an hour before each performance. As a result, persons desiring to obtain seats in the theatre used to attend in large numbers before each performance and were then formed by the police into a queue extending past the plaintiffs' business premises in the same street. The police were paid by the defendants in respect of their extra services. In an action by the plaintiffs against the owners of the theatre claiming an injunction to restrain them from carrying on their theatre so as to cause a nuisance to the plaintiffs by an obstruction of the access to and egress from their business premises, Joyce, J., held that an obstruction had been caused by the defendants amounting to a nuisance, but in place of granting an injunction accepted an undertaking from them that they would open the doors of the theatre earlier at the two morning performances :—Held, by the Court of Appeal (Phillimore, L.J., dissenting), that there had been such an obstruction by the crowds at the two earlier performances as to amount to a nuisance, and that the defendants were responsible for the collection of the crowds and could be prevented at the suit of the plaintiffs, as persons specially affected, from carrying on their theatre so as to cause the nuisance. Lyons v. Gulliver, 83 L. J. Ch. 281; [1914] 1 Ch. 631; 110 L. T. 284; 78 J. P. 98; 12 L. G. R. 194; 58 S. J. 97; 30 T. L. R. 75—C.A.

Nuisance — Unlawful Erection of Stand in Highway — Obstruction of View — Right of Resident to Maintain Action.] — The defendants, a Metropolitan borough council, in accordance with a resolution duly passed, erected a stand in a certain highway named B. Place, for the convenience and at the expense of members of the council in order to enable them to view the funeral procession of King Edward 7 passing along E. Road. The plaintiff, who occupied certain premises in B. Place, was in the habit of letting windows in her house for the purpose of viewing public processions passing along E. Road. The stand which the defendants erected obstructed the view of the funeral procession from the plaintiff's house, so that the plaintiff was unable to let the windows in her house : —Held, that, as the stand was unlawfully erected by the defendants in a public highway and constitutes a public nuisance, the plaintiff could maintain an action for the special damage which she had sustained through the loss of view caused by the erection of the stand; and further, that the action was properly brought against the defendants in their corporate capacity. Campbell v. Paddington Borough Council, 80 L. J. K.B. 739; [1911] 1 K.B. 869; 104 L. T. 394; 75 J. P. 277; 9 L. G. R. 387; 27 T. L. R. 232—D.

—— Quarry in Land Adjoining Road — Collapse of Fence and Road—Duty of Present Occupier to Restore — Remedy of Local Authority.] — Defendant owned and occupied land, being a worked-out quarry, immediately adjoining a public highway vested in an urban district council and repairable by the inhabitants at large. A prior owner of the land had, in 1865, made the excavation in order to quarry for limestone, and until then the surfaces of the road and the land had been on the same level. The excavation being a source of danger and obstruction to persons using the road, the excavator, to protect them and the road, built alongside the road a wall, the bottom of which rested on a ledge of limestone left ungotten for the purpose and served as a retaining wall for the subsoil of the road and as a fence wall above its surface. In February, 1913, part of the wall collapsed and fell into the quarry, and in consequence a considerable part of the subsoil of the road and of its surface fell in also, the road thus becoming impassable, a source of danger to persons attempting to use it, and a nuisance, liable under section 3 of the Quarry (Fencing) Act, 1887, to be dealt with summarily under the Public Health Act, 1875:—Held, first, that there was also a common law obligation on the possessor of the excavation to keep it fenced off whether it was made before or after his possession began, and whether he was or was not liable to his landlord, if any; and secondly, that in an action by the Attorney-General at the relation of the council, a mandatory order must be made on defendant to abate the nuisance by restoring the road to its condition prior to the subsidence and by rebuilding the wall or providing some other reasonable fence between the road and the quarry. Greenwell v. Low Beechburn Colliery Co. (66 L. J. Q.B. 643; [1897] 2 Q.B. 165) distinguished. Att.-Gen. v. Roe, 84 L. J. Ch. 322; [1915] 1 Ch. 235; 112 L. T. 581; 79 J. P. 263; 13 L. G. R. 335—Sargant, J.

—— Chalkpit — Intervening Strip of Land — Danger to Public—Compulsory Fencing—"In any situation fronting," &c.]—The words, "If in any situation fronting, adjoining, or abutting on any street or public footpath, any . . . excavation . . . or bank is . . . dangerous to the persons lawfully using the street or footpath," in section 30 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1907, cover the case of any excavation, or bank, that is sufficiently near to any street, or footpath, to cause danger to those who are lawfully using it, even although the excavation, or bank, does not itself actually front, adjoin, or abut on the street, or footpath. The owner of such excavation, or bank, may therefore be required by the local authority, under section 30, to erect a fence to prevent any danger to the persons using the highway. Carshalton Urban Council v. Burrage, 80 L. J. Ch. 500; [1911] 2 Ch. 133; 104 L. T. 306; 75 J. P. 250; 9 L. G. R. 1037; 27 T. L. R. 280—Neville, J.

—— Sale and Conveyance of Land to Local Authority for Tipping Refuse — Deposit of Refuse—Overflow of Rain Water from Deposit Creating Gullies in Highway.]—A sale of land to a local authority for the purpose of tipping refuse thereon by a vendor who retains adjoining land does not impliedly authorise the local authority to tip refuse in such a way as to cause a nuisance on the adjoining land when such tipping can be done without causing the nuisance. Whether, in the event of it being impossible to use the land for tipping without creating the nuisance, the local authority would be so authorised, quære. Priest v. Manchester Corporation, 84 L. J. K.B. 1734; 13 L. G. R. 665—Sankey, J.

An owner of land conveyed a portion thereof to a local authority for the purpose of tipping refuse thereon, the local authority purchasing the same under the powers given to them by the Public Health Act, 1875, and two local Acts. Subsequently the owner of the remaining portion sold it to a purchaser, who formed a street thereon and built houses abutting on the said street. The local authority, acting under their powers, from time to time deposited refuse on the land purchased by them, with the result that the deposit, gradually increasing in size and becoming impervious to rain water, caused the rain water, which previously to the deposit flowed in a direction away from the street, to be diverted and overflow into the street and form holes or gullies therein dangerous to passers-by. The plaintiff, lawfully passing through the street, fell into one of these gullies and sustained personal injuries:—Held, that the gully in the street was a nuisance caused by the defendants without justification, and that they were liable to the plaintiff in damages for the injuries sustained by him. Woodman v. Pwllbach Colliery Co. (111 L. T. 169; subsequently affirmed in H.L., 84 L. J. K.B. 874; [1915] A.C. 634) followed. Ib.

—— Premises Adjoining Highway—Highway Authority Creating Nuisance thereon — Non-liability of Frontager.]—On premises adjoining a highway, which were the property of and occupied by the defendant, there was a coal shoot formed by an opening at the bottom of the wall of the house, abutting on the pavement, which was part of the highway. In 1901 the local highway authority, acting under the provisions of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, raised the level of the pavement, and, in order to preserve access to the coal shoot left an opening in the pavement. This condition of the pavement remained until October, 1914, when the plaintiff, in passing along the pavement, put her foot into the hole, and suffered personal injuries, for which she brought her action against the defendant:—Held, that the action failed, inasmuch as, where a nuisance is created by a highway authority on a highway under their control, the owner or occupier of the land adjoining the highway is not liable for an accident caused by the nuisance. Robbins v. Jones (33 L. J. C.P. 1; 15 C. B. (N.S.) 221) followed. Barker v. Herbert (80 L. J. K.B. 1329; [1911] 2 K.B. 633) discussed and distinguished. Horridge v. Makinson, 84 L. J. K.B. 1294; 113 L. T. 498; 79 J. P. 484; 13 L. G. R. 868; 31 T. L. R. 389—D.

Semble (per Bailhache, J.), there was no duty on the defendant to inspect the plans prepared by the local authority in 1901 in connection with the work of raising the level of the pavement. Ib.

Injury to Road by Traction Engine.]—The use of a traction engine which by reason of its excessive weight does substantial and abnormal damage to a public road, adequate for ordinary traffic, is a public nuisance, even though the engine be constructed in compliance with the provisions of the Locomotive Acts, 1861 and 1865. In such a case the duty cast upon a county council to repair such damage, and the liability of a district council to provide the funds for such repair, amounts to special damage, so as to make the owner of the traction engine civilly liable at the suit of both bodies, suing jointly, for the cost of repairing the road. Semble, such an action could be maintained by either body suing alone. Cavan County Council v. Kane, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 250—C.A.

Premises Abutting on Highway — Wall — Right of Owner to Access—Right to Display Advertisements and to Repair Wall.] — An owner of premises abutting on a highway has a right of access for all purposes to the wall of such premises, and may maintain an action against a person who obstructs that access in such a way as to conceal from the public advertisements displayed upon the wall, or to prevent the owner from repairing it. Cobb v. Saxby, 83 L. J. K.B. 1817; [1914] 3 K.B. 822; 111 L. T. 814—Rowlatt, J.

Meeting Held on Highway—"Lawful public meeting."]—A meeting held on a highway may be a "lawful public meeting" within section 1 of the Public Meeting Act, 1908. Burden v. Rigler, 80 L. J. K.B. 100; [1911] 1 K.B. 337; 103 L. T. 758; 75 J. P. 36; 9 L. G. R. 71; 27 T. L. R. 140—D.

—— Roadway not Dedicated to the Public.]—Injunction granted restraining the holding of a meeting at the junction of two roads on the plaintiffs' property which had not been dedicated to the public. Hampstead Garden Suburb Trust v. Denbow, 77 J. P. 318—Phillimore, J.

Right of Person Obstructed to Go on Adjoining Land.]—A level crossing over a railway formed part of an old road which had been set out in an inclosure award as a private road for the use of persons who had land abutting on the road, and certain other persons, including the defendants. By agreement between the plaintiff's predecessor in title and the railway company this level crossing was closed by the railway company. The defendants, finding that this obstruction existed, went over land belonging to the plaintiff, whereupon the plaintiff sued them for trespass:—Held, that the action failed, inasmuch as the plaintiff, being a party to the closing up of the right of way, could not complain of the defendants deviating on to his land in order to get past the obstruction. Stacey v. Sherrin, 29 T. L. R. 555—D.

Driver not Keeping to Near Side so as to Allow Free Passage on Off Side—Consent of Passing Driver to Pass on Near Side.] — The appellant, the driver of a waggon, was on the wrong or off side of the road, when a motor car approached from behind in order to pass. The driver of the waggon signalled to the motor car to pass him on the wrong or near side, which it did, without having been delayed or inconvenienced. No other traffic was on that part of the road at the time:—Held, that on the above facts no offence had been committed by the appellant under section 78 of the Highway Act, 1835, which enacts that any person who shall not keep his waggon, cart, or carriage on the near side of the road for the purpose of allowing a free passage for other waggons, carts, or carriages, shall be liable to a penalty. Nuttall v. Pickering, 82 L. J. K.B. 36; [1913] 1 K.B. 14; 107 L. T. 852; 77 J. P. 30; 10 L. G. R. 1075; 23 Cox C.C. 263—D.

—— Side Road Entering Main Road—Duties of Drivers.]—While it is the duty of vehicles approaching a main road from a side road to give way to vehicles on the main road, this rule does not absolve vehicles on the main road from the duty of approaching the entrance to the side road with caution. Macandrew v. Tillard ([1909] S. C. 78) commented on and explained. Robertson v. Wilson, [1912] S. C. 1276—Ct. of Sess.

Traffic Regulations — Urban Authority — Constable Stationed at Crossings to Direct Traffic—Implied Obligation on Part of Drivers of Vehicles to Obey Signal to Stop or Come on.]—Under section 21 of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, by which a penalty is imposed upon drivers of vehicles in streets for the breach of traffic regulations, the corporation of B. made a regulation that constables stationed at crossings of certain streets should direct drivers of vehicular traffic approaching any such crossing by word or signal to stop or come on; but the regulation did not go on to state that the driver should comply with the constable's direction or signal or that in disobeying it he should be guilty of an offence. The driver of a motor cab disregarded the direction of a constable to stop at a crossing and was convicted by Justices for a wilful breach of the regulation, and fined:—Held, that the driver had incurred a penalty under section 21 of the Act, since the regulation implied an obligation on his part to obey the direction or signal of the constable which he had wilfully disobeyed, and that the conviction must be affirmed. Dudderidge v. Rawlings, 108 L. T. 802; 77 J. P. 167; 11 L. G. R. 513; 23 Cox C.C. 366—D.

Animals on Highways.]—See ANIMALS.

b. User of Bicycles.

Motor Bicycle—Lights—Red Light Behind Bicycle.] — The word "motor car" in Article II. paragraph 7 (i) of the Motor Cars (Use and Construction) Order, 1904, includes a "motor bicycle," and consequently a motor bicycle must carry a red light visible behind in addition to a white light visible in front: —So held, by Ridley, J., and Bailhache, J. (Scrutton, J., dissentiente). See now Motor Cars (Use and Construction) Amendment Order (No. II.), 1913. Webster v. Terry, 83 L. J. K.B. 272; [1914] 1 K.B. 51; 109 L. T. 982; 78 J. P. 34; 12 L. G. R. 242; 30 T. L. R. 23—D.

General Identification Mark—Use of Motor Cycle without Authority of Manufacturer—Obligation to Keep Record.]—By section 2, sub-section 4 (b) of the Motor Car Act, 1903, the council of any county in which the business premises of any manufacturer of motor cars are situated may, on payment of a certain annual fee, assign to the manufacturer "a general identification mark which may be used for any car on trial after completion, or on trial by an intending purchaser. . . ." By Article XII. of the Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903, "On every occasion on which the general identification mark is used on a motor car, the manufacturer or dealer shall keep a record of the distinguishing number placed on or annexed to the identification plates on that occasion, and of the name and address of the person driving the motor car on that occasion. . . ." The appellants, motor cycle manufacturers, had had a general identification mark assigned to them which was affixed to one of their motor cycles. One of their employees, without the appellants' authority, took the motor cycle to his home, and left it there for some days while he was away on a holiday. In his absence his brother, without the knowledge of the appellants, took out the cycle and used it with the mark upon it:—Held, that as the motor cycle was used on the occasion in question without the knowledge or authority of the appellants, they had not committed an offence under Article XII. in not keeping a record. Phelon & Moore v. Keel, 83 L. J. K.B. 1516; [1914] 3 K.B. 165; 111 L. T. 214; 78 J. P. 247; 12 L. G. R. 950; 24 Cox C.C. 234—D.

c. User of Locomotives.

Agricultural Locomotive—Licence—Exemption—Locomotive "employed solely for the purposes of" Farm — Carrying Produce to Market.]—By section 9, sub-section 1 of the Locomotives Act, 1898, "Every locomotive shall be licensed by a county council, provided that this enactment shall not apply to any agricultural locomotive." By sub-section 10 if any person uses a locomotive on any highway in a county in which the locomotive is not licensed, without payment of a specified fee, he is liable to a penalty. By section 17 the expression "agricultural locomotive" includes "any locomotive, the property of one or more owners or occupiers of agricultural land employed solely for the purposes of their farms, and not let out on hire." A motor traction engine belonging to the respondent was employed by him to carry produce from his farm to market for the purpose of sale. The market was in the County of London, where the engine was not licensed:—Held, that the engine was at the time being employed solely for the purposes of the respondents' farm, and was therefore an "agricultural locomotive" within the exemption in section 9, sub-section 1. London County Council v. Lee, 83 L. J. K.B. 1373; [1914] 3 K.B. 255; 111 L. T. 569; 78 J. P. 396; 12 L. G. R. 733; 24 Cox C.C. 388; 30 T. L. R. 525—D.

—— Hauling Manure to Farm — Exemption from Licence.]—A traction engine used for drawing to a farm waggons laden with night soil, which has been sold by the owner of the engine to the farmer for use as manure, is used for an agricultural purpose within section 17, sub-section 1 of the Locomotives Act, 1898, and therefore it is an agricultural locomotive within section 9, and a person using it on a highway does not require under the latter section to take out a licence from a county council, or if it is used in a county where it is not licensed to pay a fee to the council of that county. Cole v. Harrop, 79 J. P. 519; 13 L. G. R. 1223; 31 T. L. R. 599—D.

Requirement as to Two Independent Brakes.]—Upon an information under section 7 of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896, the appellant was convicted of having unlawfully caused a steam motor car, exceeding two tons in weight unladen, to be used on a highway without having a brake, independent of the engine, in good working order and of such efficiency that the application of it would cause two of its wheels on the same axle to be so held that they would be effectively prevented from revolving. At the hearing it was proved that the only means by which the wheels on the back axle could be prevented from revolving were either by reversing the engine or by applying a fly-wheel brake. If the engine were out of gear the fly-wheel brake could not act, nor could the engine be reversed so as to operate as a brake:—Held, that the motor car had no brake which was independent of the engine, and that the appellant was properly convicted. Cannon v. Jefford, 84 L. J. K.B. 1897; [1915] 3 K.B. 477; 113 L. T. 701; 79 J. P. 478; 13 L. G. R. 944; 31 T. L. R. 489—D.

Steam Roller — No Weight Plate Affixed thereon.]—A steam road roller is a locomotive within the meaning of section 12 of the Locomotive Act, 1861, and must therefore have its weight conspicuously and legibly affixed thereon. Waters v. Eddison Rolling Car Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1550; [1914] 3 K.B. 818; 111 L. T. 805; 78 J. P. 327; 12 L. G. R. 1232; 30 T. L. R. 587—D.

Locomotive Drawing Waggons — Weight Unloaded of "Waggon"—Threshing Machine —Straw Trusser.]—By section 2 of the Locomotives Act, 1898, "The weight unloaded of every waggon drawn or propelled by a locomotive shall be conspicuously and legibly affixed thereon, and every owner not having affixed such weight shall be liable for each offence, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding five pounds, . . ." By section 17, sub-section 1: "In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, . . . The expression 'waggon' includes any truck, cart, carriage, or other vehicle":—Held, that a threshing machine and a straw trusser or presser affixed by bolts and screws to a framework, which was in turn attached to the wheels upon which the machines travelled, were waggons within the meaning of section 2 of the Act. Held also, that the word "waggon" in section 2 was not confined to vehicles designed to carry or capable of carrying loads. Smith v. Pickering, 84 L. J. K.B. 262; [1915] 1 K.B. 326; 112 L. T. 452; 79 J. P. 118; 13 L. G. R. 175; 31 T. L. R. 55—D.

Plough Trains—Number of Men in Attendance.]—A by-law made by a county council under section 6 of the Locomotives Act, 1898, provided that "a person in charge of a locomotive drawing two or more loaded or unloaded waggons shall not cause or suffer the locomotive to travel on any highway without having, first, a cord or other efficient means of communication extending from the rearmost waggon to such locomotive; and secondly, a person who shall (except during the time it is necessary for him to leave his position in order to comply with any statutory regulation or by-law relating to the use of locomotives on highways) travel in the rear of such waggons . . ." :—Held, that in the case of two plough trains, which are entitled to have only five men, the by-law was complied with by having the fifth man in the rear of the two trains. Williams v. Wood, 78 J. P. 221; 12 L. G. R. 646—D.

Registration—Licence—Motor Vehicles Used for Haulage—Combined Weight of Motor and Trailer.]—Where the procedure prescribed by Article IV. (5) of the Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, as to the registration and re-registration of a heavy motor car used for haulage, has been complied with, no licence under section 9 of the Locomotives Act, 1898, is required. Pilgrim v. Simmonds, 105 L. T. 241: 9 L. G. R. 966; 75 J. P. 427; 22 Cox C.C. 579 —D.

Clause 5 of Article IV., which limits the weight of a registered heavy motor car to seven tons, deals only with the weight of the motor vehicle, and has no application to the weight of the trailer attached to it. Accordingly, notwithstanding the general provision of Article III. of the Order, which limits the weight of a heavy motor car to five tons, or (with the weight of a vehicle drawn by it) six and a half tons, it was held that a heavy motor car previously registered (as weighing only 2 tons 18 cwt.), and in use at the commencement of the regulations in the Order (March 1, 1905), and in fact weighing 6 tons 18 cwt., and used with a trailer weighing 2 tons 3 cwt., making 9 tons 1 cwt. in all, could be used on a highway without a licence under section 9 of the Locomotives Act, 1898. Ib.

Excise Licence Duty—Method of Calculating "Horse power."]—The Finance (1909-10) Act, 1910, lays down a scale for the Excise licence duty payable in respect of motor cars, depending upon the "horse power" of their engines, and requires such horse power to be calculated in accordance with regulations made by the Treasury for the purpose. In a prosecution for keeping a motor car without a proper licence, the magistrate found that the Treasury regulations as applied to the particular engine in question were erroneous, and that the horse power of the engine, according to which the duty had been paid, was in fact less than that calculated in accordance with such regulations, and be therefore dismissed the summons:—Held, that the statute does not refer to true horse power as the basis of the scale of duties, but to a horse power calculated according to the Treasury regulations, and that the person who kept the motor in question should have been convicted accordingly. London County Council v. Turner, 105 L. T. 380; 9 L. G. R. 1155; 75 J. P. 551; 22 Cox C.C. 593—D.

General Identification Mark—Use of Motor Cycle without Authority of Manufacturer — Obligation to Keep Record.] — By section 2, sub-section 4 (b) of the Motor Car Act, 1903, the council of any county in which the business premises of any manufacturer of motor cars are situated may, on payment of a certain annual fee, assign to the manufacturer "a general identification mark which may be used for any car on trial after completion, or on trial by an intending purchaser. . . ." By Article XII. of the Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903, "On every occasion on which the general identification mark is used on a motor car, the manufacturer or dealer shall keep a record of the distinguishing number placed on or annexed to the identification plates on that occasion, and of the name and address of the person driving the motor car on that occasion. . . ." The appellants, motor cycle manufacturers, had had a general identification mark assigned to them which was affixed to one of their motor cycles. One of their employees, without the appellants' authority, took the motor cycle to his home, and left it there for some days while he was away on a holiday. In his absence his brother, without the knowledge of the appellants, took out the cycle and used it with the mark upon it:—Held, that as the motor cycle was used on the occasion in question without the knowledge or authority of the appellants, they had not committed an offence under Article XII. in not keeping a record. Phelon & Moore v. Keel, 83 L. J. K.B. 1516; [1914] 3 K.B. 165; 111 L. T. 214; —— Expiration of Right to Use—Notice of Expiration to User.]—The right to use a general identification mark assigned on the registration of a motor car under section 2, sub-section 4 (b) of the Motor Car Act, 1903, expires twelve months later, and it is no defence to a charge of using a car on a public highway without being registered, after the expiration of the twelve months, that no notice was given to the accused of the expiration of that right. Caldwell v. Hague, 84 L. J. K.B. 543; 112 L. T. 502; 79 J. P. 152; 13 L. G. R. 297—D.

78 J. P. 247; 12 L. G. R. 950; 24 Cox C.C. 234—D.

Allowing Motor Car to Stand on Highway—"Unnecessary obstruction"—Offence "in connection with the driving of a motor car."]—A conviction under Article IV. (2) of the Motor Cars (Use and Construction) Order, 1904, of the driver of a motor car for allowing such car to stand on a highway so as to cause an unnecessary obstruction thereof is not a conviction for an offence "in connection with the driving of a motor car" within section 4, sub-section 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, and that section therefore does not authorise the indorsement of the driver's licence with particulars of the conviction. Rex v. Yorkshire (W. R.) Justices; Shackleton, Ex parte, 79 L. J. K.B. 244; [1910] 1 K.B. 439; 102 L. T. 138; 74 J. P. 127; 8 L. G. R. 163; 22 Cox C.C. 280—D.

Speed Limit—Proof of Warning or Notice of Intended Prosecution.]—In a prosecution for a contravention of section 9 of the Motor Car Act, 1903 (which imposes a speed limit), the prosecution must prove that the warning or notice of the intended prosecution required by the section was given to the accused; and a conviction, without such proof, is bad. Dickson v. Stevenson, [1912] S. C. (J.) 1—Ct. of Just.

—— Heavy Motor Car—Axle Weight—Car having One Axle Above and Another Below Specified Axle Weight.]—Article VII. of the Heavy Motor Car (Scotland) Order, 1905 [corresponding to Article VII. of the Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904], provides that if a heavy motor car has all its wheels fitted with pneumatic tyres, the speed at which it may be driven on the highway shall not exceed "(a) Twelve miles an hour—where the registered axle weight of any axle does not exceed six tons; and (b) Eight miles an hour—where the registered axle weight of any axle exceeds six tons":—Held (dub. Lord Johnston), that the speed limit for a car of the class referred to of which the registered axle weight of the front axle was 2 tons 2 cwts., and that of the back axle over 6 tons, was eight, and not twelve miles an hour. Auld v. Pearson, [1914] S. C. (J.) 4—Ct. of Just.

—— Exceeding Speed Limit—Sufficiency of Evidence.]—The driver of a motor car was convicted of driving his car over a measured distance at a speed exceeding the speed limit, the only evidence being that of two constables, who had been stationed at either end of the measured distance, and who deposed, the one to the time at which the car entered, the other to the time at which it passed out of the measured distance. An objection to the sufficiency of the evidence on the ground that as each of these times was a fundamental fact in the charge, it could not be established by the uncorroborated testimony of a single witness, was repelled and the conviction sustained. Scott v. Jameson, [1914] S. C. (J.) 187—Ct. of Just.

—— Speed Limit in Royal Parks—Offence against Park Regulation made Subsequent to Motor Car Act, 1903—Indorsement of Driver's Licence.]—The offence of driving a motor car in a Royal park at a speed exceeding the limit fixed by a regulation made under the Parks Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 15), by a body therein authorised to make it, and in existence when the Motor Car Act, 1903, came into operation, is an offence within the purview of section 4 of that Act, although the regulation was made after the Act came into operation; and therefore on a third conviction for exceeding such speed limit the licence of the person convicted must be indorsed. Rex v. Plowden; Braithwaite, Ex parte, 78 L. J. K.B. 733; [1909] 2 K.B. 269; 100 L. T. 856; 73 J. P. 266; 7 L. G. R. 584; 22 Cox C.C. 114; 25 T. L. R. 430—D.

—— Proof of Identity of Person Producing Licence with Person Named therein.]—One of the purposes of a licence to drive a motor car issued under the Motor Car Act, 1903, is the identification of the person to whom it is issued, and the production thereof on due demand to a constable constitutes prima facie evidence that the particulars it contains refer to the person producing it, and that he is the person to whom it was issued. Secondary evidence of such particulars may be given although no notice to produce the licence at the hearing has been given. Martin v. White, 79 L. J. K.B. 553; [1910] 1 K.B. 665; 102 L. T. 23; 74 J. P. 106; 8 L. G. R. 218; 22 Cox C.C. 236; 26 T. L. R. 218—D.

—— Proof of Previous Convictions—Identity of Particulars in Licences of Defendant and Person Previously Convicted.]—Where a defendant, knowing that his identity was to be the subject-matter of an enquiry, intentionally absented himself therefrom, the identity of his name and address and the number and place of issue of his licence with those of a person previously convicted is evidence upon which the identity of the defendant with such person may be held to be established. Ib.

The words "proof of the identity" in section 18 of the Prevention of Crime Act, 1871, do not mean conclusive proof, but evidence upon which a tribunal may find that the identity has been proved. Ib.

Lights—Failure to have Back Identification Plate Illuminated—Defence of "taken all steps reasonably practicable to prevent the mark being obscured or rendered not easily distinguishable."]—The driver of a motor cycle on a public highway at a period between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise was charged under Article XI. of the Motor (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903, with failing to keep a lamp burning thereon so contrived as to illuminate every letter or figure on the motor cycle :—Held, that the driver of the motor cycle, being charged with an offence under the Motor Car Act, 1903, was entitled to avail himself of the defence provided by section 2, sub-section 4 of that Act, and to prove that he had taken all steps reasonably practicable to prevent the mark being obscured or rendered not easily distinguishable. Printz v. Sewell, 81 L. J. K.B. 905; [1912] 2 K.B. 511; 106 L. T. 880; 76 J. P. 295; 10 L. G. R. 665; 23 Cox C.C. 23; 28 T. L. R. 396—D.

—— Indorsement of Licence—Lights—Failure to have Back Plate Illuminated—Offence in Connection with the Driving of a Motor Car.]—A conviction for failing to have the back plate of a motor car illuminated during the period prescribed by Article XI. of the Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903, is a conviction for an offence in respect of which indorsement of the convicted person's licence is required by section 4 of the Motor Car Act, 1903. Brown v. Crossley, 80 L. J. K.B. 478; [1911] 1 K.B. 603; 104 L. T. 429; 75 J. P. 177; 9 L. G. R. 194; 22 Cox C.C. 402; 27 T. L. R. 194—D.

—— No Proper Identification Mark—Size of Letters — Conviction — Indorsement on Licence.]—The applicant was summoned for unlawfully using a motor car on a public highway on which the identification mark was not in conformity with the regulations made by the Local Government Board. The letters and figures of the identification were not of the size prescribed :—Held, that in respect of this offence the applicant's licence could be indorsed. Rex v. Gill; McKim, Ex parte, 100 L. T. 858; 73 J. P. 290; 7 L. G. R. 589; 22 Cox C.C. 118—D.

—— Back Identification—Car Owned by Company—Plate not Illuminated—Conviction of Company of Aiding and Abetting the Driver —Intent.]—Where a driver of a motor car is convicted in respect of the offence created by section 2 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, and Article XI. of the Motor Car (Registration and Licensing) Order, 1903, of driving the motor car on a public highway between one hour after sunset and one hour before sunrise without having the identification plate on the back of the car illuminated, the company owning such car may be convicted under section 5 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, of aiding and abetting the driver of the car in the commission of the offence, inasmuch as the company must act through agents, and are therefore responsible for their agents sending out a car in an improper condition; and it is not necessary to prove a criminal intent on the part of the company. Provincial Motor Cab Co. v. Dunning, 78 L. —— Driving Without a Light—Indorsement of Licence—"Offence in connection with the driving of a motor car."]—A conviction under the Motor Cars (Use and Construction) Order, 1904, for driving a motor car without a light is a conviction for "an offence in connection with the driving of a motor car" within the meaning of section 4 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, and the Justices are entitled under that section to cause particulars of the conviction to be indorsed upon any licence under the Act held by the person so convicted. Symes, Ex parte, 103 L. T. 428; 75 J. P. 33; 9 L. G. R. 154; 22 Cox C.C. 346; 27 T. L. R. 21—D.

—— Use of Powerful Lamps — Offence "in connection with the driving of a motor car" — Indorsement of Licence.]—By an Order of the Secretary of State made under the Defence of the Realm (Consolidation) Regulations, 1914, the use of powerful lamps on motor cars was prohibited. The appellant was convicted of an offence under this Order. At the time of the commission of the offence he was driving the car :—Held, that he had been convicted of an offence "in connection with the driving of a motor car" within the meaning of section 4, sub-section 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, and was therefore liable to have particulars of the conviction indorsed upon his licence. Symes, Ex parte (103 L. Heavy Motor Car—User on Bridge—Notice that Bridge Insufficient to Carry Motor Car beyond Specified Weight — Notice Affixed in Accordance with Regulations of Local Government Board—Ultra Vires.]—Article XIV. of the Heavy Motor Car Order, 1904, as amended by the Heavy Motor Car (Amendment) Order, 1907, made by the Local Government Board, provides that "With respect to the use of a heavy motor car on a bridge forming part of a highway the following regulations . . . shall apply and have effect; . . . Where the person who is liable to the repair of the bridge states in a prescribed notice—(a) that the bridge is insufficient to carry a heavy motor car the registered axle-weight of any axle of which exceeds three tons, or the registered axle-weights of the several axles of which exceed in the aggregate five tons, or any greater weight specified in the prescribed notice . . . the owner of any such heavy motor car shall not cause or suffer the heavy motor car to be driven, and the person driving or in charge of the heavy motor car shall not drive the heavy motor car upon the bridge except with the consent of the person liable to the repair of the bridge" :—Held, that this article is intra vires the Local Government Board, and therefore, where such a notice has been affixed to a bridge by the person liable for its repair, any one who drives over the bridge a heavy motor car of a weight exceeding that mentioned in the notice is guilty of an offence. Lloyd v. Ross, 82 L. Offence Committed by Driver of Car—Refusal of Owner to Give Information as to Identification of Driver—Conviction—Particular Offence Committed by Driver not Specified in Conviction of Owner.]—The applicant was summoned and convicted under section 1, sub-section 3 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, for having refused to give information which it was within his power to give and which might lead to the identification of the driver of his motor car, such driver having, it was alleged, committed an offence against section 1, sub-section 1 of the Act. Neither the summons nor the conviction of the applicant specified which of the four offences enumerated in sub-section 1 the driver was alleged to have committed :—Held, that on a charge against the owner of a motor car under section 1, sub-section 3, it is unnecessary to do more than allege generally that the driver has committed an offence under section 1, sub-section 1, and therefore that the conviction of the applicant was good although it did not particularise which of the four offences enumerated in section 1, sub-section 1, the driver had committed. Beecham, Ex parte, 82 L. J. K.B. 905; [1913] 3 K.B. 45; 109 L. T. 442; 23 Cox C.C. 571; 29 T. L. R. 586—D.

Several Offences.] — By section 1, sub-section 1 of the Motor Car Act, 1903, if any person drives a motor car on a public highway " recklessly or negligently, or at a speed or in a manner which is dangerous to the public " he is guilty of an offence :—Held (following Rex v. Wells, 68 J. P. 392), that driving recklessly, driving at a speed dangerous to the public, and driving in a manner dangerous to the public were separate offences. Rex v. Cavan Justices, [1914] 2 Ir. R. 150—K.B. D.

Suspension of Licence of Driver—Date from which Suspension Runs.] — The appellant having pleaded guilty on April 8, 1909, to the charge of having exceeded the speed limit fixed by the Motor Car Act, 1903, he was fined and his licence was ordered to be suspended for three months. The appellant appealed to quarter sessions and the appeal came on to be heard on July 10, 1909, when, on objection being taken that quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to hear the appeal inasmuch as the appellant had pleaded guilty, the appeal was struck out. On August 21, 1909, the appellant was stopped when driving a motor car, and thereupon he was charged and found guilty of driving without a licence :—Held, that the three months' suspension of the appellant's licence dated from April 8, 1909, and that the giving of the notice of appeal to quarter sessions did not have the effect of deferring the operation of the order of suspension of the licence. Kidner v. Daniels, 102 L. Petroleum Spirit—Building in which Petroleum Spirit for the Purposes of Light Locomotives is Kept — " Storehouse."] — Where petroleum spirit is kept in the tank of a motor car which is placed for the night in a garage, the garage is a " storehouse " within the meaning of the Regulations dated July 31, 1907, made under the provisions of section 5 of the Locomotives on Highways Act, 1896 — that is, a " building . . . in which petroleum spirit for the purposes of light locomotives is kept in pursuance of these Regulations " :—So held by Scrutton, J., and Bailhache, J. Cost of Repairs.]—The defendant owned a stone quarry abutting on the main road. From June, 1912, to May, 1913, stone from the quarry was carried along the road in trucks drawn by a traction engine by the order of the defendant. The plaintiff local authority and others conveyed stone over the road in a similar manner, the quantity conveyed by the defendant being a little more than half the total traffic over the road. The road was fully adapted to traffic by traction engines and had been so used for a number of years. The output from the quarry had gradually increased from 7,284 tons in 1909 to 17,378 tons in 1912. Lush, J., held that traffic led along a road adapted to it, being such traffic as was to be expected in the ordinary course, could not be " extraordinary " within the meaning of section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, as amended by the Locomotives Act of 1898 :—Held, that the traffic did not come within the expressions as to extraordinary traffic used by Bowen, L.J., in Hill & Co. v. Thomas (62 L. J. M.C. 161; [1893] 2 Q.B. 333), and was not extraordinary. Ledbury Rural Council v. Somerset, 84 L. J. K.B. 1297; 113 L. T. 71; 79 J. P. 327; 13 L. G. R. 701; 59 S. J. 476; 31 T. L. R. 295—C.A.

Normal Increase of Traffic—Damage to Road.]—Whether traffic on a road is or is not " extraordinary traffic " within the meaning of section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, is a question of fact to be decided on the evidence in the particular case. Barnsley British Co-operative Society v. Worsborough Urban Council, 85 L. J. K.B. 103; 60 S. J. 25; 32 T. L. R. 41—H.L. (E.)

Traffic due to the normal increase of traffic in consequence of the development of the district is not " extraordinary traffic " within the meaning of the section, and the continued user of a road for the purpose complained of prior to the date of the complaint may make the traffic complained of ordinary traffic. But if traffic on a particular road is ordinary traffic on that road, and in consequence of some obstruction or alteration in that road the traffic is diverted to another road, it does not follow that it will still be ordinary traffic on the road to which it has been so diverted. Ib.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal (12 L. G. R. 1021; 78 J. P. 425) affirmed. Ib.

Haulage of Gravel.]—Prior to 1909 gravel from an old gravel pit had been carted in farm carts, holding from one and a half to two tons each, in sufficient quantity to supply the immediate wants of a district in which gravel hauling was not a recognised industry. The defendants subsequently became proprietors of the gravel pit and set up business as traders in gravel, and in the eight months between August 1, 1910, and March 31, 1911, hauled, by means of two traction engines, to each of which two or three trucks were attached, a weight of 21,950 tons, including the weight of the engines and trucks going and returning, over six and a half miles of a main road repairable by the county council, between the gravel pit and the county town. The comparable highways of the district carried traffic consisting of—first, ordinary agricultural traffic; secondly, light carts and carriages of residents in a thinly populated district, but within a few miles from a county town; thirdly, some motor car traffic; and fourthly, occasional threshing and steam ploughing machines, &c. This traffic, however, fell very much short of the traffic conducted by the defendants, both in volume and weight, and was not equal to half the strain on the road caused by the defendants' traffic:—Held, in an action by the county council against the defendants to recover extraordinary expenses incurred in repairing the main road in question, that as the traffic conducted by the defendants was such as substantially to alter and increase the burden imposed by ordinary traffic on the road, and cause damage and expense beyond what was common, it was extraordinary traffic, and the county council were entitled to recover extraordinary expenses incurred; but that, since the road would have carried ordinary traffic with little, if any, damage, a small allowance must be made for damage that would have been done to the road by so much traffic as was ordinary. Cambridgeshire County Council v. Pepper, 10 L. Person "by or in consequence of whose order" Traffic was Conducted—Liability of Contractor Supplying Bricks.]—S., a building owner, bought bricks for the erection of a house from L., a brickmaker, and insisted as a term of the contract that they should be delivered in trucks drawn by traction engines. L. accepted the order to deliver the bricks at the site by that mode of conveyance and contracted with E. to supply the engines and trucks, and E. selected the route to be taken from the brickfield to the site of the house. This traffic damaged part of the road over which it was conducted, and the local authority sued L. for damages suffered by reason of extraordinary traffic or excessive weight:—Held, that L. was liable in damages as the person "by or in consequence of whose order" the traffic was conducted. Windlesham Urban Council v. Seward, 77 J. P. 161; 11 L. G. R. 324—D.

"Average expense of repairing highways in the neighbourhood."]—In order that an authority, which is liable to repair a highway, may recover, under section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, as amended by section 12 of the Locomotives Act, 1898, from the person by or in consequence of whose order excessive weight or extraordinary traffic has been conducted along the highway, the amount of the expenses incurred by the authority in the repair of the highway by reason of the damage caused by the excessive weight or the extraordinary traffic, the authority must shew that the expenses incurred by them, by reason of such damage, are "extraordinary" expenses; and in order to determine what is "extraordinary" regard must be had not to the average expense of repairing the particular road which has been damaged, but to the average expense of repairing highways in the neighbourhood. Billericay Rural Council v. Poplar Guardians, 80 L. J. K.B. 1241; [1911] 2 K.B. 801; 105 L. T. 476; 75 J. P. 497; 9 L. G. R. 796; 55 S. J. 647—C.A.

In an action to recover, under section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, extraordinary expenses incurred by an authority, in respect of the repair of a highway, by reason of damage caused by excessive weight or extraordinary traffic, in which action the authority alleges a certain sum to be an average expense of repairing highways in the neighbourhood, a defendant is entitled to an order for particulars not merely of the average expense of repairing the particular highway which has been damaged, but of the average expense of repairing highways in the neighbourhood which are comparable with the particular highway. Billericay Rural Council v. Poplar Guardians (80 L. J. K.B. 1241; [1911] 2 K.B. 801) explained. Colchester Corporation v. Gepp (No. 1), 81 L. J. K.B. 356; [1912] 1 K.B. 477; 106 L. T. 54; 76 J. P. 97; 10 L. G. R. 109; 56 S. J. 160—C.A.

In an action by the plaintiff corporation against the visiting committee of a county lunatic asylum to recover extraordinary expense caused by extraordinary traffic,—Held, that the plaintiffs were not estopped from recovering by reason of the fact that some members on the visiting committee were the plaintiffs' own representatives, or by reason of the fact that the site on which the asylum was built had been conveyed to the committee by the plaintiffs. Held, further, that the committee were liable as the persons in consequence of whose order the work was done. Colchester Corporation v. Gepp (No. 2), 76 J. P. 337; 10 L. G. R. 930—Channell, J.

Observations by Channell, J., as to the deductions to be made in arriving at the extraordinary expenses for which the defendants were liable. Ib.

In an action by a highway authority to recover, under section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, as amended by section 12 of the Locomotives Act, 1898, extraordinary expenses incurred in repairing a highway by reason of extraordinary traffic conducted thereon by order of the defendants,—Held, that the defendants were entitled to an order for particulars of the average expense of repairing similar highways in the neighbourhood during the past five years, stating the cost of labour, the establishment charges, and the nature and amount and cost of materials; but that they were not entitled to an order for particulars of the average expense of repairing the highway in question during the past five years, as these latter particulars seemed to be particulars of matters of defence rather than of the plaintiffs' claim. Morpeth Rural Council v. Bullocks Hall Colliery Co., 82 L. Surveyor's Certificate.]—In issuing his certificate pursuant to section 23 of the Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878, as to the sum due in respect of extraordinary expenses, the surveyor need not certify the precise parts of the particular highway where the damage was done. Ledbury Rural Council v. Colwall Park Quarries Co., 108 L. T. 1002; 77 J. P. 198; 11 L. G. R. 841—Scrutton, J.

A highway having been damaged by reason of extraordinary traffic carried thereon by the defendants,—Held, that the defendants were liable for the excess of the amount actually spent in repairing the damage done to the section of the road actually used by the defendants over the amount which would have been spent in repairing the damage to the same section by the other traffic which actually used it during the period complained of, taking all the circumstances into account. Ib.

In an action to recover the expense of repairing damage done to a road by extraordinary traffic, it is not essential that the surveyor's certificate should bear to have been framed, or should in fact have been framed, with regard to the average expense of repairing highways in the neighbourhood; but it is the duty of the road authority, before bringing the action, to have regard to such average expense. Highland District Committee of Perth County Council v. Rattray, [1913] S. C. 794—Ct. of Sess.

Per Lord Salvesen: A road authority is not barred from recovering damage done to a road by extraordinary traffic merely because the road is of less than the width prescribed by statute. Ib.

Furious Driving — Person in Charge of Vehicle Asleep.]—The appellant was in sole charge of a horse and trap. While he was asleep the horse bolted and ran at a furious pace through a village. Highway Repairable Ratione Tenuræ — Power of Local Authority to take over Liability —"Take on themselves the repair."]—Under section 148 of the Public Health Act, 1875, which provides that an urban authority may, by agreement with a person liable to repair a road, "take on themselves the maintenance repair cleansing or watering" of the road—which provision is, by section 25 of the Local Government Act, 1894, made to apply to a rural district council—a rural district council may agree with a person who is liable to repair a road ratione tenuræ to "for ever take upon themselves the liability" for the maintenance and repair of the road, and the effect of the agreement will be to effectually free and for ever discharge the land which is subject to the liability, and the owner and occupier, from the liability. Dictum of Cockburn, C.J., in Nutter v. Accrington Local Board of Health (47 L. Making-up and Lighting Street—Alteration of Normal Condition of Road — Omission of Proper Precaution — Duty to Protect Public from Risk—Misfeasance or Nonfeasance.]—A highway authority, in making up a road, had, in doing so, omitted a precaution which, if taken, would have made the work done safe instead of dangerous:—Held, that they were guilty of misfeasance and not nonfeasance, because in carrying out the work, which was that of altering the normal condition of the road, the highway authority had been guilty of a breach of their duty to exercise their powers reasonably and to take care that the public was not exposed to unnecessary danger by the carrying out of the work of making up the road. McClelland v. Manchester Corporation, 81 L. J. K.B. 98; [1912] 1 K.B. 118; 105 L. T. 707; 76 J. P. 21; 9 L. G. R. 1209; 28 T. L. R. 21—Lush, J.

Portion Left Open for Use of Public to be Kept Reasonably Safe — Nonfeasance while Executing Repairs.] — A county council who were under an obligation to maintain and repair the public roads within their jurisdiction, were engaged in repairing a portion of one of such roads, and for this purpose employed a steam roller to roll down and level in the new metal. These repairing operations were confined to a portion half the width of the road, the other half being left open for public traffic. A man driving in a donkey cart along the half so left open, proceeding in the same direction as the engine, and overtaking it, was jerked from his seat by the wheel of his cart colliding with a large stone lying in the water table close to the grass margin on the side of the road opposite to the engine. The jerk threw the man into the road and under the wheels of the engine, where he received injuries from which he died. The stone (which had probably fallen off the fence bounding the road) had, to the knowledge of the council's workmen, been in that position for two or three days previous to the accident. In an action under Lord Campbell's Act, the jury found that the defendants were negligent in omitting to remove the stone, and that there was no contributory negligence on the part of the deceased:—Held (Kenny, J., dissenting), that the act of interfering with the road imposed an obligation on the county council to take care that the portion of the road left open for public use was reasonably fit and safe for such purpose, and that the council were liable in damages. Ryan v. Tipperary County Council, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 392—K.B. D.

Failure to Fill up Hole in Highway—Nonfeasance—No Obligation on Owner of Adjoining Land to Support Highway.]—In 1910 the female plaintiff brought an action against the defendants to recover damages for personal injuries sustained by her through falling into a hole in a public highway which was vested in the defendants. The highway in question, a footpath, adjoined a ballast yard, and at the time of the accident was composed of hoggin. At a point at which the footpath reached the entrance to the ballast yard it sloped to a depth of nine inches and then fell another three inches until it reached the level of the yard. The footpath had been taken over by the defendants in 1900, and in 1904 they had repaired it in such a way that any depression then existing would have been filled up. In 1907 the defendants purchased the ballast yard, and at that time there was in existence upon the footpath a hole similar in character to that which existed at the time of the accident. From the evidence given it appeared that the depression was due to the hoggin slipping down the slope into the yard, and that this process was assisted by the passing of persons down into the yard:—Held, upon the above facts, that there was no evidence which rendered the defendants liable either as the highway authority or as the owners of the ballast yard. In the former capacity they were not liable because they had been guilty of no misfeasance, and in the latter because they were under no obligation as owners of the yard to provide an artificial support to the footpath which would prevent it from slipping away. Short v. Hammersmith Corporation, 104 L. T. 70; 75 J. P. 82; 9 L. G. R. 204—D.

Premises Adjoining Highway — Authority Creating Nuisance thereon—Non-liability of Frontager.] — On premises adjoining a highway, which were the property of and occupied by the defendant, there was a coal shoot formed by an opening at the bottom of the wall of the house, abutting on the pavement, which was part of the highway. In 1901 the local highway authority, acting under the provisions of the Private Street Works Act, 1892, raised the level of the pavement and, in order to preserve access to the coal shoot, left an opening in the pavement. This condition of the pavement remained until October, 1914, when the plaintiff, in passing along the pavement, put her foot into the hole, and suffered personal injuries, for which she brought her action against the defendant:—Held, that the action failed, inasmuch as, where a nuisance is created by a highway authority on a highway under their control, the owner or occupier of the land adjoining the highway is not liable for an accident caused by the nuisance. Robbins v. Jones (33 L. J. C.P. 1; 15 C. B. (N.S.) 221) followed. Barker v. Herbert (80 L. J. K.B. 1329; [1911] 2 K.B. 633) discussed and distinguished. Horridge v. Makinson, 84 L. J. K.B. 1294; 113 L. T. 498; 79 J. P. 484; 13 L. G. R. 868; 31 T. L. R. 389—D.

Semble (per Bailhache, J.), there was no duty on the defendant to inspect the plans prepared by the local authority in 1901 in connection with the work of raising the level of the pavement. Ib.

"Grips" in Waste on Roadside Overgrown with Grass—Accident to Person Using Road—Liability of Highway Authority—Misfeasance or Nonfeasance.]—On the grass waste adjoining a highway, over which ran a light railway, a platform had been constructed for the use of passengers. Prior to 1888 gullies or "grips" were made in the waste for the surface drainage of the road by the highway authority, a county council. These grips became overgrown with grass, and the plaintiff, in passing to the platform, not seeing one of the grips, fell, and was injured:—Held, that allowing the grips to be overgrown with grass being a nonfeasance and not a misfeasance, an action would not lie against the county council. Masters v. Hampshire County Council, 84 L. J. K.B. 2194; 79 J. P. 493; 13 L. G. R. 879—D.

Widening Street — Notice to Postmaster-General to Remove Pole in Street as Widened —Negligence of Latter in Doing Work causing Damage to Third Person—Liability of Highway Authority.]—A highway authority were engaged in widening a street by setting back the kerb of the footpath. They gave notice, not purporting to be under section 15 of the Telegraph Act, 1863, to the Postmaster-General to remove a telephone pole standing in the road, and in doing so his workmen filled up the hole negligently, whereby the plaintiff's waggon was injured:—Held, that the highway authority were liable in damages on the ground that by altering the character of the highway they were making a new street, and ought, before opening it to the public for traffic, to have seen that it was reasonably safe for the purpose. Thompson v. Bradford Corporation, 84 L. Held, also, that the Postmaster-General was liable on the ground that he had undertaken to do the work, although not compelled to do so, and had done it negligently. Ib.

B. BRIDGES.

Trust for Repair of Bridge—Bridge Vested in Public Body — Extent of Obligation to Repair.]—Where a fund is devoted by a settlor to the repair of a public bridge it remains applicable for that purpose, notwithstanding that the Legislature has cast the burden of such repairs upon a public body. Att.-Gen. v. Day (69 L. J. Ch. 8; [1900] 1 Ch. 31) applied. A bridge, for the repair of which a settlor devoted certain funds, crossed the Severn. As the result of two private Acts and by agreement between the Justices and the Severn Commissioners a part of the bridge was made to open so as to allow traffic on the river to pass to and fro. By virtue of the joint operation of these statutes and the agreement, the Commissioners were bound to keep in repair the opening portion of the bridge:—Held, that, notwithstanding the obligation cast upon the Severn Commissioners, the funds left by the settlor were applicable to the repair of the opening portion of the bridge. Hall's Charity, In re, 10 L. Highway Carried Across Canal by Bridges — Liability for Maintenance and Repair of Bridges — Standard of Repair — Statutory Liability.] — Where a statute authorises the doing of a particular thing, and provides what are to be the rights and obligations flowing from such action, it is to be considered as a code complete in itself, and no common law principle can be invoked to vary or add to the obligations imposed by the statute. Sharpness New Docks and Gloucester and Birmingham Navigation Co. v. Att.-Gen., 84 L. J. K.B. 907; [1915] A.C. 654; 112 L. T. 826; 79 J. P. 305; 13 L. G. R. 563; 59 S. J. 381; 31 T. L. R. 254—H.L. (E.)

A company was empowered by statute to make a canal, and the statute enacted that the company should not make the canal across any common highway until they should have made bridges to carry the highway across the canal "of such dimensions, and in such manner, as the said Commissioners"—appointed under the statute—"shall adjudge proper; . . . and all such . . . bridges, . . . to be made shall, from time to time, be supported, maintained, and kept in sufficient repair, by the said Company." The bridges were made to the satisfaction of the commissioners as required by the statute, but the traffic on the highways had of late years become much heavier:—Held, that the canal company was only bound to keep the bridges in such a state of repair as was adjudged proper by the commissioners at the date when the bridges were first made, and not to keep them in a condition to bear heavier traffic. Hertfordshire County Council v. Great Eastern Railway (78 L. Railway Bridge—Local Act—Swing Railway Bridge over Canal—Agreement between Railway and Navigation Companies to Convert into Fixed Bridge—Bridge Constructed under Section beginning "For the protection of the Navigation Company"—Benefit of the Public—Action by Attorney-General.]—By a Light Railway Order, confirmed under the Light Railways Act, 1896, a railway company was authorised to construct a swing bridge over a canal, and it was so constructed. Section 29 of the Order began: "For the protection of the Navigation Company the following provisions shall have effect." Subsection 3 of this section provided for the construction of the bridge as a swing bridge; sub-section 4 provided that the railway company should make provision free of charge for opening the bridge for the passage of vessels by day and night under a penalty. There were also other sub-sections imposing duties on the railway company with respect to the bridge. Sub-section 16 provided that the railway company and the navigation company might agree "for any variation or alteration of works in this section provided for or of the manner in which the same shall be executed." The railway company and the navigation company proposed to convert the swing bridge into a fixed bridge. Upon action by the Attorney-General, at the relation of an owner of vessels using the canal, to restrain the proposed conversion as being an impediment to the navigation:—Held, that the heading to section 29 did not make that section a mere contract between the companies which they could vary as they pleased, as sub-sections 3 and 4 and other sub-sections were clearly for the benefit of the public; and that the Attorney-General could therefore sue on behalf of the public; that the proposed conversion was prohibited by section 29, and was not an alteration within sub-section 16, and that the injunction must be granted. Davis & Sons, Lim. v. Taff Vale Railway (64 L. Bridge over Railway — Liability of Railway Company to Maintain—Heavy Motor Traffic—Standard of Maintenance.]—A railway bridge was constructed under the powers of a statute which empowered a railway company to make a railway according to plans deposited. The bridge was properly and substantially built in accordance with the provisions of the statute. Under section 46 of the Railways Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, there was an obligation on the company to "maintain" the bridge:—Held, that the company was liable to maintain the bridge in the same condition as to strength in relation to traffic as it was at the date of its completion, but that it was not liable to improve and strengthen the bridge to make it sufficient to bear the ordinary traffic of the district which might reasonably be expected to pass over it according to the standard of the present day. Sharpness New Docks v. Att.-Gen. (84 L. C. FERRIES.

Ancient Ferry—New Ferry—Substantially New Traffic Demanding New Facilities.]—The plaintiffs, who were possessed of an ancient ferry on the Thames, known as Twickenham Ferry, sought an injunction to restrain the defendants from carrying foot passengers for hire across the Thames over, upon, within, or near that ancient ferry:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction against the defendants, inasmuch as there had sprung up a substantially new traffic different in character from that served by the old ferry, and that the defendants' ferry was started bona fide to meet a genuine demand on the part of the public in connection with that new traffic. Hammerton v. Dysart (Earl), 85 L. Disturbance — Ferry from Vill to Vill — Change of Circumstances — New Traffic.] — In an action claiming a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled to and possessed of certain ferries, and an injunction restraining the defendant from disturbing the ferries,—Held (Lush, J., dissentiente), that on the evidence the plaintiffs had an exclusive right of ferry or a vill-to-vill ferry between the vill of Great Yarmouth and the vill or vills of Gorleston and Little Yarmouth, and that they were entitled to an injunction restraining the defendant from disturbing that right by carrying passengers and their goods within the limits of the vill-to-vill ferry. Held, further, that, even assuming that the ferry established was only a point-to-point ferry (as held by Lush, J.), that (Lush, J., dissentiente) the acts of the defendant constituted a disturbance of it, as he had—it being a question of fact—not established that he was serving a different traffic from that for the accommodation of which the right of ferry was granted, but only an increase and development of that traffic under altered circumstances. Newton v. Cubitt, 31 L. Statutory Powers — Harbour and Ferry Trustees—Ultra Vires—Interdict—Ratepayers of Harbour—Title to Sue.]—By the Dundee Harbour and Tay Ferries Consolidation Act, 1911, the appellants were constituted a body of trustees, to be elected in part by the shipowners and harbour ratepayers of Dundee, and the Act vested in them the harbour of Dundee, and the exclusive right of working and using ferries within limits defined by the Act. They made a practice of letting out steam vessels which were not actually required for the purposes of the ferries, but were kept in reserve in case of an accident, for excursions on the river Tay beyond the limits of the harbours and ferries, as defined by the statute. The profits of such excursion traffic were brought into their general account:—Held, that the appellants could be restrained by interdict from so doing, such excursion traffic not being within their statutory powers, or reasonably incidental to the purposes thereof, and that the respondents, who were shipowners and harbour ratepayers in Dundee, had a good title to maintain proceedings in respect of such ultra vires actings. Dundee Harbour Trustees v. Nicol, 84 L. WILL.

I. TESTAMENTARY CAPACITY.

See also Vol. XV. 216, 1939.

Capacity—No Verbal or Written Instructions — Assent to Questions by Nods and Pressure of Hands—Costs.]—A testatrix, who was incapable of speaking or writing owing to an apoplectic stroke, only assented by nods of her head and several pressures of her hand in answer to questions put to her by the person drawing her will. She made a mark with a pen in lieu of a signature :—Held, that if the jury believed the document was in accordance with the wishes of the testatrix they could find in favour of it. Further held, while the opposing parties were entitled to have the will proved in solemn form, nevertheless they were not justified in fully contesting and must bear their own costs of the action. Holtam, In the estate of, 108 L. T. 732—Bargrave Deane, J.

Lunatic so Found—Lucid Intervals—Power to make a Will.]—The deceased was found a lunatic by inquisition in 1869. She suffered from delusions under which she became violent and even dangerous. Her disorder was an obsessional insanity, but her obsessions were recognised by herself as morbid, and did not prevent her from taking an intelligent interest in general topics. She kept up a correspondence with her relatives and friends, and in other respects was a shrewd, clever woman, and her memory was excellent. In 1905 a will was drawn up on the instructions of the deceased, and executed by her and attested by three doctors who were prepared to certify that she was perfectly intelligent and capable at the time. The Court granted probate of the will. Walker, In the estate of; Watson v. Treasury Solicitor, 28 T. L. R. 466—Bargrave Deane, J.

Undue Influence.]—A strong prima facie case in favour of a will is not displaced by mere proof of serious illness or antecedent intemperance, or by evidence that there were motive and opportunity for the defendants to exercise undue influence and that some of them benefited by the will to the exclusion of other relatives of equal or nearer degree. There must be clear evidence that the undue influence was in fact exercised, or that the testator's illness so affected his mental faculties as to make them unequal to the task of disposing of his property. Bur Singh v. Uttam Singh, L. R. 38 Ind. App. 13—P.C.

—— Evidence of Statement by Deceased Person who was Alleged to have Exercised Undue Influence on Testator—Admissibility.]—In a probate suit the defendant alleged that the will propounded by the executors had been obtained by the undue influence of one C., who died a few days before the execution of the will. C.'s estate was not represented in the suit :—Held, that evidence of a statement by C., not in the presence of the testator, was admissible so far as it went to the plea of undue influence. Radford v. Risdon, 56 S. J. 416; 28 T. L. R. 342—Evans, P.

II. TESTAMENTARY INSTRUMENTS, WHAT ENTITLED TO PROBATE, &c.

A. By Soldiers and Sailors.

See also Vol. XV. 260, 1944.

Will of Soldier in "actual military service" —Time of Determination of Service—Gift to Attesting Witness — Validity.]—As "actual military service" within the meaning of section 11 of the Wills Act, 1837, commences at the time of mobilisation, so that service does not cease until the full conclusion of the operations. Where, therefore, an officer in the Indian Army, who had taken part in military operations, made a will while remaining in the district with a force as escort to the party engaged in the delimitation of the frontier, —Held, that he was "in actual military service" within the meaning of section 11, although the operations were regarded by the India Office for the purpose of the grant of the war medal as having terminated two months previously. Section 15 of the Wills Act, 1837, applies only to wills made under the provisions of the Act itself, and does not extend to the wills of soldiers and sailors, which, by virtue of section 11, require no attestation. If, therefore, a soldier's or sailor's will is in fact attested, a gift of personal estate to an attesting witness is valid. Emanuel v. Constable (5 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 191; 3 Russ. 436) applied. Limond, In re; Limond v. Cunliffe, 84 L. J. Ch. 833; [1915] 2 Ch. 240; 59 S. J. 613—Sargant, J.

—— Holograph Document—Whether a Final Testamentary Disposition.]—Where the executors of an officer, who had died from wounds received while in command of an anti-aircraft section, propounded a will and codicil together with a holograph document, which was found in the testator's writing-block after his death, and which, it was submitted, was a "soldier's will," the Court pronounced for the will and codicil and against the holograph document, on the ground that the latter consisted of two alternative drafts and was not intended to be a final testamentary disposition. Broughton- Knight v. Wilson, 32 T. L. R. 146—Bargrave Deane, J.

"Mariner or seaman being at sea"—Female Typist Employed on Liner—Document Written on Shore in Contemplation of Sailing.]—The deceased, who had been for several years in the employment of a steamship company as a typist, was in the habit of travelling as a typist on the vessels of the company (large ocean liners) sailing between Liverpool and New York. She spent the periods between voyages working in the company's offices in Liverpool. Her testamentary dispositions were contained in three letters. None of these documents was signed or attested as required by the Wills Act, but all, though written from the deceased's lodgings in Liverpool, were written in contemplation of sailing. The deceased was afterwards lost in the sinking of one of the ships of the company:—Held, that every person employed in any branch of the Royal Navy or merchant service, from the highest to the lowest, is included when at sea, in the exceptions contained in section 11 of the Wills Act; that consequently the deceased came within the meaning of the term "mariner or seaman"; and that this term is not confined to the male sex. Held also, that the deceased was "at sea" within the meaning of the section at the time of making her will. Hale, In the goods of, [1915] 2 Ir. Codicil Referring to Earlier Instead of Later Will—Revival.]—A testator made a will, and afterwards made another which contained the usual clause revoking all prior wills or testamentary dispositions. C. Joint and Mutual Wills.

See also Vol. XV. 296, 1948.

"Mutual wills" — Revocability — Joint Tenancy — Severance — Last Will — Remedies for Breach of Agreement not to Revoke Will.]—An agreement between joint tenants to make wills and the execution of wills by such joint tenants, bequeathing property the subject of the joint tenancy on identical terms subject to the life interest of the survivor, sever the joint tenancy and create a tenancy in common. Wilford's Estate, In re; Taylor v. Taylor (48 L. J. Ch. 243; 11 Ch. D. 267) followed. Walker v. Gaskill, 83 L. J. P. 152; [1914] P. 192; 111 L. T. 941; 59 S. J. 45; 30 T. L. R. 637—Evans, P.

Wills of this description sometimes called "mutual wills," or more accurately joint wills, may form the subject of an agreement between testators that they should be irrevocable, but are not recognised as such by the Court of Probate, the function of which is to decide what is the last will of a testator, and there is no rule of law that any will is irrevocable. Such a rule would contravene the essential principle that a will is revocable either by operation of law, as on the marriage of the testator, or by his act. The liberty of making testaments cannot be renounced by any agreement. Although an agreement not to revoke a will may give rise to a claim for damages as on contract, or may be enforced by a declaration of trust, the Probate Division is not the proper forum in which to seek relief for its breach. Hobson v. Blackburn (1 Addams. Ecc. 274) followed. Raine, In the goods of (1 Sw. & Tr. 144), commented on. Ib.

No Attestation Clause—Absence of Evidence—Surrounding Circumstances—Presumption of Execution Defeated.]—In the absence of an attestation clause, and of conclusive evidence as to execution of a testamentary paper, the Court is entitled to have regard to the surrounding circumstances in connection with or dehors the document, the doctrine "omnia presumuntur rite esse acta" notwithstanding. Peverett, In the goods of (71 L. Affidavit.]—An affidavit prepared without any reference to the person who is to swear it loses much of the weight and importance it would otherwise have. Where the surviving witness to a will had sixteen years before sworn an affidavit of due execution of the will, prepared under such circumstances, the Court nevertheless condemned the will upon his evidence that the will had not been in fact duly executed, and that he had sworn the affidavit on the former occasion without sufficiently adverting to its contents. Goodisson v. Goodisson, [1913] 1 Ir. IV. REVOCATION.

See also Vol. XV. 366, 1961.

Subsequent Will — Invalid Disposition — Inconsistency.]—An alternative inconsistent disposition which is not valid or effectual in itself does not revoke an earlier disposition of the same property. In 1889 a testator made a will disposing of his property and giving his widow authority in a certain event to adopt a son. In 1890 he made a second will, which made an invalid disposition of his property and did not expressly revoke the previous will and did not refer to the clause giving his widow a contingent power of adoption. Shortly afterwards he died:—Held, that the second will did not impliedly revoke either the disposition in the first will or the power of adoption conferred by it. Venkatanarayana Pillay v. Subammal, 32 T. L. R. 118—P.C.

Revocation on False Assumption of Fact.]—The revocation of a bequest grounded on an assumption of fact which is false, takes effect, unless as a matter of construction the truth of the fact is the condition of the revocation. Faris, In re; Goddard v. Overend, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 469—M.R.

Bequest—Codicil.]—By her will made in 1875 the testatrix bequeathed her residuary estate upon trust for her sister for life and after the death of her sister upon trust for the defendant society absolutely. In 1901 the testatrix made a codicil in the following terms: "This is a codicil to my last will and testament. I bequeath to my executors as souvenirs my two rings. . . . And I hereby appoint as my residuary legatee" the plaintiff, "bequeathing to her all that is not specified in my will:—Held, that the gift to the defendant society was revoked by the codicil. Pereira, In re; Worsley v. Society for Propagation of the Gospel, 56 S. J. 614; 28 T. L. R. 479—Joyce, J.

Gift of Residue in Will—Gift in Codicil of Residue not Bequeathed by Will—Inconsistent Gifts.]—A testator by his will gave the residue of his estate to certain charities. By a codicil he made the following bequest: "The residue of my estate not bequeathed by the above will I give and bequeath to M. L. absolutely":—Held, that the codicil did not revoke the gift of the residue given by the will, but only gave to M. L. such portion (if any) of the residue as might ultimately turn out not to have been effectually disposed of by the will. Stoodley, In re; Hooson v. Stoodley, 84 L. J. Executor also Next-of-Kin — Action by Executor to Revoke Probate—Knowledge of Executor at Time of Probate—Estoppel—Laches.]—An executor who is also next-of-kin of the testator is not, after taking probate of his will, under the same disability with regard to contesting its validity as a bare executor, and the fact of his having taken probate does not operate as an estoppel. Williams v. Evans, 80 L. J. P. 115; [1911] P. 175; 105 L. T. 79; 27 T. L. R. 506—Horridge, J.

Laches is a question of fact, and a reasonable delay on the part of an executor, who is also next-of-kin, in commencing proceedings to revoke the probate, especially if no assets have been distributed and his action has not led other persons to alter their position, does not necessarily constitute such negligence on his part as will justify a finding of laches against him or render it inequitable that he should be allowed to contest the will, although he may have known of the grounds for opposition at the time of taking probate. Ib.

Grant of Administration notwithstanding Alleged Will.]—The Court has power to condemn a will upon motion. But where a party interested failed to appear on such motion, though served with a citation and personally served with notice of the motion, and not being professionally advised, appeared to be ignorant of her rights, the Court granted administration notwithstanding the alleged will. Brennan v. Dillon (Ir. Undertaking by Grantee to Return Letters of Administration to Registry—Insertion of Undertaking in Letters.]—In order to provide as far as possible against the loss or destruction of letters of administration, all letters of administration are in future to contain an undertaking by the grantee to bring them into the Registry when required. Heathcote, In the goods of, 82 L. Grant in Official Capacity—Successor in Office.]—A grant of administration is personal to the grantee, even if taken in an official capacity, and does not pass to his successor in office. Ib.

Sale of Real Estate by Administratrix—Will Appointing Executors Subsequently Discovered—Revocation of Grant—Title of Bona Fide Purchaser from Administratrix.]—The person clothed by the Court of Probate with the character of administrator of a deceased person's estate is the legal personal representative of the deceased, unless and until the grant of administration is revoked or determined, with power to dispose of the deceased's assets including the real estate, which is vested in him by virtue of section 1 of the Land Transfer Act, 1897. Hewson v. Shelley, 83 L. Letters of administration were taken out to a deceased person's estate in the belief that no will existed, and the administratrix sold realty belonging to the estate. Subsequently a will was found appointing executors, and it was admitted to probate and the letters of administration revoked:—Held, that the purchaser had a valid title to the realty as against the executors. Per Cozens-Hardy, M.R., and Buckley, L.J.: An order granting administration is a judicial act, and, even if it could be held void on the ground of want of jurisdiction, the title of a purchaser from the administrator would be protected under section 70 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. Ib.

Affidavit — Uncertain Date — Motion Unnecessary.]—No application on motion to presume death is necessary where the fact of death is clear and the only doubt is as to the precise date. The proper grant will go in common form on an affidavit swearing that the deceased died on the earliest or the latest possible date or on some day between the two. Long Sutton, In the goods of, 81 L. Discretion to Pass over Legally Entitled Grantee — Special Circumstances — Grant to Estate of Wife—Husband Convicted of Murder of Wife.]—The conviction of a husband for the wilful murder of his wife was held a special circumstance within the meaning of section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, justifying the exercise of the discretion of the Court to pass over his personal representative in giving to the next-of-kin of the intestate wife a grant to her estate. The doctrine that no person can enforce a right resulting from his own crime applies. Crippen, In the goods of, 80 L. J. P. 47; [1911] P. 108; 104 L. T. 224; 55 S. J. 273; 27 T. L. Lost Will—Grant upon Motion.]—Where the assets were small, and all parties interested consented, the Court granted administration with the will annexed, in respect of a lost will, upon motion. M'Guirk, In the goods of, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 426—Madden, J.

Grant to "Stranger"—"Special circumstances."]—With the consent of all parties interested in the estate, the Court made a grant under the Court of Probate Act, 1857, s. 73, of letters of administration, with the last will annexed, which appointed no executors, to two persons, otherwise strangers, named as executors in an earlier will of the deceased, which the Court found to have been revoked by the last will, and against which it pronounced. Watkin, In the goods of; Whitlark v. White, 84 L. Will Appointing Executors — Subsequent Will — Revocation of Dispositions in First

Will—No Executors in Second Will—Grant to Executors of First Will — Special Circumstances.]—A testatrix in 1900 made a will in which she appointed two executors. In 1911 she made another will which revoked the dispositions of property in the first will. The second will contained no appointment of executors. The testatrix left a son and daughter and her second husband surviving her. The executors of the first will were willing that letters of administration of the second will should be granted to them. The Court declined to admit both wills to probate, but held that within section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, there were special circumstances making it convenient to grant letters of administration with the second will annexed to the executors of the first will, and made an order accordingly. Watkin, In re; Whitlark v. White, 31 T. L. R. 100—Evans, P.

Executors and Legatees Alien Enemies—General Grant to Attorney of Executors—Direction not to Distribute Estate without Leave.]—Where the executors and residuary legatees named in the will of a naturalised British subject were alien enemies, a general grant of administration, with the will annexed, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, was made to the attorney appointed by the executors before the outbreak of war, with directions not to distribute the estate without the leave of a registrar. Koenigs, In the Estate of, 59 S. No Known Next-of-Kin—Small Estate—Citation Dispensed with.]—Where the estate of an intestate was small and next-of-kin (if any) had been advertised and enquired for without result, and the deceased had himself stated that he had no relations, a grant was made to a creditor without citing the next-of-kin (if any) under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857. Heerman, In the goods of, 80 L. J. P. 7; [1910] P. 357; 103 L. T. 816; 55 S. J. 30; 27 T. L. R. 51—Bargrave Deane, J.

Small Estate — Notice — Citation.]—On the application of a creditor for administration of a small estate, the Court made the grant under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, on proof of notice of the application to the widow, without requiring her to be cited. Bishop, In the goods of, 108 L. T. 928; 57 S. J. 611—Evans, P.

Renunciation of Probate by Executor—Alternative Capacity of Executor as Creditor—Grant de Bonis non.]—Rule 50 of the Non-contentious Probate Rules of 1862 is discretionary, and a grant may be made in another capacity to a person who has renounced. Toscani, In the goods of, 81 L. J. P. 15; [1912] P. 1; 105 L. T. 911; 56 S. J. 93; 28 T. L. R. 84—Bargrave Deane, J.

A was a creditor of the deceased. He was also sole executor of his will. A, as executor, renounced probate, and a grant of administration was made to B, a residuary legatee, with the will annexed. On the death of B leaving assets unadministered, A was permitted to take a grant with the will annexed de bonis non in his alternative capacity as creditor. Ib.

7. Public Trustee.

The Court has power to make a grant of administration to the Public Trustee, passing over the heir-at-law, widow, and next-of-kin of deceased. Woolley, In the goods of, 55 S. J. 220—Evans, P.

Where Alien Enemy Next-of-Kin.]—In the case of a deceased intestate, whose next-of-kin were alien enemies, it was held that the administrator proper to be appointed under the special circumstances of the case was the Public Trustee as custodian under the Trading with the Enemy (Amendment) Act, 1914, and not a person designated as executor by the deceased in an informal testamentary paper. Schiff, In the goods of, 84 L. J. P. 79; [1915] P. 86; 113 L. T. 189; 59 S. J. 303—Bargrave Deane, J.

Alien Enemy's Estate—Domicil Abroad.]—Under special circumstances the Court permitted a limited grant of administration to the estate of alien enemies domiciled abroad to pass, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, subject to restrictions as to the disposal of the residue, to a British subject domiciled in England who held a power of attorney from the next-of-kin. Grundt, In the estate of; Oetl, In the estate of, 84 L. J. P. 175; [1915] P. 126; 113 L. T. 189; 59 S. J. 510; 31 T. L. R. 437—Evans, P.

The Court nevertheless expressed the opinion that, as a general rule, it was in the public interest advisable that in such cases the grant should go to the Public Trustee in his capacity of custodian under the Trading with the Enemy Amendment Act, 1914. Ib.

8. Official Receiver and Trustee in Bankruptcy.

Bankruptcy of Person Entitled to Administer—Official Receiver—Citation—Sureties.]—The right to a grant of administration of an undischarged bankrupt vests under the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, in his trustee in bankruptcy without citing the bankrupt, and, if the official receiver is the trustee in bankruptcy, without sureties. The grant will be made under the Court of Probate Act, 1857, s. 73. Bowron, In the goods of, 84 L. J. P. 92; 112 L. T. 478; [1915] H. B. R. 78; 59 S. J. 108—Bargrave Deane, J.

Wife's Estate—Bankruptcy of Husband—Grant to Trustee in Bankruptcy.]—Where the husband of a deceased intestate was an undischarged bankrupt, a grant of administration to the wife's estate was, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, made to the husband's trustee in bankruptcy, without citation of or notice to the husband. Bowron, In the Estate of, 59 S. Grant to Minister Plenipotentiary of Foreign Sovereign—Bond—Sureties.]—On an application for a grant of administration to the estate of a foreign Sovereign to be made to the minister plenipotentiary of the foreign State as attorney for the deceased Sovereign's successor, the Court made a grant to such attorney giving a bond, without sureties. Siam (King) Estate, In re, 107 L. Where A, the executor named in the will of the testator, renounced probate, and administration with the will annexed was granted to the testator's residuary legatee, who died intestate with no known relative, leaving the estate unadministered, the Court made a grant of administration de bonis non to A as a creditor, though he had renounced probate. Toscani, In the goods of, 81 L. J. P. 15; [1912] P. 1; 105 L. T. 911; 56 S. J. 93; 28 T. L. R. 84—Bargrave Deane, J.

Grant during Incapacity of Surviving Executor.]—A testator appointed an executor and an executrix. The executor proved the will, liberty to prove being reserved to the executrix. The executor died leaving an executor. The executrix survived and became incapable of acting, and a grant de bonis non with the will annexed of the testator was made to a residuary legatee for the use and benefit of the executrix during her incapacity. The executrix died intestate, leaving assets of the testator unadministered. The residuary legatee applied for a grant de bonis non with the will annexed of the testator:—Held, that the grant for the use and benefit of the surviving executrix during her incapacity was equivalent to a grant of probate to her; that consequently the executor of the deceased executor did not represent the original testator; and that as the executrix had died intestate a grant de bonis non should be made to the residuary legatee. Frengley, In the goods of, [1915] 2 Ir. R. 1—Madden, J.

Alien Enemy's Estate—Domicil Abroad—Powers of Public Trustees.]—In the case of two alien enemies, domiciled in Hungary, who died intestate in this country, leaving personal estate in this country, their next-of-kin being resident in an enemy country, the Public Trustee expressed the view that he had no power to take a grant of administration of the estate of a person having a foreign domicil, and the Court, in the special circumstances of the case, made a limited grant, under section 73 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, of letters of administration to an acquaintance of the deceased persons, who was a British subject resident and domiciled in England and was the holder of a power of attorney from their next-of-kin, the grant being made on the terms that the grantee should deliver the proceeds to the Public Trustee as the custodian of enemy property, but the Court intimated that in most cases of the administration of the estates of alien enemies the Public Trustee should take the grant, it being within his power to accept a grant in cases where persons died domiciled abroad. Grundt, In the estate of; Oetl, In the estate of, 84 L. J. P. 175; [1915] P. 126; 113 L. T. 189; 59 S. J. 510; 31 T. L. R. 437—Evans, P.

Limited Grant to Party Entitled to General Grant—Cæterorum Grant—Foreign Domicil—Concurrent Wills—Separate Executors.]—The Court has a discretion under rule 30 of the Non-contentious Rule of 1862 to depart from the practice of refusing a limited grant to a person entitled to a general grant. Brentano, In the goods of, 80 L. J. P. 80; [1911] P. 172; 105 L. T. 78; 27 T. L. R. 395—Evans, P.

A domiciled foreigner left two wills, one executed according to the form of his domicil, dealing with foreign assets and English personalty and appointing a foreign executor, and the other executed according to English form, dealing with English realty only and appointing English executors. The Court made separate grants—(a) to the English executors limited to the real estate, and (b) a cæterorum grant to the foreign executor save and except the realty. Ib.

Public Trustee.]—By section 11, sub-section 4 of the Public Trustee Act, 1906, the Public Trustee is not required to give a bond of security. Woolley, In the goods of, 55 S. J. 220—Evans, P.

Assignment by Registrar—Jurisdiction.]—A Registrar in the Probate Division has jurisdiction, without the intervention of the Judge, to assign an administration bond under the provisions of section 83 of the Court of Probate Act, 1857, and it is the settled practice for assignments of this nature so to be made by the Registrar. Cope v. Bennett, 81 L. J. Ch. 182; [1911] 2 Ch. 488; 105 L. T. 541; 55 S. J. 521, 725—Swinfen Eady, J.

Assignee—Suing in Representative Capacity.]—The assignee of an administration bond who sues upon the bond, though bound to recover on behalf of himself, and all other persons interested in the estate, is not bound to state in the formal parts of his writ or pleadings that he is suing in a representative capacity. Ib.

Absence of Administrator — Goods Unadministered—Revocation of Grant—De Bonis non Grant — Small Estate.] — A grant of administration which cannot be brought in for cancellation, the administrator having taken it with him out of the jurisdiction, may nevertheless be revoked, and a new grant de bonis non may be issued without citing or giving notice to the administrator, where the goods unadministered are of small value, on the ground of avoidance of delay and expense. Thomas, In the goods of, 81 L. Omission of Libellous and Malicious Statements—Absence of Dispositive Effect of Words Used.]—The Court will direct to be omitted from the probate and any copies thereof issuing from the registry, though not to be deleted from the will itself, passages and expressions of a malicious or libellous character which have no dispositive effect. *A. Discovery—Privilege—Briefs to Counsel in Previous Litigation against Testator—Solicitor of Testator in Previous Litigation a Party to Probate Action.]—Although the general principle obtaining in testamentary litigation is that all material acts of the testator should be disclosed, this does not extend to instructions to counsel on behalf of the testator in previous litigation, to which he was a party, where the instructions in question were not prepared at the instance of the testator himself, but by his solicitor. Cooper, In re; Curtis v. Beaney, 80 L. J. P. 87; [1911] P. 181; 105 L. T. 303; 27 T. L. R. 462—Bargrave Deane, J.

One of the plaintiffs, an executor in an action to propound a will, in which the capacity of the testatrix was in issue, had, as her solicitor in a former action against her, prepared briefs to counsel on her behalf to conduct her defence :—Held, notwithstanding a suggestion that the previous defence raised her incapacity, that the briefs in question were privileged from disclosure. Ib.

Costs — Will and Two Codicils Proved in Common Form by Executors—Third Codicil—Action by Beneficiary against Executors — Defence of Undue Execution—Codicil Admitted to Probate—Executors Condemned in Costs.]—In a probate action, where the plaintiff and a defendant, daughters of the testator, were practically the only persons interested in the residue under a will and two codicils thereto, the plaintiff propounded a third codicil, two years after probate of the will and earlier codicils had been granted. The executors of the will desired the plaintiff to propound the third codicil before they would consent to prove it, and in their defence pleaded that the codicil was not duly executed and that the testator did not know and approve of the contents thereof. The codicil was admitted to probate and the executors were condemned in costs. Speke, In re; Speke v. Deakin, 109 L. T. 719; 58 S. J. 99; 30 T. L. R. 73—Bargrave Deane, J.

Conduct of Parties Responsible for Will and Benefiting by it the Cause of Litigation—Power of Court to Order Costs of all Parties to be Paid out of Legacies of Responsible Parties, though Successful.]—It is a well-established principle that the vigilant suspicion of the Court is excited by the preparation and obtaining of a will by a party who is benefited by it. If on enquiry that suspicion is removed, those instrumental in bringing about that enquiry are not wholly in the wrong, although they fail in the litigation. In such a case the Court has power even after a trial by jury to order that the costs shall not follow the event, but that those of all parties shall in compliance with Order LXV. rule 14 (d) be defrayed out of that portion of the estate which by the will is bequeathed to the persons whose conduct has been the cause of the enquiry, although successful in the litigation. Child v. Osment, 83 L. Instructions.]—A testatrix bequeathed a part of her residuary estate to "The Royal Hospital for Women." There was no hospital of which that was the correct designation, but there were several institutions whose title was more or less similar thereto :—Held, that evidence of a conversation between the testatrix and her solicitor when he received instructions to prepare her will, in which the testatrix expressed an intention to benefit a particular institution, was not admissible to ascertain which hospital was entitled to the bequest. Bateman, In re; Wallace v. Mawdsley, 27 T. Gift to Husband, Wife, and "their daughter"—Latent Ambiguity.]—A testatrix gave her residuary estate to be divided between her brother W., "his wife and their daughter." The brother and his wife had in fact several daughters, but it appeared that the testatrix had been on terms of special intimacy with one of them, P., and had by a previous will given to her one-half of the residuary estate :—Held, that evidence both of the special intimacy existing between the testatrix and P., and of the terms of the previous will, was admissible to shew which daughter of W. was intended, and that on the evidence the expression "their daughter" referred to P. :—Held, also, that W. and his wife took each a third share of the residue, and not a moiety between them. Jeffery, In re; Nussey v. Jeffery, 83 L. J. Ch. 251; [1914] 1 Ch. 375; 110 L. T. 11; 58 S. J. 120—Warrington, J.

Misdescription of Devisee — Ambiguity — Person Dead at Date of Will.]—A testator devised real property to John William H., the son of Israel H. The said Israel H. had a son named John William H., who died in 1874 when ten days old, and seventeen years before the date of the will; he had another son, the defendant John Robert H., who was born in 1878:—Held, that extrinsic evidence was admissible to shew whom the testator intended to benefit, and that John Robert H. took under the devise. Ely, In re; Tottenham v. Ely (65 L. Legatee Accurately Named — Ambiguity — Rival Claimant.]—Where a legatee is accurately named in a will there is no rigid rule forbidding any further enquiry as to who is the person to take the benefit, but there is a strong presumption against any person claiming whose name is not that mentioned in the will, which can only be overcome by positive evidence of a cogent nature, clearly proving that the testator did not mean the person so named in the will to take the benefit. National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children v. Scottish National Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Children, 84 L. A domiciled Scotsman by his will, made in Scots form, left legacies to various Scottish charities, and also a legacy to "The National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children." There was a society of which that was the correct title, which had its headquarters in London, and confined its operations to England; there was also a "Scottish National Society for" the same object, which worked in Scotland, and that society claimed the legacy:—Held, that the English society was entitled to the legacy. Ib.

"Or" read as "and" — Gift Over — Repugnancy.]—Where a will contained an absolute devise with a gift over in case the devisee should die "intestate or childless or under the age of twenty-one (but not otherwise)" and the devisee survived the testator and attained twenty-one, but died a spinster intestate,—Held, that either the first or the second "or" must be read as "and," and that the gift over failed as being either void for repugnancy, or because the events referred to had not happened. Crutchley, In re; Kidson v. Marsden, 81 L. Gift of Equitable Fee-simple—Gift Over on Death "Unmarried and without lawful issue" —Construing "Unmarried" "Widower"—Extent of Gift Over—No Words of Limitation.]—A testator who died in 1828 devised freeholds to a trustee and his heirs upon trust for J. and his heirs, but in case of J.'s death unmarried and without lawful issue then upon trust for S. for her life, and after her death upon trust for all and every her children living at her death who should attain twenty-one or marry, with benefit of survivorship. J. married, but his wife predeceased him, and he died without having ever had any issue:—Held, that "unmarried" must be construed in its secondary sense of "widower," since otherwise the words "and without lawful issue" were superfluous; and that the gift over on J.'s death therefore took effect. Sanders' Trusts, In re (L. Will before Wills Act, 1837—Equitable Fee-simple Defeasible to Extent of Life Estates only.]—But held also that, the testator having died before the passing of the Wills Act, 1837, the children of S. prima facie took equitable life estates only; that since an equitable fee-simple exhausting the legal fee-simple given to the trustee had already been given by the will to J., there was no reason for cutting down that equitable estate in fee-simple to a greater extent than that of the giving of equitable life estates to the children of S.; and that on the death of the survivor of these children the property reverted to the estate of J., and passed under his will. Gatenby v. Morgan (45 L. Gift Over on Death without Heirs to Person Capable of being Heir—"Heirs" not Read as "heirs of the body."]—A testator left a chattel farm to his son John, and directed that if he should die "without lawful aires" the farm should go to the testator's son Thomas or his "airs," he paying certain sums to John's widow and his brothers and sisters. John died without issue:—Held, that the context shewed that the words "without lawful aires" meant without next-of-kin, being children or descendants, and that the gift over to Thomas took effect. Kirkpatrick v. King (32 Ir. "Become entitled as aforesaid."] — A testatrix by her will dated November 19, 1850, devised real estate to trustees upon trust to receive the rents and profits and pay them to her daughter for life and after her death to pay the rents and profits to the children of the daughter until the youngest attained twenty-one, and then to convey to the children as tenants in common. But in the event (which happened) of there being no child of the daughter who attained twenty-one, the testatrix directed that the trustees or trustee of the will for the time being should convey and assure the same to her three brothers A, B, and C as tenants in common. "But in case all or either of my said brothers shall depart this life before they or he become entitled as aforesaid, the trustees or trustee for the time being of my will shall convey and assure the share or shares of them or him so dying, to my nieces as tenants in common." The daughter died in 1910, A died in 1861, B in 1885, and C in 1887. A had two daughters, and B three. For the representatives of A, B, and C it was contended that they "became entitled" to a vested interest at the death of the testatrix:—Held, that the context shewed that "entitled as aforesaid" meant entitled to have the property conveyed to them, and that in the events that happened the property passed to the nieces and not to the representatives of the brothers. Whiter, In re; Windsor v. Jones, 105 L. T. 749; 56 S. J. 109—Swinfen Eady, J.

Apparent Ambiguity—Choice of Interpretation — Ejusdem Generis Rule — Sufficiency of Category.]—By his will the testator bequeathed "all my pictures (except portraits)" to the trustees of the National Gallery, "but the portraits of myself and all my family and other portraits . . . I give and bequeath . . . to my nephew":—Held, that "except portraits" meant the portraits thereafter excepted—namely, those given to his nephew and described as "the portrait of myself and all my family and other portraits," and that the words "other portraits" meant portraits of the same category as family portraits. Layard, In re; Layard v. Bessborough, 32 T. 2. Gifts to what Persons.

See also Vol. XV. 743, 2020.

Gift to Wife "during her widowhood"—Condition—Bigamous Marriage.]—The plaintiff, whose husband disappeared in 1894 and was not heard of again till 1910, went through the ceremony of marriage with the testator in 1903. The testator believed himself to be lawfully married to the plaintiff, although he knew that there was a possible risk of her husband being alive, and they lived together as man and wife until his death in 1906. By his will the testator gave certain things to "my wife" and made other bequests to her "during her widowhood and after her decease or second marriage" to his daughters:—Held, upon the construction of the will and in the circumstances of the case, that the plaintiff, although not legally the testator's widow, was entitled to enjoy the property until she died or re-married, as if she were his widow. Hammond, In re; Burniston v. White, 80 L. Gift to Widow for Benefit of Children.]—A bequeathed his property to his wife in the following terms: "I leave and bequeath all my property, chattels, money, bank shares, and my life insurance, or whatever I am possessed of or entitled to, to my beloved wife to be disposed of as she may think best for the good of our children":—Held, that under this bequest, the wife became entitled beneficially to the whole of the property. Berryman, In re; Berryman v. Berryman, [1913] 1 Ir. b. Children.

Parricide — Father's Estate — Whether Lunatic Entitled to Share.]—A lunatic who kills his father is entitled to benefit under his father's will, if his father has left a will, or to receive his proper share under his father's intestacy if his father has died intestate. Houghton, In re; Houghton v. Houghton, 84 L. Issue of Deceased Son Living at Testator's Death—Child en Ventre sa Mère.]—A child of a testator's son en ventre sa mère, and born after his father's and the testator's death, is "living" at the time of the death of the testator so as to make section 33 of the Wills Act, 1837, apply to a devise or bequest to the testator's deceased son. Griffiths, In re; Griffiths v. Waghorne, 80 L. J. Ch. 176; [1911] 1 Ch. 246; 104 L. T. 125—Joyce, J.

"Remaining children."] — The words "remaining children," unless another meaning can be inferred from the context, must be taken to mean the other children, or "the rest" of the children not otherwise dealt with, and cannot be construed, apart from other circumstances in the will to suggest such construction, to mean the surviving children. Speak, In re; Speak v. Speak, 56 S. J. 273—Parker, J.

"Younger children"—Eldest Son—Portions—Period of Distribution—Maintenance.]—By his will a grandfather devised an estate to his son W. for life, with remainder to his first and other grandsons (the sons of W.) successively, in tail male, with remainder, if no grandson attained twenty-one, to the testator's granddaughter or granddaughters, or such of them as should attain twenty-one or marry, and if more than one in equal shares as tenants in common in tail, with cross-remainders. The testator charged the estate in favour of grandchildren in these terms: "For the younger children of my said son W. or such of them as shall attain twenty-one, or being daughters shall marry before that age, that is to say, for one younger child the sum of 3,000*l.*, for two younger children the sum of 4,000*l.*, equally between them, and for three or more younger children the sum of 5,000*l.* in equal proportions." After the death of his grandfather and father, T., the first-born grandson, became tenant in tail male in possession of the estate, and died in 1910, under age and unmarried. There survived him one brother, who thereupon became the tenant in tail male in possession, and two sisters. None of them had attained twenty-one or married. The minors were wards of Court, and there was a sum of about 2,300*l.* in Court representing accumulations of interest on the portions charge of 5,000*l.* provided by the will which had been lodged by the receiver pursuant to order out of the rents and profits of the estate accruing since T. was in possession as tenant in tail male:—Held, first, that the accumulations of interest upon the younger children's portions charge, after providing for maintenance, belonged to the administratrix of T.; secondly, that T. had not qualified to receive a younger child's portion, because he had died before the period of distribution, and had been in the character of "eldest son" in possession of the estate; and that consequently no larger sum than 4,000*l.* could ever be raisable for the purpose of the younger children's portion. The Court also declared that the sum presumptively raisable on foot of the portions charge did not bear interest during the infancy or spinsterhood of the female minors, but only such annual allowance in lieu of interest as the Lord Chancellor might deem necessary for their reasonable maintenance. Caldbeck v. Caldbeck, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 144—Barton, J.

Illegitimate Children—Erroneous Belief of Testatrix as to Status of Children.]—A testatrix by her will dated January 3, 1911, gave her residue in trust for her brother for life and after his death in trust "for all or any of the children or child" of her brother, living at the death of the survivor of herself and her brother, and the children or child then living of any deceased child of his. The testatrix died on October 16, 1911, and her brother ten days later. Both at the date of the will and of the death of the testatrix her brother had six living illegitimate children by a woman to whom he was reputed to be married and who was accepted as his wife in the society in which they moved. She died in 1900. The six children were received as legitimate. The testatrix knew all of them and was fond of some, and believed all of them to be legitimate. The testatrix's brother married a lady in 1904, by whom he had two legitimate children:—Held, that, as the case could not be brought within either of the two classes of cases in which the prima facie meaning of "children"—that is, "legitimate children"—is departed from, as laid down in Hill v. Crook (42 L. J. Ch. 702; L. R. 6 H.L. 265) by Lord Cairns, the two legitimate children only took under the gift. Pearce, In re; Alliance Assurance Co. v. Francis, 83 L. J. Ch. 266; [1914] 1 Ch. 254; 110 L. Gift to Brothers and Sisters—Substantial Gift to their Issue—One Legitimate Sister Only — One Illegitimate Sister — Rights of Issue of Illegitimate Sister.] — Where a testator made a bequest to his "brothers and sisters" with a substitutionary gift over to their issue, and he had, in fact, four brothers and two sisters, only one of whom was legitimate, and the other illegitimate,—Held, that the Court could not give adequate effect to the use of the plural term "sisters" without including the illegitimate sister as a persona designata under the will, and that her issue were accordingly entitled to share in the residuary estate. Pearce, In re; Alliance Assurance Co. v. Francis (83 L. J. Ch. 266; [1914] 1 Ch. 254), commented on and applied. Embury, In re; Bowyer v. Page, 111 L. T. 275; 58 S. J. 612—Sargant, J.

c. Issue.

See also Vol. XV. 786, 2025.

"Issue"—Prima Facie Meaning—Ambiguity—Rebuttal of Rule in Sibley v. Perry by Internal Evidence.]—The rule in Sibley v. Perry (7 Ves. 522) is only a rule which has determined a particular ambiguity in a particular way. Where there is internal evidence in the will sufficient for the Court to draw an inference that the narrow interpretation of the word "issue" by that rule to mean children only is rebuttable, such inference should be drawn and the broader and prima facie meaning of the word "issue," as including all descendants thereby restored. Embury, In re; Page v. Bowyer, 109 L. T. 511; 58 S. J. 49—Sargant, J.

Gift to Issue—Per Stirpes—Determination of Stirpes.]—A testator gave property in trust for the issue of his deceased aunts, C. E. H. and H. M. M., living at his decease, and he added, "such issue to take per stirpes and not per capita." There were thirteen separate families of the issue:—Held, that the words "per stirpes" referred to the issue and not to the two aunts, and that consequently the property was devisible into thirteen shares, and not into two shares, and that one such share was to be in trust for each family of issue. Robinson v. Shepherd (4 De G. J. & S. 129) followed. Gibson v. Fisher (37 L. J. Ch. 67; L. R. 5 Eq. 51) not followed. Dering, In re; Neall v. Beale, 105 L. T. 404—Warrington, J.

Life Interest to Daughter and Surviving Husband—Remainder to "Issue" upon Death or Re-marriage of Husband.]—By his will dated October 31, 1883, a testator appointed trustees and gave to them his property of every kind with powers of management, and provided as follows: "And as to the rest, residue, and remainder of my property I direct the income thereof to be paid to and amongst my four children (naming them) in equal shares during their natural lives, and after the decease of any one or more of them leaving a husband or wife him or her surviving, then the share of such deceased child or children to be in trust for such husband or wife him or her surviving, for the term of each of their natural lives or until they remarry, and after their respective deaths or remarriage then to the issue (if any) of such deceased child, and in case of no such issue to go to or amongst my surviving children or child, or their, his, or her issue; and I further direct that all the benefits conferred by this my will shall be had and enjoyed without power of anticipation by the persons or person for the time being otherwise entitled for their lives or life as aforesaid." The testator died on August 22, 1889. One of the testator's children was married and had children living at the date of the will. The other three children were married after the date of the will. The bulk of the property subject to the trusts consisted of chattels real, and there was also some real estate:—Held, first, that in the devise "to the issue (if any) of such deceased child" the word "issue" was a word of purchase and not of limitation, both as regards the real and personal estate of the testator; secondly, that the word "issue" included all descendants, limited in each case to such of them as were living at the time when the gift in each case took effect; and thirdly, that as the class constituting "issue" might not be ascertainable within legal limits, the gift to such issue, as well as the gift over in default of issue, was void as infringing the rule against perpetuities. Taylor's Trusts, In re; Taylor v. Blake, [1912] 1 Ir. R. 1—Wylie, J.

Issue to Take Predeceasing Parent's Share—Whether Gift to Issue Subject to Conditions Affecting Parent's Share.]—A testator directed his trustees to hold a share of the residue of his estate for his eldest son in liferent and his issue, if any, in fee, declaring that, in the event of the death of that son without issue, the capital of his share should fall and belong to the testator's two other sons and his three daughters "equally among them and the survivors or survivor of them, the issue of any of them predeceasing being entitled equally among them, if more than one, to their deceased parent's share." The liferenter died without issue, predeceased by two of his sisters, who, however, left issue, some of whom, though surviving their parent, predeceased the liferenter:—Held, that, as the issue were called in place of their deceased parents and not as original legatees, the gift to them was subject to the same conditions as the gift to their parents; and, accordingly, that no vesting had taken place in the issue who predeceased the liferenter. Martin v. Holgate (35 L. J. Ch. 789; L. R. 1 H.L. 175) distinguished. Addie's Trustees v. Jackson, [1913] S. C. 681—Ct. of Sess.

Meaning of "half-cousin."]—Under a bequest to "my cousins and half-cousins" where the testatrix left her surviving first cousins, first cousins once removed, first cousins twice removed, and second cousins,—Held, that first cousins, first cousins once removed, and second cousins were entitled. Chester, In re; Servant v. Hills, 84 L. J. Ch. 78; [1914] 2 Ch. 580—Sargant, J.

e. Nephews and Nieces.

Words of Futurity—Gift to Nephews and Nieces—Gift to Children of Nephew or Niece who should Die in the Lifetime of the Tenant for Life under the Will—Niece Dead at Date of the Will, Leaving a Child.]—The child of a niece, dead at the date of the will, of a testator was held entitled to share under a trust "for all my nephews and nieces living at the decease of the said Sarah Waterfall (the tenant for life), as tenants in common in equal shares, provided always that if any of my said nephews and nieces shall die in the lifetime of the said Sarah Waterfall, leaving a child or children who shall survive her, and being a son or sons shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters shall attain that age, or marry under that age, then and in every such case the last-mentioned child or children shall take (and, if more than one, equally between them) the share which his, her, or their parent would have taken of and in the proceeds of my said estate if such parent had survived the said Sarah Waterfall." Taylor, In re; Taylor v. White, 56 S. J. 175—Swinfen Eady, J.

Gift to Named Persons on Attaining Twenty-one—Nephews and Nieces—Some Attain Twenty-one, but Predecease Testatrix —Class—Lapse.]—A testatrix by her will gave the residue of her estate upon trust for all her nephews and nieces thereinafter named, "that is to say, W. B. and J. A., the two children of my sister, H. A., and A. P., W. B., C. L., A. D., and E. B., the five children of my brother, S. B., who being sons have attained or shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or being daughters have attained or shall attain that age or shall marry under that age, in equal shares as tenants in common." All the named nephews and nieces attained the age of twenty-one, but three predeceased the testatrix:—Held, that, the gift was not a class gift, but a gift to named persons, and the shares of those who predeceased the testatrix lapsed. Bentley, In re; Podmore v. Smith, 110 L. T. 623; 58 S. J. 362—Joyce, J.

Appointment of Named Nephews as Trustees — Named Nephews Including Nephews by Affinity—Residuary Gift to "my nephews and nieces."] — A testatrix appointed "her nephews" A, B, and C executors and trustees of her will, and devised and bequeathed the residue of her property to them upon trust to divide the same equally between "her nephews and nieces" living at the date of her death and the children then living of "her nephews and nieces" who should have predeceased her, such children to take equally between them the share only to which their parent would have been entitled. Of the three executors and trustees named A only was a nephew by consanguinity of the testatrix, B and C being nephews of a deceased husband:—Held, that only nephews and nieces by consanguinity of the testatrix and the children of such of them as had predeceased her shared in the residuary gift. Green, In re; Bath v. Cannon, 83 L. J. Ch. 248; [1914] 1 Ch. 134; 110 L. T. 58; 58 S. J. 185—Sargant, J.

See also Vol. XV. 835, 2032.

Devise of Realty—Remainder to "nearest male heir."]—A testator by his will devised real estate to H. M. for life, and after his decease "to my nearest male heir, and should there be two or more in equal degrees of consanguinity to me" then "unto the eldest of my male kindred for the term of his natural life, with remainder to the heirs of the body of my said eldest male relative." The testator died in 1897. The tenant for life died in 1910. At the time of the death of the testator, and at the time of the death of the tenant for life, a Mrs. W., a first cousin of the testator, was his heiress-at-law. At the time of the death of the testator, L. W., the son of a cousin, was his nearest male relative. He died without issue in 1901, and at the date of the death of the tenant for life the appellant, the son of a sister of L. W., was the nearest male relative of the testator:—Held, that, having regard to the whole will, "nearest male heir" was not to be given the strictly technical meaning of "heir male," that there was no intestacy, and, on the death of the tenant for life, the estate vested in the appellant, who was the only living male relative of the testator. Lightfoot v. Maybery, 83 L. "Clerk" in a Certain Specified Employment—Claim by Pursers on Ships—Whether Entitled to Participate.]—By a clause in his will a testator bequeathed legacies free from duty to such of the persons as should at his death be in his employ, or the employ of any firm or company of which he was a member or director at his death. There followed the names of certain persons. The clause then contained the following: "A year's salary to each clerk not included in the above list who shall have been ten years in the employ of Elder, Dempster, and Co., or Elder, Dempster Shipping Limited." A half-year's salary or three months' salary was given to each clerk not mentioned or referred to above who should have been five years or one year respectively in the same employ. The question was, first, whether a purser was a "clerk" within the meaning of the clause in the will; and secondly, whether pursers engaged by Elder, Dempster & Co. as managers of various steam shipping liners were pursers in their employ within the meaning of that clause:—Held, that a purser was not a "clerk" within the meaning of the clause, he being a member of the crew of the ship on which he was employed in that capacity, and it was immaterial that he had certain clerical work to discharge on board such ship. Jones, In re; Williams v. Att.-Gen., 106 L. T. 941—C.A.

Held, also, that the pursers in question were not in any case in the employ of Elder, Dempster & Co., for although that firm were not only managers of the various steam shipping lines, but also owned shares in the same, they were not "employers" of the pursers. Ib.

Bequest to Indoor and Outdoor Servants—"Amount of a year's wages"—Servants not Engaged at a Yearly Wage.]—Testator bequeathed to each of his servants (indoor and outdoor) who should have been in his service for five years previously to his death "the amount of one year's wages in addition to what may be then actually due to them for wages":—Held, that the bequest was not confined to servants engaged by the year or at a yearly wage, but extended also to servants who fulfilled the prescribed conditions, but were engaged at quarterly or weekly wages. Blackwell v. Pennant (22 L. J. Ch. 155; 9 Hare, 551) and Ravensworth (Earl), In re; Ravensworth v. Tindale (74 L. J. Ch. 353; [1905] 2 Ch. 1), distinguished. Sheffield (Earl), In re; Ryde v. Bristow, 80 L. J. Gift to "Domestic servants" — Service during Two Years—Companion—Housekeeper — Certified Male Nurse.]— A testator bequeathed to each of his domestic servants who should have been in his service for two years prior to his death one year's wages free of duty. There had been in the testator's service for two years prior to his death a companion-housekeeper and a certified male nurse. The latter did not sleep in the house, and was absent from duty for four months during the two years :—Held, that the companion-housekeeper and male nurse were domestic servants and entitled to a year's wages. Held also, that the absence of the male nurse for four months being taken with the consent of the testator did not prevent the service being continuous. Lawson, In re: Wardley v. Bringloe, 83 L. Legacy to "Man servant"—One Person Answering the Description — Intention of Testator.]—A testator, who had in his employment a valet and a chauffeur, gave a legacy to his "man servant" if he should be in his employment at the date of his death. At the date of his death the testator had only the chauffeur in his employment :—Held, that the chauffeur was entitled to the legacy. Bell, In re; Wright v. Scrivener, 58 S. Executor—Subsequent Revocation by Codicil of Appointment as Executor—Implied Revocation of Legacy.]—A testatrix by her will appointed "my friends F. and C. to be the executors of this my will, to each of whom I give the legacy, or sum, of 500*l.*" By a codicil the testatrix declared, "I hereby revoke the appointment of C. as executor, and in his stead appoint the Public Trustee as executor of my will with F." :—Held, that the legacy in the will was to C. in the character of executor, and that C. was not entitled to take. Walne v. Hill ([1883] W. N. 171) followed. Russell, In re: Public Trustee v. Campbell, 56 S. J. 651—Joyce, J.

—— Residuary Gift to Sole Executor—"At his own disposal"—Beneficial Gift.]—A testatrix by her will, after appointing a sole executor and bequeathing legacies to several persons, including the executor by name, but declaring no trusts, provided as follows : "the remainder or residue of my property (if any) shall be at the discretion of my executor and at his own disposal" :—Held, that the executor took the residue beneficially. Howell, In re: Buckingham, In re; Liggins v. Buckingham, 84 L. Legacy to Trustees and Executors—Codicil—Appointment of New Trustee in Place of Original Appointment—Will to be Construed as if Name of New Trustee Originally Inserted.]—By her will the testatrix appointed the plaintiff and B. executors and trustees, and she gave to each of her trustees a legacy of 500*l.*, and also to each of her trustees for the time being 50*l.* per annum so long as any of the trusts therein contained should continue. By a codicil the testatrix revoked the appointment of B. as executor and trustee and the legacy of 500*l.* and the annual allowance, and appointed W. to be executor and trustee, and gave him a legacy of 50*l.* for his trouble. She further declared that her will should be construed as if the name of W. had been inserted instead of the name of B. :—Held, that W. was entitled to the legacy of 50*l.* and to the annuity of 50*l.*, but not to the legacy of 500*l.* Mellor, In re; Dodgson v. Ashworth, 56 S. J. 596; 28 T. L. R. 473—Eve, J.

Devise to Parish Priest—Gift to the Office and not for Personal Benefit — Trust.]—A testator, after devising a life estate to his wife in certain freeholds, provided as follows : "At my wife's demise I desire that the two houses become the property of the parish priest of U. on condition of paying 10*l.* yearly to my brother's son P., and also 1*l.* yearly for masses for the repose of the souls of the deceased members of my family." The devise of the freeholds to the parish priest was void under section 16 of the Charitable Donations and Bequests Act as the testator died within three months of the date of his will :—Held, that the parish of U. was a trustee for the testator's nephew P. in respect of the annuity of 10*l.*, and for the heir-at-law of the testator as to the rest of the property. Corcoran v. O'Kane, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 1—Barton, J.

Bequest to Home—Absorption of Home in a Larger Association.]—A testatrix by her will left a sum of money to a home for women and children. In the year in which the will was made the home referred to was absorbed into a larger institution, carrying on the same work :—Held, that the larger association took the bequest. Wedgwood, In re; Sweet v. Cotton, 83 L. J. Ch. 731; [1914] 2 Ch. 245; 111 L. T. 436; 58 S. J. 595; 30 T. L. R. 527—Joyce, J.

"Legatees."]—Bequest of the residue "to the several legatees other than charitable legatees hereinbefore named" :—Held, that "legatees" meant persons to whom a bequest of personalty was made, and did not include a devisee of a freehold farm. Held, also, that a legatee to whom a non-charitable legacy was given by a subsequent clause in the will was entitled to a share in the residue. Ellard v. Phelan, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 76—Ross, J.

"Relatives" of Deceased Person.] — A widow by her will left her residuary estate in trust for her son J. for life, and after his decease in trust for his children, and in case of no such issue (which event happened) in trust to pay the income to her daughters M. and B. and her grandson W. for their lives, in such shares as J. should appoint, and on their respective deaths the principal to be paid and transferred to such relatives of J.'s father, S. (the testatrix's late husband) as J.

should by will appoint. J. died without making any appointment, and was survived by W., who was the last surviving tenant for life :—Held, that on the death of W. the persons entitled to the testatrix's residuary estate were the statutory next-of-kin of S. living at the death of J. Swan, In re; Reid v. Swan, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 405—C.A.

Gift to Successors to Title.]—A testator having a title in the peerage of Scotland and in the peerage of the United Kingdom, left his property in England and Scotland without reservation or hindrance to his successors in the titles. One individual, both at the time of the will and of the death of the testator, was in fact next entitled to both titles :—Held, that the intention of the testator was to make an absolute gift of the property in each country to the person who should succeed him in either title. Catheart (Earl), In re, 56 S. J. 271—Warrington, J.

Contingent Gift of Chattels — Disentailing Assurance — Sale of Valuable Picture — Devolution.]—A testator made a specific bequest of chattels to his wife for life, and after her death "to the person who under this my will shall at her death become entitled to the possession of my mansion, . . . such person to take the same absolutely for his or her own benefit." After his death the widow and the eldest son executed a disentailing assurance as to the mansion, and thereby settled the property upon such trusts as they should jointly appoint, and in default of appointment upon the trusts subsisting prior to the execution of the disentailing assurance under which the son was tenant in tail in remainder :—Held, that it being impossible to say that the eldest son would become entitled to the mansion on the death of the widow, as he might die in her lifetime, the legacy of chattels was an ordinary contingent gift after the life of the widow to the person who under the limitations of the will should at her death become entitled to the possession of the mansion; and that the eldest son was not at present absolutely entitled in reversion to the chattels. Caledon (Earl), In re; Alexander v. Caledon, 84 L. J. Ch. 319; [1915] 1 Ch. 150; 112 L. T. 75—Joyce, J.

3. Gifts to a Class.

Gift in Remainder—Gift to Next-of-Kin at Death of Tenant for Life without Issue—Time for Ascertaining Class—Artificial Class.]—A testatrix gave her residuary estate to her daughter for life with remainder to her issue, and in default of issue to trustees upon trust at their discretion to divide the same amongst such one or more of the persons who, at the time of the daughter's decease, should be the testatrix's next-of-kin according to the Statutes of Distribution. The daughter survived the testatrix, and died unmarried :—Held, that the class to take was an artificial class of next-of-kin, which was to be ascertained at the death of the daughter. Helsby, In re; Neate v. Bozie, 84 L. J. Ch. 682; 112 L. T. 539—Eve, J.

Description of a Class—Children or other Issue.]—A testator left certain residue of his estate "unto and equally between the children or other issue" of certain persons who should be living at the death of his wife, "all such children or other issue to take in equal shares per capita" :—Held, that if there were any children alive at the time of the death of the wife of the testator they took the property, to the exclusion of all others, per capita; but if there were no children then alive, the other issue took per capita. Pearce, In re; Eastwood v. Pearce, 56 S. J. 361—Warrington, J. Affirmed, 56 S. J. 686—C.A.

Gift to Nearest of Kin of Deceased Husband and of His First Wife—Nearest of Kin of Both Jointly, or of Each.]—A testatrix by her will gave certain leasehold property to her son for life and after his decease to his lawful issue equally. In the event of his death without leaving lawful issue, which event happened, she gave the property "unto the nearest of kin of my said late husband W. S. deceased and of S. S. his former wife deceased in equal shares and proportions." There was no issue of the union of W. S. and S. S., nor were they, so far as was known, relations of each other before marriage :—Held, that the gift was to a class consisting of the nearest of kin of W. S. and the nearest of kin of S. S. living at the death of the testatrix), and not to a class consisting of persons who were the nearest of kin of both of them jointly. Pycroft v. Gregory (4 Russ. 526) distinguished. Soper In re; Naylor v. Kettle, 81 L. J. Ch. 826; [1912] 2 Ch. 467; 107 L. T. 525—Parker, J.

Class, when Ascertained—Child who Predeceased Tenant for Life—Implied Gift.]—A gift upon trust for the daughter of the testatrix for life, and after her death "upon trust for her child, if only one, or her children in equal shares if more than one, and the issue of any deceased child or children, such issue being born in the lifetime" of the daughter, does not confer any interest on a daughter who died before the death of the tenant for life a spinster. Shaw, In re; Williams v. Pledger, 56 S. J. 380—Neville, J.

When Class Closes—Forfeiture.]—By a second codicil a testator narrowed down an absolute gift in the will to W. J. Curzon, which had been reduced to a life interest in the first codicil to a life interest forfeitable on bankruptcy, and after this interest had determined the property was to go upon the trusts "in the will contained," "and as an acceleration to such trusts"—that is, to all the children of the said W. J. Curzon who attained twenty-one. One child, the plaintiff, had attained that age :—Held, that the class was closed so soon as W. J. Curzon was adjudicated a bankrupt. Curzon, In re; Martin v. Perry; 56 S. J. 362—Neville, J.

—— Life Interest—Remainder to Children—Attainment of Twenty-one — Divisibility of Fund.]—A testator gave his residuary estate upon trust to pay one equal half part of the annual income to each of his two sons and subject thereto as to the capital and income for their children who being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, such children to take per capita. The testator died in 1895, and both of his sons survived him, each of them having two children, who were infants at the death of the testator. In 1899 one of the sons died, and in 1912 his eldest son attained twenty-one. The other son was alive, being over sixty years old at the date of this summons, and the other three children were still infants, and the question arose whether the class of children to take was closed when the eldest child attained twenty-one :—Held, that the class was not closed till the death of the son who was still alive and entitled to the annual income of one half of the fund, so that any child born in the lifetime of such surviving son would be entitled to a share, and therefore the child who had already attained twenty-one was not entitled to call for payment out of his share till the death of such son. Rule in Andrews v. Partington (3 Bro. C.C. 401) held not applicable. Emmet v. Emmet (49 L. J. Ch. 295; 13 Ch. D. 484) followed. Faux, In re; Taylor v. Faux, 84 L. J. Ch. 873; 113 L. 4. Gifts to Survivors.

See also Vol. XV. 937, 2037.

Cross-limitations — Gap — Implication — "Survivors or survivor" — Intestacy.]—A testator gave the proceeds of sale of his residuary personalty upon trust to pay the income to his three daughters F., S., and H. for their lives in equal shares, with a gift over of the share of any of them dying leaving issue to her children at twenty-one in equal shares. Then followed a direction that, in the event of any of the daughters dying without leaving issue, the "survivors or survivor" of them should take the share of such deceased daughter in such income for life, and then a gift, in case all the said daughters should die without leaving issue, to the testator's statutory next-of-kin. H. died first, a spinster, then F., leaving six children, who attained twenty-one; and lastly S. died without leaving issue :— Held, that, in order to imply cross-limitations to the children of F. on the shares of S. and H. in the events which had happened, it would have been necessary to construe "survivors or survivor" as "others or other," and that could not be done in a case where the only gift over was to the survivors as life tenants with no gift in remainder to their children or issue. No cross-limitations could therefore be implied, and there was an intestacy as to the shares of S. and H. Mears, In re; Parker v. Mears, 83 L. J. Ch. 450; [1914] 1 Ch. 694; 110 L. T. 686—Eve, J.

Life Interest—Remainder to Class—Gift over to "Survivors"—Survivorship Ascertained at Death of Tenant for Life.] — A testator gave his residuary estate to his widow for life and then to be divided equally between his children. After the testimonium, and before his signature, he added a clause directing that in case of the death of one or more of his children their equal share or shares were to be divided between the survivors :—Held, that the survivorship must be referred to the period of division—namely, the death of the tenant for life—and that a child who predeceased the tenant for life took nothing under the gift. Cripps v. Wolcott (4 Madd. 11) followed. Poultney, In re; Poultney v. Poultney, 81 L. J. Ch. 748; [1912] 2 Ch. 541; 107 L. T. 1; 56 S. J. 667—C.A.

"With benefit of survivorship in the same family."]—Gift, after an estate for life, to A, B, and C, who was the daughter of B, "in equal shares, with benefit of survivorship, in the same family." A and B died before the tenant for life :—Held, that the words "in the same family" confined the "benefit of survivorship" to B and her daughter C, and accordingly the estate of A took one-third and C took the remaining two-thirds. The principle of Crawhall's Will Trusts, In re (8 De G. M. & G. 480), applied. Sadler, In re; Furniss v. Cooper, 60 S. J. 89—Joyce, J.

5. Distribution per Stirpes or per Capita.

See also Vol. XV. 987, 2041.

Gift of Moiety "to the children of A and B"—Mode of Division.]—A testatrix gave a moiety of her residuary estate, subject to a life tenancy, "to be divided equally between the unmarried daughters of my brother-in-law" A and B "equally." At the date of her will and death A had three unmarried and two married daughters. B, to whom the testatrix gave a legacy of 500*l.* "in recognition of friendship and his many kindnesses," had one daughter only, aged about four years; and at the same date the testatrix was aged about sixty-three years, and the tenant for life about seventy-four years :—Held, that B himself, and not his unmarried daughters, was the second legatee; but that the division ought to be in equal fourth shares between him and the unmarried daughters of A, and not in moieties. Walbran, In re; Milner v. Walbran (75 L. J. Ch. 105; [1906] 1 Ch. 64), followed on the first point, but not followed on the second point. Harper, In re; Plowman v. Harper, 83 L. J. Ch. 157; [1914] 1 Ch. 70; 109 L. T. 925; 58 S. 6. Death without Having or Leaving Issue.

See also Vol. XV. 1012, 1092, 2042.

"Die without having had any male issue"—To what Period Referable.]—A Hindu made a will leaving all his property to his two sons and directed that "should either of these two sons die without having had (leaving) any male issue, the survivor of the said two sons is duly to take the whole of the property appertaining to the share of the deceased son." On the death of the testator in 1901 he left two sons surviving him. One of these sons died in 1903 leaving no male issue :—Held, that the other surviving son was entitled to the whole of the estate conveyed by the above clause. Chunilal Parvatishankar v. Bai Samrath, 30 T. L. R. 407—P.C.

"Die without issue"—Vested Estate in Possession—Gift Over.]—A testator devised his real estate, which consisted of three farms, as to one moiety to his son and as to the other moiety to his widow and two daughters in equal shares. Later in the will he directed that if the son should "die without issue" prior to the death of his mother or his sisters the whole estate was to go to the widow and daughters. The son survived his mother and died in the lifetime of his sisters, leaving issue:—Held, that the words "die without issue" meant without leaving issue him surviving, and not an indefinite failure of issue, and that therefore the gift over did not take effect. Crowder v. Stone (7 L. J. (o.s.) Ch. 93; 3 Russ. 217) and Jarman v. Vye (35 L. J. Ch. 821; L. R. 2 Eq. 784) distinguished. Dunn v. Morgan, 84 L. J. Ch. 812; 113 L. T. 444—Eve, J.

Legacy — Condition as to Priority — Subsequent Codicil — Settled Legacy Substituted.] — The rule of construction that, prima facie, a substituted legacy is subject to the same conditions as an original legacy, is not confined to cases where the only change introduced is one of amount, but may sometimes apply to cases where the legatee, under the substituted gift, is a different person from the original legatee. Leacroft v. Maynard; Pearson v. Leacroft (1 Ves. 279; 3 Bro. Words of Futurity—Gift to Children of Sons and Daughters who "shall die in my lifetime"—Son Dead at Date of Will Leaving Children.]—A will contained a gift of residue in trust for all the children of the testator living at his death who should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain that age or marry, in equal shares, with a proviso "that if any child of me shall die in my lifetime leaving a child or children who shall survive me and being a son or sons shall attain the age of twenty-one years, or being a daughter or daughters shall attain that age or marry, then and in such case the last mentioned child or children shall take" their parent's share. To the knowledge of the testator one of his sons had died before the date of the will, leaving two children (to whom the testator had given a legacy in an earlier part of his will):—Held, that they were contingently entitled on attaining twenty-one or on marriage to share in the residue. Williams, In re; Metcalf v. Williams, 83 L. Gift of Income to Children in Equal Shares During their Lives—Substitution of Issue for Deceased Parent — Implication of Cross-remainders.] — A testator gave certain real estate on trust to pay the income arising therefrom to his children in equal shares during their lives, or to their issue in case any of them should die before the others of them, and from and after the decease of all his children on trust for sale and division of the proceeds between his grandchildren in equal shares per stirpes. He left three children, one of whom, F., had died without issue, and another, E., had died leaving one daughter:—Held, that cross-remainders must be implied between the children on the principle of Armstrong v. Eldridge (3 Bro. C.C. 215) and Pearce v. Edmeades (8 L. J. Ex. Eq. 61; 3 Y. & C. 246), the provision substituting issue for a deceased parent not affecting the application of the principle; and that the one-third share of the income to which F. had been entitled was therefore devisible, during the life of the surviving child of the testator, equally between that child and the daughter of E. Tate, In re; Williamson v. Gilpin, 83 L. J. Ch. 593; [1914] 2 Ch. 182; 109 L. T. 621; 58 S. J. 119—Sargant, J.

Gift to Brother or Sister Dying before Testatrix Leaving Issue Surviving Her—Bequest to Dead Person—Validity.]—A testatrix, under a general power to appoint a trust fund, subject to her husband's life interest, appointed it by will in 1881 to her brother and four sisters by name "or such of them as shall be living at the decease of the survivor of myself and my said husband, provided always that if my said brother and sisters or either of them shall die in my lifetime or in the lifetime of my said husband leaving issue who shall be living at the decease of "such survivor, "then the appointment . . . shall take effect as if my said brothers or sisters respectively had died immediately after the death of "such survivor. Testatrix died in 1900, and her husband in 1909, a sister, F., having died in 1893 leaving issue who survived both:—Held, that in her case the gift was one to a dead person, that it was an attempt to apply the language of the Wills Act, 1837, to a case where it was not applicable, and that the estate of F. was not entitled to share in the distribution. Gresley, In re; Willoughby v. Drummond, 80 L. Gift to Brother and Nephew—Legatee Predeceasing Testatrix—Provision against Lapse—Gift to Take Effect as if Legatee had Survived Testatrix—Substitutionary Gift.]—A testatrix by her will made in 1897 gave her residuary estate to trustees upon trust for sale and conversion, and to pay four seventeenth parts of the proceeds to her brother B. absolutely, two seventeenth parts to her brother J. absolutely, one seventeenth part to her niece A. absolutely, two seventeenth parts to her nephew J. S. absolutely, and the remaining seventeenth parts to various other legatees. After providing for the event of any of the said four legatees dying in her lifetime without leaving issue, the will contained the following clause: "I declare that if any of them my said brothers B. and J., my niece A. and my said nephew J. S. shall die in my lifetime leaving issue, and any of such issue shall be living at my death the benefits hereinbefore given to him or her so dying shall not lapse but shall take effect as if his or her death had happened immediately after mine." The testatrix died on October 22, 1910. Both her brother J. and her nephew J. S. died in her lifetime, and each of them left issue who survived the testatrix:—Held, that the shares of J. and J. S. did not lapse as undisposed of, but went to their respective legal personal representatives as parts of their respective personal estates. Greenwood, In re; Greenwood v. Sutcliffe, 81 L. J. Class—Children and Collaterals—Gift to Include Persons who Predecease Testator Leaving Issue at his Death—Niece Dying before Testator—Valid Gift to Personal Representatives.] — A testator bequeathed and devised his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to convert the same, and after making certain payments to divide the residue among all his children, both sons and daughters, and his niece, E. C. R., in equal shares as tenants in common, the said niece and children to form one class together taking in equal shares, and in case any one of the said residuary legatees might die in the testator's lifetime leaving any issue who should be living at the testator's death, then and in such case the gift of a share of residue in favour of such residuary legatee should take effect in the same manner as if such residuary legatee had survived the testator and died immediately after his death. The niece died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving issue who were living at the testator's death:—Held, that under the will there was a good gift of the share of the deceased niece to her legal personal representative as part of her estate. Gresley, In re; Willoughby v. Drummond (80 L. Gift of Income of Fund to Widow until Re-marriage—Gift of Fund on Her Death—Re-marriage of Widow.]—A testator directed his executors to pay to his wife the income of a fund of 1,000*l.* so long as she remained unmarried, and on her re-marriage to pay her 300*l.* out of the fund. On the widow's death he directed "the money funded for her use" to be divided among the eldest sons of the testator's brother and sisters "then living," and mentioned in the will. The widow re-married:—Held, that, upon the determination of the widow's interest in the fund by her re-marriage, there was an acceleration of the subsequent interests, and also an acceleration of the time of ascertainment of the class of donees. Johnson, In re (68 L. T. attested the execution of the will, so that the bequest to him became void. He was alive and unmarried. There was no residuary gift in the will:—Held, that the gift over to J. and K. was not accelerated, and that it was only in the event of the death of T. without issue that they would be entitled to the chattels real. Kearney v. Kearney, [1911] 1 Ir. "Contents of house"—Objects of Art—Furniture—Decorations—Articles Removable by Tenant.]—A testator by his will, after defining "ordinary furniture" as including carpets, curtains, articles of ornament of an ordinary kind, household crockery, &c., but excluding sculptures, pictures, objects of art or antiques, whether furniture or otherwise, devised and bequeathed his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and to pay to his wife a sum equal to 10 per cent. of the net proceeds of sale of such of the contents of his house as were not included in the expression "ordinary furniture." At the time of his death the testator had a leasehold house:—Held, that the expression "contents of my house" included everything that could, as between landlord and tenant, be removed by the testator from the house, including panellings, mantelpieces, painted ceilings, &c. Oppenheim, In re; Oppenheim v. Oppenheim, 111 L. "Household effects"—"Contents of dwelling house"—Cash—Jewellery.]—A testatrix by her will specifically devised certain jewellery and gave her residue on trust for her nephews and nieces and their children. By a codicil she devised her dwelling house, No. 13 Esplanade, and bequeathed all her "furniture, plate, linen, china, glass, books, pictures, and household effects of every description, and all other the contents of the said dwelling house except any articles I may have bequeathed by my said will" to her nephew W. At the testatrix's death the contents included (a) certain jewellery, (b) 40*l.* in Bank of England notes and cash, (c) other jewellery, and (d) 50*l.* in Bank of England notes had been deposited in the bank during testatrix's illness without her instructions, although she was subsequently told it had been done:—Held, first, that everything in the house passed by the bequest; secondly, that the jewellery deposited at the bank was notionally in the house; and thirdly, that the 50*l.* had become part of the testatrix's current account and did not pass. Lea, In re; Wells v. Holt, 104 L. Gift of "Carriages, horses, harness, and stable furniture and effects"—Motor Car.]—The testator by his will made the following bequest: "I give to my said wife absolutely all my carriages, horses, harness, and stable furniture and effects." At the time of his death the testator was the owner of a motor car, and there was evidence that about the time he purchased it he sold his horses and carriages except one horse and two carriages, having formerly kept three or four horses and several carriages:—Held, that, having regard to the collocation of the word "carriages," the testator only meant to give to his wife such carriages as were used in connection with horses, and therefore that the motor car did not pass by the bequest. Hall, In re; Watson v. Hall, 107 L. Works of Art—Tapestries Affixed to Walls of House.]—Tapestries affixed to the walls of a house by placing a silk damask hanging over a white cloth lining and by sewing the tapestries to the silk damask hanging will pass under a bequest of the testator's "works of art," and do not form part of the house so as to be a part of the residuary estate. Scott, In re; Scott v. Scott (No. 1), 30 T. L. R. 345—Warrington, J.

Meaning of "Money"—Legacy of "10 per cent. of my money."]—A testator gave 10 per cent. of his money in charity, and bequeathed the rest of his property to his children, share and share alike:—Held, that "money" included, besides money at the testator's call, Consols, stocks that could be immediately turned into cash, and arrears of rent of real and personal estate belonging to the testator, but not capital sums secured by mortgages. O'Connor v. O'Connor, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 263—C.A.

Bequest of "Moneys" at the Post-Office Savings Bank—Holding of Consols at same Bank—Consols not Included under "Money."]—A testatrix having referred to "any money which may at the time of my decease be standing to my credit at the . . . Post-Office Savings Bank," bequeathed "the residue of such moneys." The testatrix had a balance in cash and also a holding of Consols which had been purchased for her through the Bank :—Held, that the Consols did not pass under the gift. Adkins, In re; Solomon v. Catchpole (98 L. T. 667), distinguished. Mann, In re; Ford v. Ward, 81 L. J. Ch. 217; [1912] 1 Ch. 388; 106 L. T. 64; 56 S. J. 272—Neville, J.

"Cash in house"—Post-Office Money Orders—"Consols"—Two-and-a-Half per Cent. Annuities—"Savings Bank deposits"—Local Loans Stock.]—By his will the testator provided as follows: "I leave to my wife . . . all cash in house. . . . I leave to my wife and my daughter M. F. W. in equal shares all cash in bank, consols, shares, and savings bank deposits. . . ." The testator never had any Two-and-a-Half per Cent. Consolidated Stock, but he had Two-and-a-Half per Cent. Annuities :—Held, first, that Post-Office money orders passed under the bequest of "cash in the house"; secondly, that the term "Consols" was not used in the strictly technical sense, but was used as meaning Government Stocks, and therefore that it covered the Two-and-a-Half per Cent. Annuities; and thirdly, that 300*l.* Local Loans Stock standing in the testator's name in the stock register of the Post-Office Savings Bank passed under the bequest "savings bank deposits." Windsor, In re; Publie Trustee v. Windsor, 108 L. T. 947; 57 S. J. 555; 29 T. L. R. 562—Warrington, J.

"Ready money"—Money on Deposit—Course of Business.]—Where the evidence shews that by the course of business between the testatrix and her banker, money on deposit at her bank was frequently drawn upon by the testatrix, and such drawings were always met in precisely the same manner as drawings upon her current account,—Held, that the gift in her will of "ready money standing in my name or to my credit at my bank" was effectual to pass such moneys on the deposit account. Rodmell, In re; Safford v. Safford, 108 L. T. 184; 57 S. J. 284—Farwell, L.J.

"The rest of the money of which I die possessed"—Freehold House Subject to Power of Appointment.]—A testatrix who had a general power of appointment over a freehold house, which she did not exercise, gave "the rest of the money of which I die possessed" to Truro Cathedral :—Held, that the freehold house did not pass under the bequest of "the rest of the money of which I die possessed." Tribe, In re; Tribe v. Truro Cathedral (Dean and Chapter), 85 L. J. Ch. 79; 113 L. T. 313; 59 S. J. 509—Eve, J.

"The rest of my money"—"Anything belonging to me which I have not devised"—Reversionary Interest—Evidence as to State of Testator's Property—Admissibility.]—A testator, being entitled to a reversionary interest in a share of residue, by his will gave a pecuniary legacy to a charity, and proceeded: "The rest of my money I leave in equal shares to my brothers and sisters"; and after giving various other legacies, concluded: "Anything belonging to me which I have not devised I leave to my father and mother, if they are not living I leave them to my sisters":—Held, that the last-named bequest was not a true residuary bequest, and that the reversionary interest passed under the gift of "the rest of my money." Capel, In re; Arbuthnot v. Capel, 59 S. J. 177—Eve, J.

Bequest of 100 1*l.* Shares—Subsequent Conversion into 1,000 Shares of 2*s.* each—Ademption.]—A testator bequeathed "my 100 shares in the Palatine Rubber Syndicate." There was no such company, but there was a company called the Pataling Rubber Syndicate, in which the testator held at the date of his will 100 1*l.* shares, each of which was by special resolution of the company subsequently subdivided into ten shares of 2*s.* each :—Held, that the 1,000 shares of 2*s.* each passed under the bequest. Greenberry, In re; Hops v. Daniell, 55 S. J. 633—Eve, J.

"My one hundred and seventy pounds" Stock—Bonus Shares.]—A testatrix bequeathed to A., B., and C., "my one hundred and seventy pounds G. & Co. Ordinary Stock." Between the date of the will and of her death a bonus of one new share for each original share was distributed to the shareholders of G. & Co. and converted into stock. The result of this distribution was to reduce the stock in G. & Co. to half its original value, so that the holding of 340*l.* stock, consisting of her original shares and of the bonus, of which the testatrix died possessed, was worth no more than her original holding of 170*l.* stock would have been :—Held, that the 340*l.* stock passed under the bequest of "my one hundred and seventy pounds stock." Faris, In re; Goddard v. Overend, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 165—M.R.

Whether Interest Passes on Bequest of Charge.]—A testatrix made a bequest in the following terms: "As to the charge affecting the D. estate . . . of which only 1,000*l.* is disposable under the terms of my marriage settlement, I direct that my executor shall hold it in trust" for certain persons in certain shares, which she thereby declared. Under her marriage settlement she had power to dispose of a sum of 1,000*l.*, part of a charge of 1,500*l.* :—Held, that interest due to the testatrix at her death upon the charge did not pass to the legatees under the terms of the bequest. Ib.

A testatrix devised and bequeathed to G., E., and F. her two mortgages for 1,000*l.* and 900*l.* respectively then affecting certain estates, for their own use absolutely in equal shares, share and share alike :—Held, that interest due to the testatrix under the two mortgages at her death passed with the principal to the legatees. Ib.

Gift of all "Securities standing in my name at my decease"—Bearer Bonds Kept by Bankers—Entry under Testatrix's Name in Safe Custody Register of Bank.]—A testatrix made a specific bequest of "all the stocks, shares, debentures, debenture stock, and other securities which shall be standing in my name at my decease." She was possessed of two bearer bonds which she had purchased some years previously through her bankers. The latter had since kept them on her behalf in an envelope bearing her name and a reference to the "safe custody register" of the bank, which contained an entry under her name relating to the bonds :—Held, that "securities standing in my name" meant moneys represented by securities taken in the testatrix's name, not documents kept under her name; and that the bonds therefore did not pass under the specific bequest. Mayne, In re; Stoneman v. Woods, 83 L. J. Ch. 815; [1914] 2 Ch. 115; 58 S. J. 579—Warrington, J.

"Shares" in Company—Shares in Trust and Debenture—"Investments in"—"Preference shares" — "500*l*. debentures" — Whether Debenture and Debenture Stock Passed to Specific Legatees.] — J. C. bequeathed his shares in J. W. & T. Connolly (South Africa), Lim., to various legatees; (2) to his trustees his investments in the Associated Omnibus Co., consisting of preference shares and ordinary shares; and (3) his investments in Barclay, Perkins, Lim., consisting of 500*l*. debentures and 500*l*. ordinary shares. The testator held 500 ordinary shares in J. W. & T. Connolly (South Africa), Lim., as trustee, and a debenture for 2,000*l*. He held 500*l*. in debentures and 500*l*. ordinary shares in the Associated Omnibus Co., Lim., and he also held 200*l*. mortgage debenture stock and twenty preference shares in Barclay, Perkins & Co., Lim. :—Held, that (1) the testator intended to deal with shares and not the debenture, and the debenture did not pass to the specific legatee. Weeding, In re; Armstrong v. Wilkin (65 L. J. Ch. 743; [1896] 2 Ch. 364), distinguished; and as to (2) and (3) that the bequests were sufficiently wide to include the debentures and debenture stock notwithstanding the appended inaccurate description. Connolly, In re; Walton v. Connolly, 110 L. T. 688—Eve, J.

"Current dividends"—Shares in Company—Apportionment.]—The will of a testator, who died on January 9, 1914, contained gifts of certain shares in a limited company, together with the then "current dividends" thereon. The dividend on the shares for the year ending on December 31, 1913, was, in accordance with the practice of the company, declared at the ordinary general meeting of the company held on February 10, 1914 :—Held, that the meaning of the words "current dividends" in this will was explained in a subsequent part of the clause containing the bequest, and that the dividend declared on February 10, 1914, was a "current dividend" passing with the specific gifts of the shares. Raven, In re; Spencer v. Raven, 111 L. T. 938—Joyce, J.

Bequest of Shares or of Money to Buy Shares.] — Where a testator bequeaths a certain number of shares in a private company, and the will provides that if the legatee should by the articles be restricted from taking the shares in any other way than by buying them, then the bequest shall be an alternative one of money for the purchase of a like holding, the fact that the legatee is so restricted operates to make the bequest the alternative one of money to buy the shares. White, In re; Theobald v. White, 82 L. J. Ch. 149; [1913] 1 Ch. 231; 108 L. T. 319; 57 S. J. 212—Neville, J.

"Business and plant" at D. Street—Book Debts — Bank Balance.] — A testator bequeathed his business and plant at D. Street to X., his brother, and Y., his manager, in equal parts, and the will proceeded : "I will that they pay Miss A. 10*l*. per week during her life" :—Held, that the effect of the bequest was to give the house, bank balance, and book debts to the legatees, and that they were bound to pay the 10*l*. per week out of the assets, but were not personally liable. Hawkins, In re; Hawkins v. Argent, 109 L. T. 969—Astbury, J.

Gift of "net profits in all my commercial undertakings" — Effect — Shares and Debentures of Companies—Share in Partnership.]—The rule that a gift, unlimited in time, of the income of a fund is a gift of the fund itself applies to shares in a limited company, but not to a share in a partnership. Lawes-Wittenronge, In re; Maurice v. Bennett, 84 L. J. Ch. 472; [1915] 1 Ch. 408; 112 L. T. 931—Warrington, J.

A testator, who held shares in companies and debentures issued by them as security for loans from him, and was also a partner in a commercial firm, made a gift of "one-fifth share of the net profits in all my commercial undertakings, being" the companies and firm in question :—Held, that the legatee was entitled to one-fifth of the shares, though not to any debentures; but that as regarded the partnership he was only entitled to receive one-fifth of the net profits which would otherwise have been paid to the executors of the testator, so long as the partnership business was carried on. Ib.

"Pensions or allowances" — Whether Voluntary Payments Included.]—A testator had from 1870 until his death in 1890 given an annual subscription, at first of 50*l*. and afterwards of 100*l*., to a county infirmary, and he had also from 1850 until his death made an annual payment of 67*l*. to a cathedral vestry for the upkeep of the organ and the choir. The testator's estate book contained these payments under the heading "Donations and Subscriptions," but it contained no heading "Pensions and Allowances." The testator devised the estates to his widow, "subject to the payment of all pensions or allowances then paid" :—Held, that the direction to pay "pensions or allowances" did not include the above payments, as they were purely voluntary payments or donations. Scott, In re; Scott v. Scott (No. 2), 31 T. L. R. 505—Neville, J.

Bequest of Debts Due at Testator's Death—Portion Accrued During his Lifetime.] — A testator bequeathed "all the debts and accounts due to me at the time of my death, except rents issuing out of houses and lands" to T. :—Held, that the bequest did not include the apportioned part, accrued during the testator's lifetime, of dividends declared after his death in respect of the half-year in the course of which he died. Burke, In re; Wood v. Taylor, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 81—Barton, J.

Herd of Deer in Park—Tenant for Life and Remainderman.] — A testator bequeathed certain "live and dead stock including deer" to trustees in trust for his wife for life, and after her decease for the persons who for the time being should under the will be entitled to the possession of the rents and profits of certain real estate. At the time of the testator's death there was a herd of tame deer in a park which formed part of the estate. A tenant for life under the will from time to time purchased deer and added them to the herd for the purpose of improving it. The deer in the herd at the time of the testator's death having died,—Held, upon the authority of Maynard v. Gibson ([1876] W. N. 204), that the herd of deer did not belong to the tenant for life absolutely, but that she was only entitled to their reasonable use and enjoyment as in the case of farming stock. Held, further, that the deer which had been added to the herd by the tenant for life must be taken to have been added in accordance with her obligation to maintain the herd, and that they therefore became subject to the trusts of the will. White v. Paine, 83 L. J. K.B. 895; [1914] 2 K.B. 486; 58 S. J. 381; 30 T. L. R. 347—Pickford, J.

"Arrears of rent" Due at Death—Apportionment—Gross or Net Rents.]—Bequest of all arrears of rents due to testatrix at the time of her death held to include the proportion of rents for the current quarter, as apportioned under the Apportionment Act, 1870, up to March 4, the date of death, and to mean gross rents without any deduction for outgoings or otherwise. Dictum of Jessel, M.R., in Hasluck v. Pedley (44 L. J. Ch. 143, 144; L. R. 19 Eq. 271, 273), followed on the first point. Ford, In re; Myers v. Molesworth, 80 L. J. Ch. 355; [1911] 1 Ch. 455; 104 L. T. 245—Swinfen Eady, J.

"Rent"—Tithe Rentcharge.]—Rent held to include tithe rentcharge. Ib.

Settlement—Power of Appointment—Absolute Interest in Default of Appointment—Gift and Appointment by Will—Gift Inconsistent with Power—Intention.]—By his marriage settlement a certain fund was held upon trust for the testator's children as he should appoint, and in default of appointment for the testator absolutely. By his will the testator said, "I . . . bequeath all my personal estate and by virtue of the provisions contained in the settlement executed upon my marriage . . . I appoint the funds subject to the trusts thereof," upon trust, after payment of debts and expenses, for his children equally, but he settled the daughters' shares:—Held, that the use of the word "appoint" was not to be narrowly construed, and that the will operated as if the settled property had not been the subject of a power of appointment, but belonged to the testator absolutely. Griffiths, In re; Griffiths v. Waghorne, 80 L. J. Ch. 176; [1911] 1 Ch. 246; 104 L. T. 125—Joyce, J.

Capital and Income—Will—Construction—Leaseholds—Tenant for Life—Conversion.]—When a testator dies possessed of freehold and leasehold property, a gift by him to a tenant for life of the "rents issues and profits" arising from the real and personal estate does not afford any sufficient indication of an intention that the leaseholds should be enjoyed by the tenant for life in speeie; and they ought to be treated as converted at the expiration of a year from the testator's death in accordance with the rule in Howe v. Dartmouth (Earl) (7 Ves. 137*a*). Wareham, In re; Wareham v. Brewin, 81 L. J. Ch. 578; [1912] 2 Ch. 312; 107 L. T. 80; 56 S. J. 613—C.A.

Craig v. Wheeler (29 L. J. Ch. 374) and Game, In re; Game v. Young (66 L. J. Ch. 505; [1897] 1 Ch. 881), followed. Crowe v. Crisford (17 Beav. 507), Wearing v. Wearing (23 Beav. 99), Elmore's Will, In re (9 W. R. 66), and Vachell v. Roberts (32 Beav. 140) overruled. Ib.

Directions to Pay Legacies in "this my will"—Free of Duty—Codicils.]—A direction to pay legacies given by "this my will" free of duty does not apply prima facie to every legacy subsequently given by codicil; and though the direction applies to legacies given in substitution for those in the will, and to the same beneficiaries, yet where the codicil gives legacies in trust, in lieu of direct, and under the trust fresh beneficiaries are added, these trust legacies must bear their own duty. Trinder, In re; Sheppard v. Prince, 56 S. J. 74—Parker, J.

ii. General Devise of Real Estate.

See also Vol. XV. 1187, 2064.

Bequest of "All to be divided in equal parts"—"Pay to trustees"—Omission of Word "Devise"—Real Estate Included in the Bequest.]—A testator by his will made the following gift: "I give and bequeath unto all the undermentioned names all to be divided in equal parts." The word "devise" did not occur in the will, though the word "pay" did:—Held, that the idea of totality conveyed by the word "all" outweighed not only the omission of the word "devise," but also the expressions which seemed to negative the inclusion of real estate, and that consequently the testator's realty passed under the gift. Bowman v. Milbanke (1 Lev. 130) distinguished. Shepherd, In re; Mitchell v. Loram, 58 S. J. 304—Eve, J.

iii. Gift of Residue.

See also Vol. XV. 1201, 2065.

Gift of Residue to Forty-six Named Persons Equally—Codicil—Revocation of Gift of Two Shares of Residue—No Express Disposition of Revoked Gifts—Will Confirmed in all other Respects—No Intestacy.]—A testator gave his residuary estate to his trustees to be divided equally between forty-six persons named in the will and being the children, or the widows or children of deceased children, of his own and his wife's brothers and sisters. The list included F. W. and T. W. By a codicil the testator revoked the gifts in favour of F. W. and T. W., and in all other respects confirmed his will:—Held, that there was no intestacy in respect of the gifts revoked by the codicil; and that the whole residuary estate was divisible amongst the remaining forty-four persons named in the will. Whiting, In re; Ormond v. de Launay, 82 L. J. Ch. 309; [1913] 2 Ch. 1; 108 L. T. 629; 57 S. J. 461—Joyce, J.

b What Words will Pass Particular Property.

See also Vol. XV. 1221, 2067.

Devise of House and Premises known as "A"—"In which I now reside"—Additional Land Purchased after Date of Will.]—A testator devised his "house and premises known as Ankerwyke in which I now reside" to his wife. Between the date of his will and his death he purchased additional land, part of which was adjacent to the house, and a part of which was on the opposite side of the road, and all of which was occupied together with the house by the testator until his death:—Held, that all the additional land passed under the devise. Willis, In re; Spencer v. Willis, 81 L. J. Ch. 8; [1911] 2 Ch. 563; 105 L. T. 295; 55 S. J. 598—Eve, J.

Devise by Wrong Description—Ambiguity—Falsa Demonstratio—"Castle Street"—Admissibility of Evidence.]—A testator directed "my two freehold cottages or tenements known as numbers 19 and 20 Castle Street" in T. to be sold for the benefit of his daughters. He disposed specifically of two other houses in T., one of them being No. 39 Castle Street. He did not dispose of two cottages known as Nos. 19 and 20 Thomas Street, in T., which constituted the remainder of his real estate, and there was no residuary devise. There were houses in T. known as Nos. 19 and 20 Castle Street, but they did not belong to the testator:—Held, that evidence as to the real estate possessed by the testator was admissible; that the words "Castle Street" might be rejected as falsa demonstratio; and that Nos. 19 and 20 Thomas Street passed by the devise. Mayell, In re; Foley v. Ward, 83 L. J. Ch. 40; [1913] 2 Ch. 488; 109 L. T. 40—Warrington, J.

2. What Interest Passes.

a. Estates in Fee-simple, or in Tail, or for Life.

i. What Words Pass the Fee-simple.

See also Vol. XV. 1272, 2071.

Gift to A. "or his issue"—Words of Limitation or Substitution—Estate Tail.]—The rules that a devise to A. "or his heirs" gives to A. an estate in fee-simple, and that a devise to A. "or the heirs of his body" gives to A. an estate tail, have not been altered in modern times in the case of wills coming into operation since the Wills Act, 1837. A devise therefore to A. "or his issue" gives to A an estate tail. Clerke, In re; Clowes v. Clerke, 84 L. J. Ch. 807; [1915] 2 Ch. 301; 59 S. J. 667—Eve, J.

Absolute Gifts of Freeholds—Gift of Income of Same Freeholds for Maintenance—Period when Vesting is to Take Place—Supplying Words—Implication to be Drawn from Previous Gifts—Ultimate Gift Inoperative.]—Where by his will a testator bequeaths his freeholds to his sons, and subsequently gives all the income of the same freeholds to his wife for the maintenance of his children, and declares that if his wife should die before his youngest child shall have attained twenty-one the property is not to be divided until such youngest child has attained twenty-one, and then proceeds as follows: "And in case that my children should all die and leaving no issue, I give the property share and share alike to my nephews and nieces then surviving,"—Held, that on the death of the wife leaving two unmarried children her surviving, such two children took their respective shares of the testator's freeholds absolutely, since, on the construction of the whole will, the gift over was not intended to take effect unless all the children died in the lifetime of their mother. Mitchell, In re; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 108 L. T. 180; 57 S. J. 339—Farwell, L.J.

Gift of Income to Son until Bankruptcy—Gift over on Death of Son "should he die without leaving a male heir"—Determinable Equitable Estate in Fee-simple.]—A testator, by his will, devised "the Manor or Lordship of Martock . . . and all other my freehold . . . messuages . . . upon trust to pay the rents produce and annual income arising therefrom . . . unto my nephew R. L., until he shall assign charge or otherwise dispose of the same or some part thereof or become bankrupt or compound or make any arrangement with his creditors, borrow money, or do something whereby the said annual income or some part thereof would become payable to or vested in some other person which of the said events shall first happen and if the trusts hereinafter declared shall determine in the lifetime of the said R. L. to accumulate at compound interest for the benefit of the male heir of his body till he attains the age of twenty-one years and should he die without leaving a male heir then I direct my trustees to apply the annual income to my nephews W. B. L., F. J. L., and H. D. L. and the respective male heirs of their bodies successively":—Held, that R. L. took an equitable estate in fee-simple determinable in the event of his assigning, charging, or becoming bankrupt, which estate, if he died without assigning, charging, or becoming bankrupt, &c., became an ordinary estate in fee-simple, but subject to the executory limitation over to the testator's nephews in the event of R. L. dying without leaving any male heir of his body at the time of his decease. Leach, In re; Leach v. Leach, 81 L. J. Ch. 683;

Estate Tail or Estate in Fee-simple.] — A testator by his will left real estate to trustees, and directed "that the same shall not be disposed of, mortgaged, or incumbered in any way whatsoever, but shall remain for the benefit of my wife and children free from the control of their respective husbands and wives, so that the same shall remain in my family from time to time for ever hereafter; the rents and proceeds arising out of said property to be equally divided between my said children," naming them, "and also to my said wife for her life use only, and after her death same to revert back, and her share to be equally divided amongst my aforesaid children or the issue thereof respectively":—Held, that the children took absolute interests in fee-simple. Gardiner & Co. v. Dessaix, 84 L. J. P.C. 231; [1915] A.C. 1096—P.C.

ii. Limitations Creating an Estate Tail.

See also Vol. XV. 1285, 2071.

Devise to One and "his lawful eldest male issue"—Gift Over "in default of male issue . . . and not attaining lawful age."] — A testator by his will made in 1848 devised fee-simple lands to trustees "for the use of my grandson G. . . . and his lawful eldest male issue . . . and in default of male issue of the said G. and not attaining lawful age, in that case then to go to my grandsons D. and H. in equal divisions, and their lawful heirs": —Held, that the words "lawful eldest male issue" should be construed as nomen collectivum, the word "eldest" indicating the order of succession, and accordingly that G. took an estate in tail male. Lovelace v. Lovelace (Cro. Eliz. 40) and Sheridan v. O'Reilly ([1900] 1 Ir. R. 386) distinguished. Lewis v. Puxley (16 L. J. Ex. 216; 16 M. & W. 733) and Doe d. Tremewen v. Permewen (11 A. & E. 431) applied. Finlay's Estate, In re, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 143—Wylie, J.

"Issue" Equivalent to Heirs of the Body —Rule in Shelley's Case.]—In a devise to V. and his issue male in succession so that every elder son and his issue male may be preferred to every younger son and his issue male, and so that every such son may take an estate for his life with remainder to his first and every subsequent son successively according to seniority in tail male, the word "issue" is a word of limitation meaning heirs of the body, and the context does not require that it be interpreted to mean "sons." The effect of the devise is therefore to confer an estate in tail male on V. Keane's Estate, In re ([1903] 1 Ir. R. 215), followed and applied. Simcoe, In re; Fowler-Simcoe v. Fowler, 82 L. J. Estate Tail or Estate in Fee Simple.] — See Gardiner & Co. v. Dessaix, supra.

iii. Life Estates.

See also Vol. XV. 2072

Devise, whether in Fee or for Life.] — A testator, by his will executed in 1908, bequeathed to P. G. "the field (with his house thereon) containing about eleven Irish acres, subject to a rent of 1*l.* per Irish acre to be paid to my nephews N. M. and J. M." The field formed part of the farm of M. which was held by the testator in fee-simple, and was devised to N. M. and J. M. in these words: "I leave, devise and bequeath to my two nephews N. M. and J. M. my house and farm at M. (subject to the tenancy hereinbefore bequeathed to P. G.)":—Held, that the description in the will of P. G.'s interest as a "tenancy," coupled with the fact of a rent being payable by him to N. M. and J. M., afforded such evidence of a contrary intention as prevented section 28 of the Wills Act from applying, and that P. G. took only an estate for life in the field. Gannon, In re; Spence v. Martin, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 86—M.R.

Gift of "all my real and personal estate whatsoever absolutely"—"Residue" to be Divided.]—A testator gave to his wife, so long as she remained a widow, "all my real and personal estate whatsoever absolutely," and at her death, or on her re-marriage, the "residue" thereof was to be divided between his brothers and sisters:—Held, that the wife took only a life estate. Dixon, In re; Dixon v. Dixon, 56 S. J. 445—Neville, J.

Property neither to be Mortgaged nor Sold —Life Interest—Married Woman—Restraint on Anticipation.] — A testator by his will devised certain houses held under a lease for lives renewable for ever, to M. for her sole use, neither to be mortgaged nor sold, and at her demise to descend to her next-of-kin, and neither to be mortgaged nor sold as long as the lease of the said houses should last: —Held, that M. took only a life interest for her separate use, with a restraint on anticipation during coverture. Taylor, In re; Shaw v. Shaw, [1914] 1 Ir. R. 111—Barton, J.

Absolute Gift or Estate for Life — Words Sufficient to Pass Realty.]—A testator by his will bequeathed his property in these terms: "I devise and bequeath to my wife all the property of which I am possessed, whether it be leasehold property, stock in trade, accounts in my books, machinery, goods of every description, and furniture, to hold and to use for her benefit and the benefit of any of my children under the age of twenty-one years until they reach that age, and if she deem it advisable to dispose of any of the said property she may do so at her will, and at her death whatsoever property may remain shall be equally divided among my children": —Held, that the testator's real estate passed under the will; and further held, that it went to the wife for life, with a power to dispose of it during her lifetime and then to the children. Roberts v. Thorp, 56 S. J. 13—Warrington, J.

Devise "to every son of mine and his issue male in succession"—Subsequent Explanatory Words—Estate Tail or Estate for Life—Rule in "Shelley's Case."] — A testator devised real estate "unto and to the use of every son of mine and his issue male in succession so that every elder son and his issue male be preferred to every younger son and his issue male and that my grandsons respectively with their respective male issue take in succession according to their respective seniorities and so that every such son and every such grandson who shall be begotten in my lifetime take an estate for his life without impeachment of waste, with remainder to his first and every subsequent son successively according to seniority in tail male, and that every such grandson who shall be begotten after my death take an estate in tail male" with remainders over:—Held, that the rule in Shelley's Case (1 Co. Rep. 93*b*) did not apply, and that the subsequent words after the devise to every son and his issue male in succession, which might by itself have given an estate in tail male to the son, must be read as part and parcel of the devise, so as to cut down the estate of every son and every grandson begotten in the testator's lifetime to an estate for life only, with remainders to his first and every other son in tail male. Lawrence (Lord), In re; Lawrence v. Lawrence, 84 L. J. Ch. 273; [1915] 1 Ch. 129; 112 L. T. 195; 59 S. J. 127—C.A.

Court Aids Vesting rather than Divesting—Power of the Court to Read Words into Will.] —A testator gave real property in trust for his granddaughter Emily, with remainder to her children upon attaining twenty-one, and with remainder over in favour of another grandchild, Esther, and her children. He gave other property to Esther, with remainder to her children, but without specifying that they should attain any age, and with a similar gift over in favour of Emily and her children. The wording of the will pointed to an intention of the testator to make both gifts identical, reference being made to children of Esther "capable of taking," and to their shares "vesting at the same age":—Held, that the Court could not supply words in a will, particularly to prevent vesting, and that a daughter of Esther who died an infant had taken a vested interest. Litchfield, In re: Horton v. Jones, 104 L. T. 631—Parker, J.

Contingent and Vested Remainders—Real Estate—Devise in Strict Settlement—Disclaimer of Life Estate — Acceleration.] — A testator devised certain real estate to his eldest son, J. S., for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of J. S. successively in tail male, with remainder to the testator's grandson, W. S. (the son of the testator's second son) for life, with remainder to the first and other sons of W. S. successively in tail male, with remainders over. Upon the death of the testator, J. S., who was married, but had no male issue, disclaimed the life estate given him by the testator's will:—Held, that the disclaimer by J. S. did not operate so as to cause an acceleration of the life estate of W. S., but that during the remainder of the life of J. S. or until the birth of issue male to him the estates were undisposed of by the devise, and passed during such period under the residuary devise contained in the will. Carrick v. Errington (2 P. Wms. 361; affirmed by the House of Lords, sub nom. Errington v. Carrick, 5 Bro. P.C. 391), applied. Scott, In re; Scott v. Scott, 80 L. J. Ch. 750; [1911] 2 Ch. 374; 105 L. Direction to Pay Income of Legacy for Three Years after Death to A., Followed by Bequests of Legacies—Death of Legatee within the Three Years.]—A trust to sell and pay the annual income arising from such sale to A. during the three years immediately following the testator's death, and from and after the determination of such three years upon trust to pay out of the capital of the said trust fund legacies to B, C, and D, gives B a vested interest in his legacy immediately on the death of the testator. Such a legacy does not lapse by reason of B dying before the expiration of three years from the testator's death. Boam, In re; Shorthouse v. Annibal, 56 S. J. 142—Swinfen Eady, J.

"Distribute"—Time of Vesting—Defeasance.]—A direction to distribute on the death of a tenant for life, followed by a proviso that in the event of the death of all objects to whom such distribution is to be made without descendants, there is to be a gift over, does not make such direction to distribute inconsistent with the rule in O'Mahoney v. Burdett (44 L. J. Ch. 56*n.*; L. R. 7 H.L. 388), and accordingly the objects to whom such distribution is to be made are indefeasibly entitled, and take absolutely on the death of the tenant for life. Mackinlay, In re; Scrimgeour v. Mackinlay, 56 S. J. 142—Swinfen Eady, J.

Gift to Class Attaining Twenty-one — Vesting.]—Where a fund is left to a class contingently on their attaining twenty-one, the eldest of the class on attaining twenty-one takes a vested interest in possession of his share and a contingent interest in the shares of the other members of the class who are still under twenty-one. Holford, In re; Holford v. Holford (63 L. J. Ch. 637; [1894] 3 Ch. 30), followed. Williams' Settlement, In re; Williams v. Williams, 80 L. J. Ch. 249; [1911] 1 Ch. 441; 104 L. T. 310; 55 S. J. 236—Eve, J.

Gift to Son at Twenty-six—Income Charged with other Payments — Intermediate Income — Accumulation — Vesting.] — A testator bequeathed his shares in a certain company to trustees upon trust out of the income to pay certain annual sums in augmentation of the income of his daughters and to pay his debts and the estate duty payable at his death, and declared that the trustees should hold one fourth part of the shares upon trust out of the income, subject as aforesaid to pay to his son G. an annual sum not exceeding 3,000*l.*

"until he shall have attained the age of twenty-six years and when and so soon as he shall have attained the said age of twenty-six years my trustees shall hold such last-mentioned one fourth part of my said shares and the accumulations of income arising therefrom but subject as aforesaid in trust for my said son G. absolutely." There was no gift over in the event of G. dying under twenty-six. He survived the testator, but died at the age of twenty-three:—Held, that there was no severance of the one-fourth part of the shares bequeathed from the rest of the estate, that the interest of G. therein was contingent upon his attaining twenty-six, and that as he died under age it fell into the residuary estate. Nunburnholme (Baron), In re; Wilson v. Nunburnholme, 81 L. J. Ch. 347; [1912] 1 Ch. 489; 106 L. T. 361; 56 S. J. 343—C.A.

Per Buckley, L.J.: Where by a will a specific gift is made to trustees upon trusts for A when and so soon as he shall attain a named age and the gift is to be immediately separated from the rest of the property and the income is at once given to the beneficiary or the income is to be accumulated for the benefit of the beneficiary, and when and so soon as he attains the named age the corpus and the accumulations are given to him with no gift over, then the Court ceases to regard the gift as a contingent gift and holds it to be a vested gift. Ib.

Gift in Remainder to Children as a Class, but the Whole to One Child if there should be only One Child Living—Death of some Children before Period of Distribution — Survival of more than One.]—A testator bequeathed 4,000*l.* to his daughter for life and upon her death to her children in equal parts if any there should be, or the whole to one if only one child, and if there should be no children living at her death then to the children of his son in equal parts, or the whole to one child if there should then be only one. The daughter died a spinster. The son had eleven children, of whom three died in the lifetime of the daughter:—Held, that all the eleven children took vested interests subject only to be divested in an event which did not happen—namely, one child only of the son surviving the daughter. Firth, In re; Loveridge v. Firth, 83 L. J. Ch. 901; [1914] 2 Ch. 386; 111 L. T. 332—Sargant, J.

R. 16 Eq. 258) distinguished. The opinion of Sir E. Sugden in Kimberley v. Tew (4 Dr. & W. 139) and the decision in Templeman v. Warrington (13 Sim. 267) followed. Ib.

Vesting of Interest—Whether Absolute or Subject to Defeasance.]—A testator, who died in 1913, by his will left his property to trustees on trust to pay the funeral and testamentary expenses and certain legacies and to pay out of the income of the residue during the life of his wife certain annuities to his wife and children, and from the death of his wife the trustees were to stand possessed of the residuary trust funds in trust for all the children in certain proportions. The will then provided: "If any child shall die in my lifetime or after my decease leaving a child or children who shall survive me then and in every such case such last-mentioned child or children shall take and if more than one equally between them the share which his or her or their parent would have taken of and in the residuary trust funds if such parent had survived me." The testator was survived by his wife and by the seven children. Some of the children of the testator had children, and some had not:—Held, that each of the testator's children acquired on the death of the testator a vested interest liable to defeasance in the event of his or her dying in the lifetime of the testator's widow and leaving a child or children. Ward v. Brown, 31 T. L. R. 545—P.C.

Devise in Tail—Failure of Issue—Contrary Intention — Absolute Interest in Chattels Real.]—A testator, after the Wills Act, and describing each gift as of "all my right title and interest" therein, devised and bequeathed real estate to his eldest son J. and to his heirs lawfully begotten. He also bequeathed to J. chattels real, and declared that in case J. should die without issue lawfully begotten the lands devised and bequeathed to him should revert to the testator's second son T. and his heirs lawfully begotten. The testator bequeathed to T. chattels real, and declared that in case T. should die without issue lawfully begotten the lands bequeathed to him were to revert to J. The testator further declared that in case J. or T. should die without issue lawfully begotten the whole of the said lands should be the property of the survivor or longest liver of them, and that in case both should die without issue the said lands should revert to the testator's daughter R. and her heirs lawfully begotten, and that in case J., T., or R. should all die without lawful issue the lands devised and bequeathed to J. should revert to the second son of the testator's brother A. and to his lawful heirs, but on failure of such issue then to the next son in priority of age, and so on successively in remainder, and the lands bequeathed to T. should revert to the testator's brother B.'s eldest son and his heirs lawfully begotten, but on failure of such to his second or third son by priority of ages, and so on successively in remainder. And the testator declared it to be his will that neither J. nor T. should sell or dispose of any part of the said lands, but that the same should remain the bona fide properties of them and their heirs for ever:—Held, by Ross, J., and by the Lord Chancellor and Cherry, L.J., that, on the true construction of the will, the operation of section 29 of the Wills Act was excluded; that the words "die without issue lawfully begotten" meant indefinite failure of issue; and that consequently under the terms of the bequests of the chattels real, which would have conferred estates tail in real estate, J. and T. took absolute interests in the chattels real respectively bequeathed to them. Held, by Holmes, L.J., that section 29 of the Wills Act applied to the bequests of the chattels real, and that J. and T. each took an absolute estate in the chattels real bequeathed to them, with an executory bequest to his brother in the event of failure of issue at the time of his death, and with a further executory bequest of all the chattels real to R. in the event of failure of issue of both J. and T. at the times of their respective deaths, with a final executory bequest to the testator's nephews in the event of failure of issue of R. at the time of her death. Weldon v. Weldon, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 177—C.A.

Legatee to Receive a Sum Monthly with Power to Dispose by Will of any Portion Remaining.]—A testatrix by her will provided as follows: "I will and bequeath to my brother J. my household furniture and the money in bank which I am entitled to under the will of my brother T., to be given to him at the rate of 2*l.* per month during his life, and should any portion be remaining at his death he to have power to dispose of it by will." There was no gift over:—Held, that J. took an absolute interest, and was entitled to payment of a sum in bank of 317*l.*, which represented assets of the testatrix received by her under the will of her brother T. McKenna v. McCarten, [1915] 1 Ir. Gifts of Residue in Equal Shares to Named Persons Surviving Tenant for Life—Effect of Revocation of Shares of One or More—Gift to a Class.] — A testator bequeathed the residue of his property to trustees upon trust for his sister for life, and upon her death in trust for five persons or such of them as should be alive at the death of the survivor of his sister and himself, in equal shares. By a codicil the testator revoked the gift to two of the five legatees. All five survived the testator and his sister:—Held, that the effect of the revocation was to augment the shares of the other legatees. Donaldson, In re; Watson v. Donaldson, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 63—C.A.

Gift by A. to the Personal Representatives of B.—"As part of her personal estate"—Insufficient Estate of B.—Taker of Personal Estate of B. Predeceases A.] — Where a testatrix gave by will to the personal representatives of her sister a sum to go as part of the sister's personal estate, the sister having made her will many years previously, and the sister shortly after the testatrix had made her will died leaving an insufficient estate, and then the ultimate named taker of the personal estate under the sister's will, subject to a life interest still subsisting, died, and at last the testatrix died:—Held, that the legal personal representative of the ultimate taker of the personal estate of the sister got nothing, and the estate of the sister was relieved to that extent subject to the life interest, but the legatees of the sister who had abated would have to be paid in full before the residuary legatee of the sister took anything out of the testatrix's estate. Long v. Atkinson (17 Beav. 471) followed. Bosanquet, In re; Unwin v. Petre, 85 L. Gift to Wife "for life for her own maintenance and the maintenance and advancement in life" of Testator's Children—Right of Adult Children to Maintenance during Life of Widow.]—A testator gave all his property to trustees upon trust to permit his wife to occupy the mansion house during her life, and, after payment of outgoings, to pay the net rents and profits of the property to his wife "for life for her own maintenance and the maintenance and advancement in life" of his children, and after his wife's decease in trust for his eldest and other sons in tail male with further remainders, and, in the event of his wife predeceasing him or dying during the minority of his children, the testator made further provision for the maintenance and advancement of his children until their attaining the age of twenty-one years or marrying, and the testator made further provision for his younger children:—Held, that the wife took the income subject to a trust for the maintenance and advancement of the children during the mother's lifetime so long as they should require same. K'Eogh v. K'Eogh, [1911] 1 Ir. R. 396—Ross, J.

The children, other than the eldest son, being provided for, the eldest son, the tenant in tail male in remainder subject to his mother's life interest, who had married and, at the desire of his mother, had left the parental home, but who was unprovided for, issued a summons to determine what provision should be made for him out of his mother's income. The Court directed the enquiry asked for. Ib.

Bequest to Provide Art Gallery.]—Under the trusts of the testator's will,—Held, that the Court would sanction a payment of 5,000*l.* to the G. Corporation towards the cost of the maintenance of an art gallery, and 25,000*l.* to be expended in the erection of the gallery. Shipley, In re; Middleton v. Gateshead Corporation, 77 J. Life Estate or Absolute Interest.] — A testator bequeathed to his sister M. the sum of 2,000*l.* for her life, and at her death to be disposed of as she so wished. M. died without making any disposition of the 2,000*l.*:—Held, that M. took a life interest only with a power of appointment. Burkitt, In re; Hancock v. Studdert, [1915] 1 Ir. R. 205—M.R.

Life Estate to Daughter Determinable on a Certain Event—Gift over on Happening of Event — Non-happening of Event — Share of Residue.]—A testator gave to his daughter the income of one-fourth share of his residuary estate for life or until she should receive a certain legacy left to her under the will of her late father-in-law, in which case there was to be a gift over. The daughter died without having received the legacy, and there was no prospect of her estate ever receiving the same or any part of it:—Held, that the daughter took a terminable life interest and that the gift over took effect on her death and was not limited to the happening of the event mentioned in the will. The principle of Luxford v. Cheeke (3 Lev. 125), Browne v. Hammond (Johns. 210), Etches v. Etches (3 Drew. 441), and Cane, In re; Ruff v. Sivers (60 L. J. Provision that Tenant for Life shall have Power to Apply such Portion of the Capital as he shall Think Fit for his own Use and Benefit—General Power of Appointment Inter Vivos.]—A testatrix gave her estate on trust to pay the income to her husband till he should marry again or die, and on his death or re-marriage on charitable trusts; but with a provision that he should have power, so long as he should be entitled to the income, to apply such portion of the capital of the estate as he should think fit for his own use and benefit:—Held, that the husband took a general power of appointment over the capital inter vivos, though not by will. Richards, In re; Uglow v. Richards (71 L. Life Estate—Gift over to Two Persons—"Should one die before the other"—Certainty of Event—Impossibility of Death of both eo instanti—Contingency Imported.]—A testator left property in trust for A for life and at her death to his two nieces B and C in equal shares, adding the words, "should one of my nieces die before the other the other surviving niece to take the whole." There was a gift over "should my nieces die without lawful issue." The tenant for life died in 1873. In 1911 one of the nieces died leaving children her surviving. The surviving niece, who also had children, claimed the whole of the property:—Held, that there must be read into the gift the contingency of a niece dying in the lifetime of the tenant for life, as death itself is not a contingency, but a certainty, and no two persons can die eo instanti, and, accordingly, the surviving niece was only entitled to one half of the property, and the legal personal representative of the deceased niece were entitled to the other half. Howard v. Howard (21 Beav. 550) followed. Fisher, In re; Robinson v. Eardley, 84 L. Joint Tenancy or Tenancy in Common—Children to be Paid their Parent's Share—Effect of Word "Pay" on Joint Tenancy.]—A testator gave leasehold property to his nephews and nieces as tenants in common, and in case of the death of one or more of them he directed that the child or children of such one or more of his nephews and nieces so dying should "be paid" a parent's share:—Held, that the children of a deceased nephew took their parent's share as joint tenants, and not as tenants in common. A simple direction to "pay" a legacy or share of residue to more than one person is not sufficient to make the recipients tenants in common. Dictum of North, J., in Atkinson, In re; Wilson v. Atkinson (61 L. J. Ch. 504; [1892] 3 Ch. 52, 54), not followed. Clarkson, In re; Public Trustee v. Clarkson, 84 L. J. Ch. 881; [1915] 2 Ch. 216; 59 S. J. 630—Eve, J.

—— Words of Severance—Powers of Advancement and Maintenance — "Presumptively entitled."]—A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust for A. for life, and on A.'s death to divide between and amongst the members of a class then living, and their issue per stirpes if any of them should be then dead; and he gave his trustees powers of maintenance and advancement. The power of maintenance was a power, "during the minority of any legatee entitled" under the will, to apply to maintenance the whole or part of "the annual income to which any such infant legatee shall for the time being be actually or presumptively entitled." The power of advancement was a power, "from time to time during the minority of any male legatee" under the will, to apply to his advancement "all or any part of the capital to which such legatee shall be presumptively entitled for the time being." On a summons taken out after A.'s death,—Held, that the substantial gift was restricted to children only of members of the class, and that (on the construction of the maintenance and advancement clauses) such children took as tenants in common. Bennett v. Houldsworth, 104 L. T. 304; 55 S. J. 270—Joyce, J.

—— Gift for "support" of Children—Tenancy.]—A testator gave to his daughter A all the cash he had in bank, to be used by her for her own support and that of his children B and C, and gave to her all his stock-in-trade and furniture and other effects, to be applied by her for the like purpose. B and C were adults at the date of the will:—Held, that the word "support" was equivalent to "benefit," and A, B, and C took the property absolutely and as joint tenants. Nolan, In re; Sheridan v. Nolan, [1912] 1 Ir. R. 416—M.R.

3. Mortgages.

Specific Devise of Mortgaged Property—Banking Account — Transfer of Banking Account—Guarantee to Bank by Transferor—Exoneration of Personal Estate.]—A testator charged a freehold house with payment to his bankers of all moneys for the time being owing from him to them, in order from time to time to be able to overdraw his business account. Subsequently, being unable owing to illness to carry on his business himself, he transferred the account into the name of his son and a daughter, and requested the bank to give them such credit and make them such advances as they might require, and guaranteed the bank the payment of all moneys then and thereafter due on the general balance of the account. At his death the account was in debit to the amount of something over 2,000*l.* Having by his will specifically devised the freehold house to his son,—Held, (a) that the charge included all money due or capable of becoming due from the testator to the bank under the guarantee; (b) that the testator was in substance and in fact the principal debtor for the balance owing to the bank at his death; (c) that therefore the Real Estate Charges Act, 1854, applied, and that the freehold house specifically devised was subject to the charge for that amount in exoneration of the testator's personal estate. Hawkes, In re; Reeve v. Hawkes, 81 L. J. Ch. 641; [1912] 2 Ch. 251; 106 L. T. 1014—Parker, J.

Semble, that if in substance as well as in form the testator had been merely a surety for the payment of the debit balance, and the principal debtor had actually paid it off after the testator's death, the Real Estate Charges Act, 1854, would not have applied. Ib.

Husband and Wife—Mortgage of Property Belonging to Wife—Election of Wife to take under Will—Liability of Property Brought in by Election for Debts—Incidence of Contribution as between Beneficiaries.]—A testator, whose estate consisted chiefly of five leasehold properties, appointed his wife and C. executors and trustees and gave all his estate to them upon trust to pay to his wife the rents for life, and after her death he left his four leasehold messuages in Q. Street and his six leaseholds in J. Street to his trustees upon trust to pay the income to his daughter, E. S., for life, and after her death to her children; and after the death of his wife he bequeathed two leaseholds in R. Street and a leasehold villa, B., to a niece, and after disposing of the remaining leaseholds in S. Street for the benefit of E. S. and her children, he bequeathed the residue of his estate to his wife, charged with debts. The property in Q. Street was subject to a mortgage for 318*l.* The property in J. Street was assigned to the testator's wife in 1888, and by a deed of August 25, 1909, the testator purported to mortgage it to secure 400*l.* This mortgage was existing at his death. The leasehold villa B. was assigned to the testator and his wife jointly in 1905, and by a deed of August 15, 1905, they jointly mortgaged the same to secure 400*l.* The other leaseholds in R. and S. Streets were also assigned to the testator's wife in 1888. The widow elected to take under the testator's will. On an originating summons by C. to have it determined how, as between the beneficiaries, the two mortgages for 400*l.* respectively and the debts should be borne,—Held, that the equities had to be determined as at the testator's death, and as to the mortgage of 400*l.* on the J. Street property, created without the knowledge of the wife, Locke King's Act did not apply, and this property was not primarily liable for the payment of this mortgage debt. But held as to the villa B., mortgaged by a deed to which the wife was a party, that Locke King's Act applied, and the property was primarily liable for the charge upon it. Williams, In re; Cunliffe v. Williams, 84 L. J. Ch. 578; [1915] 1 Ch. 450; 110 L. T. 569—Eve, J.

Held, further, that, the residue of the testator's estate being now insufficient for the payment of debts, the property brought in by reason of the widow's election was liable to contribute pari passu with the testator's property in discharging his debts. Cooper v. Cooper (44 L. J. Ch. 6; L. R. 7 H.L. 53) applied. Ib.

4. Marshalling.

Devise of Mortgaged Property—Trust for Sale Reserving Rentcharges — Deficiency — Exoneration of Real Estate.] — A testator devised property upon trust for sale and directed certain rentcharges to be created and reserved out of such property for the benefit of his daughters. At the date of the will and at the date of the testator's death the property was subject to mortgages. The property appeared to be insufficient to provide for the rentcharges and for payment off of the mortgages:—Held, that the principles of marshalling should be applied, and that if, after a sale of the property reserving the rentcharges, the proceeds of sale were not sufficient to satisfy the mortgages, the deficiency should be paid out of the residuary estate, and that the rentcharges should not be required to contribute to payment of the mortgage debts unless the residuary estate were insufficient. Buckley v. Buckley (19 L. R. Ir. 544) followed. Fry, In re; Fry v. Fry, 81 L. J. Ch. 640; [1912] 2 Ch. 86; 106 L. T. 999; 56 S. J. 518—Joyce, J.

Devise of Freeholds and Leaseholds—Disclaimer of Leaseholds and Freeholds — Pecuniary Legacies—Insufficient Assets.]—Where it has been held that leaseholds having been disclaimed, the specifically devised and residuary freeholds must also be disclaimed, and where there was an insufficiency of assets,—Held, that the rules of marshalling applied in the same way as if there had been an intestacy as to the leaseholds and freeholds disclaimed, and that accordingly, in paying the testatrix's debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, after exhausting her residuary personal estate, except a fund consisting of so much thereof as would satisfy the pecuniary legacies which had been set aside, resort must be had to the disclaimed freeholds before resorting to the said fund so set aside. Sitwell, In re; Worsley v. Sitwell, 57 S. J. 730—Neville, J.

Contingent Specific Legacy of Shares—Debts and Testamentary Expenses—Sale of Shares to Relieve Residue — Subsequent Decrease in Value of Shares—Vesting of Contingent Legacy — Compensation of Specific Legatee.]—A testator bequeathed a specific legacy of certain shares to a trustee upon trust for his son on his attaining the age of twenty-one. Some of these shares were sold by the executors in order to satisfy creditors, in relief of the residuary estate. Subsequently the son attained the age of twenty-one :—Held, that the son was now entitled to compensation for the shares thus sold, on the basis of the value of the shares at the time of his attaining twenty-one, but not on the basis of their value at the time of their sale. Broadwood, In re; Lyall v. Broadwood, 80 L. Beneficial Interest or Trust.]—A testator bequeathed to his wife his entire worldly effects to be managed as best she could for the benefit of their children :—Held, that the wife took no beneficial interest. Hickey, In re; Hickey v. Hickey, [1913] 1 Ir. R. 390—C.A.

Testator made the following bequest : "To my father, if living at my death, and if not, to my younger sister, I bequeath absolutely 5,000*l.*, but it is my specific wish that the said sum shall be distributed as follows : 4,000*l.* to" a certain school; 500*l.* to another school; and 500*l.* "to be given to" ten or more deserving people as therein mentioned : —Held, that the testator's father, who survived the testator, was entitled to the legacy of 5,000*l.* free from any trust or legal obligation. Ib.

The words "I desire the 300*l.* which I have bequeathed to A to be divided by her on her death, as she shall think fit, amongst the daughters of my cousin B" create a trust capable of being enforced. Jevons, In re; Jevons v. Public Trustee, 56 S. J. 72—Swinfen Eady, J.

A testator appointed his wife universal legatee. The will continued : "It is my earnest wish and desire that my wife should during her lifetime pay out of my estate to my sister . . . the sum of 30*s.* each and every week" :—Held, that this expression of a wish did not amount to a precatory trust or direction to pay, and gave to the sister of the testator no interest to propound his will. Dobie v. Edwards; Hanmer, In the goods of, 80 L. —— Power to Appoint among Named Persons —Default of Appointment—Implied Gift—Death of Remainderman during Life Interest.]—A bequest to A. for life, "with remainder as she shall by deed or will and in his sole discretion appoint amongst" certain named persons, creates a trust by implication, in default of appointment, for such of those persons as survive the testator, whether they survive the life tenant or not. Wilson v. Duguid (53 L. J. Ch. 52; 24 Ch. D. 244) applied. Walford, In re; Kenyon v. Walford, 55 S. J. 384—Joyce, J.

6. Gifts by Reference and Implication.

Trusts Declared in Will by Reference to Trusts Contained in Daughter's Marriage Settlement.]—Where a testator gave a share of his residuary estate to the trustees of his will upon trust for his married daughter, and declared that his trustees should hold the same "upon the same trusts and with and subject to the same powers" as were in her marriage settlement contained with respect to the funds thereby settled,—Held, that, inasmuch as there were different instruments, different settlors, different funds, and different sets of trustees, the rule of construction to be applied was to read into the will the trusts and powers of the settlement as though they were therein set out, and that there was consequently no accretion to the funds of the settlement, but that the testator had by his will created a new and distinct settlement. Beaumont, In re; Bradshaw v. Packer, 82 L. 7. Legacies, whether General, Specific or Demonstrative.

See also Vol. XV. 1500, 2088.

Specific Legacies Bequeathed "as general and not as specific legacies."] — A testator gave legacies of certain specific stock, bonds, and shares "all now standing in my name as general and not as specific legacies." The will also contained gifts of general pecuniary legacies. The estate proved insufficient to pay all the legacies in full :—Held, that, although the legacies were in fact specific, the testator intended them to take effect as though they were general legacies, and that for purposes of administration they must be treated as general legacies. Compton, In re; Vaughan v. Smith, 83 L. J. Ch. 862; [1914] 2 Ch. 119; 111 L. T. 245; 58 S. J. 580—Sargant, J.

Demonstrative Legacy—Reversionary Fund —Interest.]—A demonstrative legacy directed to be paid out of a reversionary fund affords no exception to the general rule stated by Lord Cairns in Lord v. Lord (36 L. J. Ch. 533, 538; L. R. 2 Ch. 782, 789), that where no time for payment is fixed a legacy is payable at and bears interest from the end of a year after the testator's death. Walford v. Walford, 81 L. J. Ch. 828; [1912] A.C. 658; 107 L. T. 657; 56 S. J. 631—H.L. (E.)

A testator, who died in 1903, bequeathed to his sister "the sum of 10,000*l.* sterling as her sole and absolute property, to be paid out of the estate and effects inherited by me from my mother in terms of her last will," and with respect to the residue of the aforesaid estate and effects of his mother and of all other his estate and effects then in his possession and enjoyment, appointed as his sole heir or heirs such heir or heirs as should succeed to the estate of his father appointed by his father's will. The estate and effects of the testator's mother out of which the 10,000*l.* legacy was payable were subject to the life interest therein of the testator's father, who died in 1910, having by his will appointed an heir in accordance with the terms of the testator's will :—Held, that the 10,000*l.* carried interest from the expiration of one year from the testator's death. Ib.

8. Conditional Legacy.

Legacy on Condition of Acting as Trustee—Sufficient Intention Shewn—Codicils—Revocation.]—By his will dated October, 1899, the testator bequeathed a legacy of 10,000*l.* to the plaintiff, provided he acted as trustee of the will, and in default of his so acting, this legacy was to fall into the residuary estate. By a codicil of December, 1899, the testator revoked this legacy, and in lieu thereof gave the plaintiff 8,000*l.* subject to the same condition and gift over as contained in the will. By a second codicil he confirmed the first; and by a third codicil made in 1904 he provided as follows : " Whereas by my will . . . I bequeathed to " the plaintiff " the sum of 10,000*l.*, provided he acted as trustee of my said will, now I absolutely revoke said bequest and in all other respects I hereby ratify and confirm my said will." The testator died in 1904 and probate was granted in the same year to two of the trustees and executors named in the will, but the plaintiff was abroad, and stated that he was not aware of the testator's death till 1911, when he expressed himself ready and willing to act as trustee of the will, and came back to Ireland and called for a transfer of the trust property to himself and the other trustees. There had been advances of money made by the testator to the plaintiff on foot of the legacy of 8,000*l.* in 1900 and 1901 :—Held, first, that there had been sufficient compliance by the legatee with the condition; and, secondly, that the third codicil did not operate as a revocation of the first codicil, and that the plaintiff was entitled to the legacy of 8,000*l.* given to him by the first codicil after giving credit for money paid to him in advance in respect of the legacy. Browne v. Browne, [1912] 1 Ir. R. 272—Barton, J.

9. Cumulative Legacies.

See also Vol. XV. 1525, 2089.

Several Documents — Legacies, whether Cumulative or Substitutional.]—A testatrix by her will bequeathed seven legacies to as many legatees, including two legacies to her two executors in case they acted as such; she bequeathed a sum of stock to her executors on trust to pay the income to A for life, then to B for life, and directed that on the death of the survivor the said stock should fall into her residuary estate, which she devised and bequeathed to two persons in equal shares. The testatrix subsequently executed four documents in the nature of codicils; and seven months after the first will she executed a second, beginning with the words, " This is my last will and testament," but containing no revocation clause. The second will was almost a copy of the first; the legatees were the same, and were mentioned in the same order. Four of the pecuniary legacies were, however, reduced in amount; one was increased; and two remained unaltered. The bequest of stock was repeated, and the same persons were appointed residuary legatees. All six testamentary documents were together admitted to probate :—Held, that the pecuniary legacies bequeathed by the second document were substitutionary for those in the first, and not cumulative. Bell v. Park, [1914] 1 Ir. Legacy to Daughter—Advances to Son-in-law—Entries in Ledger Relating to Debt—Appointment of Debtor as Executor—Direction in Will to Deduct Debt from Legacy—Release of Debt.]—A testator in his lifetime advanced money from time to time to his son-in-law. In his ledger he made an entry in February, 1907, " 5,000*l.* is given off this debt for a definite object arranged between me and Mrs. Moore " —the wife of the debtor—" as from July 3, 1906, with interest due to that date." After deducting the sum of 5,000*l.* the indebtedness amounted in June, 1909, to 4,800*l.*, and the testator then made another entry : " This debt is absolutely cancelled from this date viz. : 4,800*l.* and interest." By his will dated March 12, 1908, the testator, after appointing the debtor to be one of his executors, gave a settled legacy to the debtor's wife and children and directed that the debt due from the debtor should be treated as a loss to the legacy and not as a loss to his residuary estate :—Held, that the debt of 4,800*l.* and interest had been effectively released, but that the rest of the debtor's indebtedness remained a debt due to the testator's estate. Strong v. Bird (43 L. J. Ch. 814; L. R. 18 Eq. 315) explained and followed. Pink, In re : Pink v. Pink, 81 L. J. Ch. 753; [1912] 2 Ch. 528; 107 L. T. 241; 56 S. J. 668; 28 T. L. R. 528—C.A.

Intention to Release Debt—Covenant in a Mortgage—Evidence of Intention of Testator.] —A direction by a testator in his will to his trustees to pay his son a sum of money, coupled with evidence that at the time when the testator took security from his son for a debt still owing he had said that he did not intend to enforce such security, does not amount to a release of such debt, and the trustees can accordingly retain such legacy, and set it off against the debt, which was of larger amount than the legacy. Tinline, In re; Elder v. Tinline, 56 S. J. 310—Parker, J.

Evidence of Debt—Appointment of Alleged Debtor as Executor—Evidence of Continuing Intention to Forgive the Debt—Release.]—Where a testator wrote a letter offering a sum of 150*l.* to her friend, and making certain suggestions with regard to her giving her an I O U., and paying interest thereon, and wound up the letter as follows: "I engage not to use the I O U during your life; also not to call in the loan, but leave it with you as long as you want it, and the interest is paid"; and subsequently seemed offended when the friend offered to pay the capital, and said, "I thought it would just fall into your hands when I died. The I O U is in an envelope with my papers, directed to you, and when I die all you have to do is to destroy it," and finally appointed the friend her executor:—Held, that there was a sufficient legal release of the debt by the appointment of the friend as executor, coupled with the continuing intention to release the debt. Strong v. Bird (43 L. J. Ch. 814; L. R. 18 Eq. 315) applied. Goff, In re; Featherstonehaugh v. Murphy, 111 L. T. 34; 58 S. J. 535—Sargant, J.

14. Ademption.

See also Vol. XV. 1576, 2091.

Specific Bequest of Shares—Reconstruction of Company—Substitution of New Shares.]—A specific bequest of ten shares in a company is not adeemed by the fact that, after the date of the will, the company has been wound up, reconstructed, and incorporated under the same name, the ten shares being represented by a greater number of shares in the new company. Leeming, In re; Turner v. Leeming, 81 L. J. Ch. 153; [1912] 1 Ch. 828; 106 L. T. 793—Neville, J.

And see Greenberry, In re, ante, col. 1800.

"Shares belonging to me"—Will Speaking from Death—Contrary Intention.]—Where a testator bequeaths "twenty-three of the shares belonging to me" in a certain company, and such shares are between the dates of the will and the testator's death, and on the occasion of the amalgamation of that company with another similar company, subdivided into four shares each, the bequest will, in the absence of a contrary intention, pass ninety-two of such subdivided shares, provided it be possible to identify the ninety-two shares as the equivalent in all but name and form of the original twenty-three shares. Clifford, In re; Mallam v. McFie, 81 L. J. Ch. 220; [1912] 1 Ch. 29; 106 L. T. 14; 56 S. J. 91; 28 T. L. R. 57—Swinfen Eady, J.

"All my shares"—Reconstruction—Inclusion of Stock.]—A gift of "all my shares" in "the A. B. and C companies was held to pass preferred ordinary stock, into which the shares in the company had been converted on a reconstruction of that company and amalgamation with another company, but not a debenture bond which had been created by a reconstruction of the A company nor debenture stock of the C company similarly created on a reconstruction. Humphreys, In re; Wren v. Ward, 60 S. J. 105—Sargant, J.

Specific Legacy—Misdescription—Shares in a Company—Amalgamation with another Company.]—By her will, made in 1907, a testatrix gave to her son all the shares in the W. Co. belonging to her at the time of her decease. There was no company of that name in existence at the date of the will nor at the death of the testatrix in 1911, but for some years prior to 1900 the testatrix had held shares in the A. Co., and in that year the W. Co. was amalgamated with the A. Co., the testatrix receiving shares in the latter company in exchange for her shares in the absorbed company, which she still held at the date of her death:—Held, that the shares in the A. Co. did not pass to the specific legatee, but fell into the residue. Atlay, In re; Atlay v. Atlay, 56 S. J. 444—Eve, J.

Bank Share—Amalgamation with another Bank.]—A testator bequeathed to trustees twenty-three shares belonging to him in the London and County Bank upon certain trusts. At the date of his will the testator held 104 shares in the bank of 80*l.* each, 20*l.* paid. Between the date of the will and the date of the testator's death the London and County Bank was amalgamated with the London and Westminster Bank, the name was changed to the London County and Westminster Bank, and the shares of 80*l.* each, 20*l.* paid, were subdivided into four shares of 20*l.*, 5*l.* paid:—Held, that the bequest was not adeemed and that the twenty-three original shares, or four times that number since the division of the shares, passed by the bequest. Clifford, In re; Mallam v. McFie, 56 S. J. 91; 28 T. L. R. 57—Swinfen Eady, J.

Legacy—Money Paid into Joint Account of Testator and Legatee—Admissibility of Parol Evidence.]—A testator by his will dated August 12, 1908, gave the sum of 300*l.* to S. D., who had been his housekeeper and nurse and faithful servant. On April 15, 1909, he wrote a letter to S. D., inclosing a cheque for 300*l.* and stating that this sum was to be instead of the 300*l.* left to her in his will. This letter, together with the cheque, was put in an envelope and given to S. D., with instructions that the envelope was to be opened at his death. S. D. did not know the contents of the letter of April 15, 1909. In December, 1910, the testator sent S. D. for the envelope, and in her presence opened it and took out the cheque and re-sealed the letter in another envelope. Later on in December, 1910, a sum of 300*l.* was placed by the testator in a bank to a joint account in the names of himself and S. D., with power for either of them to draw upon it. The testator never expressed any wish to alter or revoke his will or any legacy contained in it:—Held, that the gift of 300*l.* to S. D. was a clean gift unaccompanied by conditions, and that the legacy to her of 300*l.* had not been adeemed by the gift; S. D. having no knowledge of the contents of the letter of April 15, 1909, and there being nothing to affect her conscience, that letter could not be admitted as evidence to prove that the testator intended his executors not to pay the legacy. Shields, In re; Corbould-Ellis v. Dales, 81 L. Bequest for Purchase of Land for Glebe—Subsequent Purchase and Gift of Land by Testator—Evidence.]—A testator by his will dated December 31, 1904, bequeathed 500*l.* to his trustees on trust to invest the same in the purchase of land, in the parish of M., to be used as glebe land for the vicarage of the parish church, and he declared that the bequest was made in pursuance of the express wish of his wife to do something for the parish. Evidence was given that shortly after his wife's death, in 1896, the testator had told the vicar that he should like to do something in memory of his wife, and that what she would have liked best was the gift of a particular meadow to the living. In 1905 the testator purchased this piece of land for 375*l.*, and conveyed it on trust for the endowment of the incumbent for the time being of the living of M., as if the same was a part of the glebe of the living. In the conveyance it was recited that the testator had purchased the land with the object and intention of presenting the same to the living of M. in memory of his wife:—Held, that the statement made by the testator to the vicar in 1896 was not admissible in evidence, and that as the objects of the bequest and the gift inter vivos were different, the one object being to carry out the wife's wish and the other to do something in memory of the wife, the conveyance of 1905 was not an ademption of the legacy bequeathed by the will. Aynsley, In re; Kyrle v. Turner, 84 L. Legacy—Gift of Share of Residue—Contingency—Legatee to be a Widow at Date of Distribution—Gift Over in Case she be a Wife—Death of Legatee as a Widow before Period of Distribution — Failure of Gifts and Gifts Over.]—Where a testator gave (a) a legacy of 1,000*l.* and (b) a share of residue to his sister, a widow, payable on his wife's death, provided the sister be a widow at that date, but in the event of her being a wife at that date then over to her two children, and the sister died a widow, but predeceased the testator's wife,—Held, upon the death of the testator's wife, that the legacy and the gift of the share of residue, as well as the gifts over to the children in each case, were contingent upon the sister being alive at the date of distribution, and that in the events that had happened both the gifts and the gifts over failed. Laing, In re; Laing v. Morrison, 81 L. Settled Legacy — Lapse — Death of Life Tenant before Testator.] — A testator bequeathed his residuary estate to be divided between his five named children, "subject to the trusts following," which were in effect a settlement on each child for life, with remainder as to the capital of the share to his grandchildren, the children of such child, with accruer to the other shares in default of such grandchildren. One of the children died in the lifetime of the testator, leaving no issue him surviving:—Held, that the share of the deceased child did not lapse, but accrued to the other shares. Walter, In re; Turner v. Walter, 56 S. Onerous Bequest — Bequest of Leasehold House and Furniture—Separate and Independent Gift.] — A testatrix by her will bequeathed to L. her leasehold house with the appurtenances belonging thereto for all the residue of the term for which the same was held, subject to the rent reserved by and the covenants and conditions contained in the lease under which the said premises were held, together with all articles of personal or domestic or household or stable or garden use or ornament; and she further bequeathed to L. all the ready money which at her decease might be in her house or standing to the credit of her current account at her bankers'; she also gave him a life interest in certain trust funds:—Held, that L. was entitled to disclaim the bequest of the leasehold house and accept the gift of chattels and other benefits contained in the will. Syer v. Gladstone (30 Ch. General Charge of Debts Including Mortgage Debts—Specific Devises of Incumbered and Unincumbered Property — Subsequent Devise of Specific Property on Trust for Payment of Debts.]—Where a testator declared that all his debts, including mortgage debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, should be paid and satisfied, and subsequently—after making a specific bequest of personalty and a number of specific devises of incumbered and unincumbered property in favour of his children—created an express trust fund, consisting of certain specific realty and of the residue of his realty and personalty for payment of his debts, including mortgage debts, and funeral and testamentary expenses, and this express trust fund proved inadequate to the burden imposed upon it,—Held, first, that the general charge of debts implied by the initial direction was explained and limited by the subsequent creation of a definite fund for the purpose, and that only such real estate as was comprised in that fund was charged with debts and funeral and testamentary expenses. Thomas v. Britnell (2 Ves. sen. 313), Palmer v. Graves (1 Keen, 545), and Corser v. Cartwright (L. R. 8 Ch. 971) followed. Price v. North (11 L. J. Ch. 68; 1 Ph. 85) distinguished. Major, In re; Taylor v. Major, 83 L. J. Ch. 461; [1914] 1 Ch. 278; 110 L. T. 422; 58 S. J. 286—Sargant, J.

Held, secondly, that so much of the mortgage debts as was not discharged out of the express trust fund must be borne by the separate mortgaged properties, each property bearing the remainder of its own mortgage. Held, thirdly, that the other debts and the funeral and testamentary expenses not paid out of the express trust fund must fall rateably on the specifically bequeathed personalty and specifically devised hereditaments in proportion to their values, which in the case of such of them as were incumbered would be the total value of each property less the proportion of its mortgages not discharged out of the express trust fund. Ib.

Gift of Specific Foreign Realty and Personalty Subject to Legacies and Debts—No Express Exoneration of Residuary Estate—Foreign Personalty Primarily Liable—Foreign Realty not so Liable—Order of Administration—Mixed Fund.]—A testator appointed executors and gave legacies free of duty and, subject to the payment of the said legacies and duty and his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts, he gave all his real estate situate in the Argentine Republic, together with certain personal property in or about the same, to his trustees upon trust to sell and to pay the proceeds to certain nephews in equal shares, and he gave all the residue of his real and personal estate to the plaintiff. On the question whether the testator had charged his specifically given real and personal estate in the Argentine Republic with the payment of his legacies, duties, expenses, and debts in exoneration of his residuary estate,—Held, first, that, as a matter of construction, the charge was confined to the Argentine property. Secondly, that the rule that something must be found in the will to shew that the testator intended not only to charge the realty, but to discharge the personalty, applies to land outside the jurisdiction. Thirdly, that, since there was no trust for conversion for the purposes of satisfying the charge upon the specifically given property, it was not a "mixed fund" within the authority of Roberts v. Walker (1 Russ. & M. 752). Fourthly, that the specifically given personalty was charged in exoneration of the residuary estate. Fifthly, that the legacies, duties, expenses, and debts were therefore payable out of the several funds in the following order of administration: (a) the specifically given personalty, (b) the residuary personal estate, and (c) the specifically given realty. Smith, In re; Smith v. Smith, 83 L. Life Interests in Appropriated Sums—Capital to Fall into Residue — Legatees Treated as Annuitants—Insufficient Estate—Abatement — Valuation.]—Legatees whose legacies are life interests in sums directed to be appropriated for their benefit and after their deaths to fall into residue are really annuitants, and where the estate is insufficient to pay legacies and keep down the annuities the rule for the purpose of ascertaining the proper and proportionate abatement of legacies and annuities respectively is to put all on the same level and to convert the annuities into pecuniary legacies. To effect this each annuity is to be valued as at the date when it would have been payable had it taken the form of a pecuniary legacy, and the value so ascertained is treated as a pecuniary legacy liable to abate rateably with the other legacies. Cottrell, In re; Buckland v. Bedingfield (79 L. J. Ch. 189; [1910] 1 Ch. 402), applied. Richardson, In re; Richardson v. Richardson, 84 L. J. Ch. 438; [1915] 1 Ch. 353; 112 L. T. 554—Eve, J.

Legacy in Satisfaction of an Interest under a Settlement—Insufficiency of Assets—Abatement.]—A testator by a voluntary settlement settled a sum of money upon trust to pay the income thereof to himself for life, and after his death to pay such income to his maidservant if she should survive him, and after the death of the survivor of them upon trust as to both capital and income for the benefit of an orphanage. Subsequently, by his will he gave a sum of 1,000*l.* to the said maidservant on condition that she released the trustees of the settlement from all claims by her under the settlement and accepted the legacy in place thereof. The testator's estate proved insufficient to pay in full all the pecuniary legacies given by the will :—Held, that the legacy in question, if accepted, was not entitled to priority over other pecuniary legacies, but was liable to abate with them. Davies v. Bush (Younge, 341) and Wedmore, In re; Wedmore v. Wedmore (76 L. J. Ch. 486; [1907] 2 Ch. 277), considered. Whitehead, In re; Whitehead v. Street, 82 L. J. Ch. 302; [1913] 2 Ch. 56; 108 L. T. 368; 57 S. J. 323—Farwell, L.J.

Settled Legacy — Annuity — Insufficient Estate — Apportionment.]—The testator left his estate to trustees on trust to convert, and, as to one moiety of the proceeds, to hold 2,500*l.* on trust for M. T. for life, and to set aside a sum sufficient to produce an income of 78*l.* per annum, and hold the same in trust for A. T. for life. The moiety of the estate proved insufficient to satisfy the legacy and annuity : —Held, that the trustees must ascertain what sum invested in Two and a Half Per Cent. Consols at one year from the testator's death would have been sufficient to produce an income of 78*l.* per annum, and apportion the moiety of the estate in the proportion of that sum to 2,500*l.* McMahon, In re; Wells v. Tyrer, 55 S. J. 552—Warrington, J.

Priority of Legacies—Words "after making provision."]—A testator bequeathed certain personal legacies; and continued : "after making provision for the above-mentioned sums, I direct" certain legacies to be paid to charities. The estate was insufficient to pay all the legacies in full :—Held, that the personal legacies had priority over the charities. Olivieri, In re; Hamill v. Rusconi, 56 S. J. 613 —C.A.

—— Gift to Charity of Legacies Payable out of such Part of Personal Estate as may Lawfully be Appropriated to such Purposes—Will made after Mortmain Act, 1891—Direction to Pay Certain Legacies and "after payment thereof" others—Priorities of Legatees.]—A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate on trust for sale and conversion, and directed his trustees thereout "in the first place" to pay or retain all the expenses incidental to the execution of certain trusts and powers, and his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and "in the next place" to pay or retain all the expenses incidental to the execution of certain trusts and powers, and his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, and "in the next place" to pay legacies to certain nephews, "and after payment thereof" to pay legacies to certain nieces. He gave legacies to eleven charities, and directed that they should be paid "exclusively out of such part of my personal estate as may lawfully be appropriated to such purposes and in preference to any other payments thereout." The will was made after the passing of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 :—Held, first, construing the will with reference to the law after the passing of that Act, that the charitable legacies were a first charge upon the whole of the testator's personal estate not specifically bequeathed, in preference to all other payments, but were not payable out of the proceeds of sale of real estate; and secondly, that the words "after payment" of the legacies to the nephews did not indicate that they were to have any priority of interest over the nieces, and that the legacies given to the nephews and nieces therefore ranked pari passu. Bridger, In re; Brompton Hospital v. Lewis (63 L. J. Ch. 186; [1894] 1 Ch. 297), and Thwaites v. Foreman (1 Coll. C.C. 409; on app. 10 Jur. 483) followed. Harris, In re; Harris v. Harris, 81 L. J. Ch. 512; [1912] 2 Ch. 241; 106 L. —— Executor Manager of Business — Salary Given by Will—Legacy—Insolvent Estate.]—A testator empowered his trustees to appoint one of their number to manage his business till sale, at a salary, the estate afterwards proving insolvent :—Held, that the gift of salary was a legacy, and could not be paid in priority to the creditors of the estate. Salmen, In re; Salmen v. Bernstein, 107 L. T. 108; 56 S. J. 632—C.A.

Interest — Postponement of Legacies until Legatees Attain Twenty-three—Attainment of that Age before Death of Testator—Whether Payable from Date of Testator's Death or from Expiration of One Year After.]—A testator gave a legacy to each of his seven children as and when he or she should respectively attain the age of twenty-three. The two eldest children attained that age in the lifetime of the testator, and it was claimed on their behalf that interest became payable on the two legacies in question as from the death of the testator :—Held, that interest did not become payable until one year from the death of the testator. Pickwick v. Gibbes (1 Beav. 271) and Coventry v. Higgins (14 Sim. 30) distinguished and criticised. Palfreeman, In re; Public Trustee v. Palfreeman, 83 L. —— Gift to Son on Attaining Twenty-five—Share of Residue—Interest by Way of Maintenance.]—A testator bequeathed to his infant son a legacy on his attaining twenty-five and a further legacy on his attaining thirty, and also gave him a share of residue which was to be settled on the son for life with remainder to his children :—Held, that the legacies did not carry interest even up to the age of twenty-one. Abrahams, In re; Abrahams v. Bendon, 80 L. J. Ch. 83; [1911] 1 Ch. 108; 103 L. T. 532; 55 S. J. 46—Eve, J.

A bequest of a share of residue does not amount to such a provision for maintenance as will displace the general rule that a contingent legacy given by a parent to an infant child carries interest. Moody, In re; Woodroffe v. Moody (64 L. J. Ch. 174; [1895] 1 Ch. 101), followed. Ib.

A legacy to an infant legatee to whom the testator stands in loco parentis, where the legacy is contingent on events having no relation to his infancy, does not carry interest. Ib.

—— Legacy Payable at Twenty-one—Maintenance—Provision for Maintenance of Legatee out of other Funds.]—The intention that a legacy should carry interest, which is presumed where a testator merely gives a future legacy with a power to the executors to maintain the legatee out of the legacy, cannot be presumed in a case where a testator in addition to such future legacy makes provision for the maintenance of the legatee out of some other fund. West, In re; Westhead v. Aspland, 82 L. J. Ch. 488; [1913] 2 Ch. 345; 109 L. T. 39—Warrington, J.

Destination of Income — "From and after the decease of my said six nieces"—Income between the Death of the First to Die and the Last to Die—Distributive Construction.]—A testator gave his trust estate to trustees "upon trust to pay the income thereof to each of such of my said six nieces as shall be living . . . at the time of" the death of "the survivor of my said wife and son, for and during the respective lives of my said nieces, and from and after the decease of my said six nieces, to stand possessed of my said trust estate and the income thereof," upon trust for such child or children of the testator's son as should be living at the son's death. Three nieces survived the testator's widow and son. The son left one child:—Held, that "from and after the decease of my said six nieces" should be read distributively, and that, as and when each niece died, her share of income went immediately to the remainderman—that is, to the son's child. Browne's Will Trusts, In re; Landon v. Brown, 84 L. J. Ch. 623; [1915] 1 Ch. 690; 113 L. T. 39—Sargant, J.

Gift of Life Interest in Realty — Gift in Remainder of "as well the income as the corpus of the same"—Remaindermen Infants—Interests Vesting at Twenty-one or Marriage—Right to Intermediate Income.]—A testator who died in 1904 gave real estate on trust to permit one of his daughters to receive the income during her life, and on her death on trust to hold "as well the income as the corpus of the same" on such trusts as she should by will appoint, and subject thereto on trust for all her children at twenty-one or marriage. He gave his residuary estate on trust for his wife for life, and on her death for his children. The daughter died intestate in December, 1913. She left six children, of whom the eldest attained twenty-one in December, 1914. The other five were infants and unmarried:—Held, in view of the express mention of income in addition to, and before the mention of, corpus, that the income for the period between the death of the daughter and the attainment of twenty-one by her eldest child belonged to her children, and did not fall into residue as undisposed of; and that, as between the daughter's children, the eldest child was not entitled to the whole of the income for any period, but that each of the six children was entitled to a sixth of the income of the property as and when becoming entitled to a corresponding sixth of the corpus, and in the meantime to maintenance out of such income. Bective (Earl) v. Hodgson (33 L. J. Ch. 601; 10 H.L. C. 656) and Averill, In re; Salisbury v. Buckle (67 L. J. Ch. 233; [1898] 1 Ch. 523), distinguished. Stevens, In re; Stevens v. Stevens, 84 L. J. Ch. 432; [1915] 1 Ch. 429; 112 L. T. 982; 59 S. J. 441—Sargant, J.

Held, also, that if the intermediate income between the death of the daughter and the attainment of twenty-one by her eldest child had fallen into residue, it would have been payable as income to the tenant for life. Ib.

Gift to Several Persons Equally for Life—Gift Over on Death of Survivor—Implying Gift of all Income to Survivors till Distribution—Provision for Parties Entitled under Gift Over during Lives of Life Tenants — Life Tenant Predeceasing Testator—Intestacy.]—The principle that where there is a gift equally between A, B, and C for their respective lives, with a gift over of the whole property on the death of the survivor, an intention will be implied on the part of the testator that the survivor or survivors of A, B, and C shall, after the death of one or more of them, be entitled to all the income till the period of distribution, cannot be applied where there is a provision, during the lives of some of the first takers, for parties entitled under the gift over. Hobson, In re; Barwick v. Holt, 81 L. J. Ch. 432; [1912] 1 Ch. 626; 106 L. T. 507; 56 S. J. 400—Parker, J.

A testator gave the income of his residuary estate on trust for fourteen named persons during their respective lives. In case any of them should die leaving children them surviving, the share of income of the parent so dying was to be divided equally among the children. On the death of the survivor of thirteen of the fourteen persons the property was given equally among such of the children of H. and the thirteen persons as might be living at the death of the last survivor. Two of the fourteen persons died without issue in the testator's lifetime:—Held, that the Court could neither construe the gift as one to the named persons in joint tenancy, or imply a gift over to the survivors, on the deaths of any of the named persons, of the shares of income given to them; and that there was therefore an intestacy as to the shares of income given to the two persons who predeceased the testator. Ib.

Income of Trust Fund to be Paid to Legatee for Life—Refusal of Legatee to Accept Income — Power to Retract Refusal.] — A testatrix directed her trustees to set apart out of her estate and invest a sum of 1,000*l*. and to pay the income thereof to the plaintiff during her life, and after her death to pay the income to the plaintiff's son for his life, and after his death she directed that the capital and come of the fund should sink into and form part of her residuary estate. For some time the plaintiff refused to accept the income of the fund in question, and she desired that it should be paid to her son; and accordingly it was paid to him till his death. Thereafter the plaintiff requested that the income should be paid to her :—Held, that she was entitled to have the income paid to her as no one had been prejudiced by what had occurred. Young, In re; Fraser v. Young, 82 L. 20. Advances—Hotchpot.

See also Vol. XV. 2100.

Bequest of Residue to Children Subject to Life Interest of Widow — Advances to be Brought into Account on Division of Residue — Advances made by Testator, whether Released by Will.]—A testator devised and bequeathed all his residuary estate upon trust for his wife for life and after her death in the events that happened for division equally between his nine children. The testator provided by his will and two codicils that in making such division any advances that he might have made to any of his sons during his lifetime and which should not have been repaid should be brought into account together with simple interest thereon at the rate of 2 per cent. from the date of the advance up to the date of the death of his widow. Prior to the date of the will and also between the date of the will and the dates of the codicils the testator had made advances to each of his five sons. No written acknowledgments were given by the sons to the testator in respect of the advances made to them respectively, but some of the advances had, without demand, been partially repaid during the testator's lifetime :—Held, that the sons were not released from repaying the advances, and that the widow as tenant for life was entitled to such interest as was paid in respect of the advances from and after the testator's death. Young, In re; Young v. Young, 83 L. J. Ch. 453; [1914] 1 Ch. 581, 976; 111 L. T. 265—C.A.

Gift of Residue to Children in Equal Shares — Advances to some Children in Lifetime — Further Advances by Trustees—Postponement of Conversion — Division of Income Pending Conversion — Adjustment between Advanced and Unadvanced Children.]—Where a testator gave his residuary estate to his trustees upon trust to be divided amongst his children in equal shares, and had made advances to some of his children during his lifetime which he directed to be brought into hotchpot, and had given his trustees wide power to postpone the conversion of his estate, and where the trustees had made further advances to some of the children,—Held, that for the purposes of the division of the income of the estate pending conversion, the actual income of the estate must be taken and to that interest on the advances, whether made in the lifetime of the testator or afterwards, added, and the aggregate so arrived at divided amongst the children, deducting in the case of an advanced child the interest on the advance made to such child. Poyser, In re; Landon v. Poyser (77 L. J. Ch. 482; [1908] 1 Ch. 828), followed, Hargreaves, In re; Hargreaves v. Hargreaves (88 L. T. 100), considered and distinguished. Craven, In re; Watson v. Craven, 83 L. J. Advances to be Taken in Satisfaction pro tanto of Share of Residue—In Default of Direction to the Contrary in Writing—Covenant to Pay Annual Allowance — Declaration that Allowance not to be Taken in Part Satisfaction of Share under Will—Codicil after Date of Settlement.]—By a will it was provided that moneys which a testator had given or covenanted to give to any child "on his or her marriage or otherwise for his or her advancement or establishment in life" should, "in default of any direction to the contrary in writing under my hand," be taken in or towards satisfaction of the child's share under the testator's will and "brought into hotchpot and accounted for accordingly." On the marriage of the testator's son after the date of the will he covenanted to pay to the son's settlement trustees an annual sum during the joint lives of himself and other persons, and declared that the sums payable under that covenant should not be taken in satisfaction of any share which the child might take in the testator's residuary estate under his will, and he subsequently made a codicil whereby he confirmed his will. It was objected that this declaration to the contrary must be disregarded as being an attempt to regulate a testamentary disposition by a non-testamentary instrument :—Held, that the sums should not be brought into account, as the hotchpot clause should be construed as requiring to be brought into hotchpot only sums answering a particular description—that is, sums advanced free from a declaration to the contrary as to hotchpot—and that this construction was aided by the fact that the codicil made by the testator after the date of the settlement confirmed the will. Semble, such an allowance does not come within the scope of the hotchpot clause at all. Arbuthnot, In re; Arbuthnot v. Arbuthnot, 84 L. J. Ch. 424; [1915] 1 Ch. 422; 112 L. T. 987; 59 S. J. 398—Sargant, J.

Shares of Residue—Advances to Residuary Legatees — Period of Distribution — Unadvanced Legatees—Recoupment of Income.]—A testator made a general residuary gift to his trustees on trust for sale with full powers of postponement and retention, and declared that the trust fund should be held on trust to pay to his wife during her widowhood out of the income thereof such a sum as, together with the income under her marriage settlement, would make up the yearly sum of 3,000*l.*; and he provided that if the income of the trust fund should not in any year be sufficient to make up the 3,000*l.*, the whole of the income in that year should be paid to her, and any deficiency should be made up when the subsequent income of the trust fund would permit. The trustees were directed to appropriate 4,000*l.* on trust for the benefit of a son of the testator, and subject as aforesaid the capital and interest of the trust fund was to be held in trust for such of his sons, W., E., and J., and his daughters, I. and D., as being sons should attain twenty-one, or being daughters should attain twenty-one or marry, and so that the share of a son should be double that of a daughter. The testator gave power to the trustees, with the widow's consent during widowhood, to advance a certain proportion of the share of any of the children, and then settled the share of any daughter (less advances) on trust for her for life, and after her death for her children. By a codicil the testator declared that a sum of 7,200*l.* with 4 per cent. interest as from his death, which he had covenanted should be paid by his executors to the trustees of the marriage settlement of his daughter I., should be taken in or towards satisfaction of the share of the daughter and her issue in his residuary estate, and should be brought into hotchpot and accounted for accordingly. By another codicil he provided that if his daughter D. should marry during the wife's widowhood the trustees might settle on her marriage a sum equal to that settled on I., which sum should cease to be subject to the widow's annuity and the other will trusts, but should be brought into hotchpot in the same manner as I.'s 7,200*l.* The executors of the testator, on his death, paid 7,200*l.* to I.'s settlement trustees, and as from his death she received the income of that fund. After the testator's death D. married, and the testator's trustees transferred 7,200*l.* to her settlement trustees free from the widow's annuity, and D. thenceforth received the income of that sum. The income of the testator's estate, after deducting the two sums of 7,200*l.*, was sufficient to provide for the widow's annuity and interest on the 4,000*l.* trust legacy. No income of the residuary estate was paid to I. from the testator's death or to D. from the date of her marriage. In appropriating the various charges on the income of the residuary estate as from the testator's death to the widow's death as between the several shares thereof, it appeared that the shares of I. and D. in such income were insufficient to meet the shares of the charges appropriated thereto respectively:—Held (distinguishing Hargreaves, In re; Hargreaves v. Hargreaves, 88 L. T. 100), that the period of distribution of the estate was the death of the widow, and that the shares settled on I. and D. should be brought into hotchpot at that date and not before, so that they would not be chargeable with the deficiencies of income down to the widow's death, and they were entitled as from that date to the full income of their shares in the residuary estate after bringing the sums settled in their favour into hotchpot. Poyser, In re; Landon v. Poyser (77 L. J. Ch. 482; [1908] 1 Ch. 828), and Craven, In re; Watson v. Craven (83 L. J. Ch. 403; [1914] 1 Ch. 358), followed. Forster-Brown, In re; Barry v. Forster-Brown, 84 L. J. In an ordinary case of a direction to bring into hotchpot advances made either by the testator himself or by his trustees pursuant to directions in his will, interest is not accumulated against advanced children between the testator's death and the period of distribution. Ib.

Debt Due to Testator—Release by the Will—Advances to be Brought into Hotchpot.]—A declaration in a will that all moneys advanced to any of the testator's children, or his, or her wife or husband, should be brought into hotchpot and accounted for on the distribution of his estate, was held not to cover two advances by way of loan to the husband of one of the testator's daughters, one of a sum of 1,000*l.*, secured by promissory note given before the date of the will, and another of a sum of 650*l.*, also secured by promissory note given after the date of the will. The clause had not had the effect of altering the nature of transactions which were really debtor and creditor transactions. Such a clause is a charging and not a discharging clause, and applies primarily to advances by way of anticipatory portion:—Held, accordingly, that these debts were personally recoverable. Judgments of the Lords Justices in Limpus v. Arnold (54 L. J. Q.B. 85; 15 Q.B. D. 300) not in conflict with this view. Warde, In re: Warde v. Ridgway, 111 L. T. 35; 58 S. J. 472—Sargant, J.

Supplying Omission by Inference.]—A testator devised his family estate upon trust to raise by mortgage the sums of 4,000*l.*, 3,000*l.*, and 3,000*l.* for the benefit of F. P. H., G. E. W., and K. A. S. respectively, for life, with certain limitations over. Subject to these charges the estate was devised upon certain limitations, which had determined, with an ultimate trust for sale. This, in the events which had happened, had taken effect. The proceeds of sale were to be held on trust for five of the testator's cousins, including F. P. H., G. E. W., and K. A. S., as should be living when the direction for sale came into operation, in equal shares, but so that if F. P. H., G. E. W., and K. A. S., "or any of them shall then be living or shall have previously died leaving issue then living," such of the sums of 4,000*l.*, 3,000*l.*, and 3,000*l.* "as shall have been so set apart for the benefit of the one or more of them so dying and her issue" should be brought into hotchpot; and there was a proviso that if any of the testator's five cousins should die before the direction for sale of the estate should come into operation leaving a child or children living at the time when such direction for sale should come into operation, such child or children should take his, her, or their parent's share. The said sums of 4,000*l.*, 3,000*l.*, and 3,000*l.* were duly raised for the benefit of F. P. H., G. E. W., and K. A. S. respectively. F. P. H. and G. E. W. were living at the date when the direction for sale came into operation; K. A. S. died previously to that date, leaving issue one child:—Held, that some blunder having evidently been made in the will, the latter part of the hotchpot clause must be treated as fitting or intended to fit the introductory part, and that F. P. H. and G. E. W., though living, must bring into hotchpot the sums of 4,000*l.* and 3,000*l.* respectively. Haygarth, In re; Wickham v. Haygarth, 82 L. J. Ch. 328; [1913] 2 Ch. 9; 108 L. Several Settled Funds—Appointment—Trusts by Reference.] — A testator settled separate funds upon trust for his three children respectively for their respective lives, with remainder to their issue as they should respectively appoint, and in default of appointment to their respective children equally, "but so nevertheless that no child who . . . shall take a share under any such appointment as aforesaid shall . . . take any part of the trust funds remaining unappointed without bringing the share appointed to him or her . . . into hotchpot." The testator then directed that in the event of the failure of the trusts declared in respect to any of these funds any such fund should go in favour of his other children and their issue successively "upon the like trusts" as had already been declared in respect of the funds settled in the first instance upon them: —Held, that a granddaughter of the testator who had become entitled to the whole of one fund under her father's power of appointment was entitled to share in another fund, which passed on failure of the trusts affecting that other fund, equally with her deceased brother's estate under the above-mentioned referential trusts, without bringing the appointed fund into hotchpot. Wood, In re; Wodehouse v. Wood, 83 L. J. Ch. 59; [1913] 2 Ch. 574; 109 L. T. 347; 57 S. J. 735—C.A.

Residuary Gift—Interest on Advancements—Portions.]—Per Cozens-Hardy, M.R.: The rules laid down in the authorities for working out the consequences of a common hotchpot clause are, first, that no interest is charged against an advanced child prior to the testator's death; secondly, that where the period of distribution of the testator's property is at the testator's death, interest is charged against an advanced child from the death and not from the subsequent date at which, in fact, the distribution takes place; thirdly, that if the period of distribution is at the expiration of a period of accumulation or of a prior life estate, interest is charged not from the death, but from the period of distribution; and fourthly, that the effect of a charge upon the residue, such as a life annuity secured by a fund set apart to meet it, does not alter the period of distribution. Willoughby, In re; Willoughby v. Decies, 80 L. J. Ch. 562; [1911] 2 Ch. 581; 104 L. T. 907—C.A.

Testator, who was twice married and had executed a settlement on each occasion, died in 1866, having by his will and codicil bequeathed an annuity in favour of his widow (who died in 1910) during her life, and legacies in favour of certain children, and his residuary estate in favour of all his children, with special hotchpot provisions, according to the true construction of which Parker, J., was of opinion that the testator did not intend an equality by way of benefit, but an equality by way of portion between the children:—Held (by Cozens-Hardy, M.R., and Kennedy, L.J., affirming Parker, J.; dissentiente Buckley, L.J.), that the case was taken out of the general rule, and that advanced children were not to be charged with interest between the testator's death and the death of the widow when the annuity fund became divisible. Per Buckley, L.J.: There was nothing to take the case out of the general rule, and advanced children ought to be charged with interest accordingly from the testator's death. Ib.

Per Buckley, L.J.: Quære the correctness of the dictum in Lambert, In re; Moore v. Middleton (66 L. J. Ch. 624; [1897] 2 Ch. 169), where Stirling, J., intimated that, if the amount of an annuity were such as that there were nothing immediately available for division during the annuitant's lifetime, he would have been prepared to hold that the period of distribution was not until the death of the annuitant. Ib.

Advances by Testator at Interest—To be Taken "in full or in part satisfaction" of Benefits Given by Will—Hotchpot—Indebtedness Exceeding Benefits—Release of Debts—Legacy of Difference.]—A testator by his will made in 1900, after reciting that he had advanced to his son a sum of 25,000*l.* at interest by way of loan, gave the sum of 25,000*l.* to such son absolutely, directing that the advance or so much thereof as should remain owing at his decease should be taken in full or part satisfaction, as the case might be, of the legacy of 25,000*l.* thereinbefore bequeathed. The testator, after making certain specific bequests to his son, who also became entitled under the will to certain contingent reversionary interests, gave his residue among four of his children in equal shares. In dividing up the specific gifts which he made to each of his children the testator apparently meant to produce equality. By a codicil made in 1912, after stating that the sum of 25,000*l.* was still owing, with considerable arrears of interest, and that since the date of his will he had advanced further sums at interest to his son, which were also then owing, the testator directed that all such advances and all interest that might be owing thereon should be taken in full or in part satisfaction, as the case might be, of the legacy of 25,000*l.* and the various other benefits given to his son by his will. Neither the will nor the codicil contained any hotchpot clause. On the death of the testator in 1914 none of these advances had been repaid, and a considerable sum was due for interest, and it was doubtful whether the amount which the son took under the will would be sufficient to satisfy his indebtedness to the testator's estate:—Held, that the words in the codicil amounted to a gift to the son of his indebtedness to the estate of the testator, and were sufficient to involve a legacy to him of the difference of the two sums in the event of the debts exceeding the benefits given to him by the will. Trollope, In re; Game v. Trollope, 84 L. J. Ch. 553; [1915] 1 Ch. 853; 113 L. T. 153—Astbury, J.

The dicta in the judgments in Limpus v. Arnold (53 L. J. Q.B. 415; 13 Q.B. D. 246; 54 L. J. Q.B. 85; 15 Q.B. D. 300) followed. Cosier, In re; Humphreys v. Gadsden (66 L. J. Ch. 236; [1897] 1 Ch. 325), applied. Ib.

Residue—Advances to Children—Hotchpot—Interest—Computation Pending Division.]—A testator directed his trustees to pay the income of one moiety of his residuary estate to his widow reducible on her second marriage, and, subject thereto, directed them to stand possessed thereof upon trust for his children in the shares mentioned. The shares were settled with a protected life interest with remainders over. The testator directed that in computing the share of his eldest son, such son was to bring into hotchpot a sum of 2,250*l.*, as to which 1,700*l.* had been paid by the testator and 550*l.* was paid after his death by his executors under the testator's guarantee of the son's banking account; and a similar direction was given as to 1,000*l.* advanced to another son :—Held, that, for the purpose of ascertaining the proportions of the shares, the various sums paid by the testator and his executors to and for his two sons respectively ought to be added to the value of the moiety of the testator's estate the income of which was not directed to be paid to his widow, and from the aggregate capital so ascertained the sums directed to be brought into account ought to be deducted from the shares of such two sons, and the income divided from the testator's death in the proper proportions of the respective shares of capital so ascertained. Hargreaves, In re; Hargreaves v. Hargreaves (88 L. T. 100), considered, and the method of computation adopted therein applied. Hart, In re; Hart v. Arnold, 107 L. T. 757—Eve, J.

Power to Advance to Tenants for Life.]—A proviso in a will authorising trustees, notwithstanding anything thereinbefore contained—that is, notwithstanding (inter alia) gifts of income to the children—followed by gifts of capital to the grandchildren to apply moneys out of the capital for or towards the advancement or preferment of the children, limited to a certain amount in the case of each child, is a proviso which contemplates the bringing into account of such sums as were so advanced as against the share of the stirps of the child to whom such advancement was made. Sparkes, In re; Kemp-Welch v. Kemp-Welch, 56 S. J. 90—Swinfen Eady, J.

Advancement Clause—Fee to Architect.]—A fee paid to an architect by the testator to enable his son to learn the business of an architect is not an "advancement" for the benefit of the son, and need not be accounted for. Watney, In re; Watney v. Gold, 56 S. J. 109—Swinfen Eady, J.

Employment of Engineer — Contract of Engineer, whether with Building Owner or Builder — Liability of Building Owner to Engineer.]—By a contract between the defendants, a county council, and a builder, it was provided that the latter in consideration of a lump sum would build a school for the defendants in accordance with the specification and directions of their architect. The specification and the bill of quantities provided for certain "prime cost" items, including a low-pressure heating apparatus, for which provisional sums were to be allowed. The defendants' architect corresponded with the plaintiff, an engineer, with reference to his installing the heating apparatus, and, finding that he was willing to do so, wrote to the builder requesting him to accept the plaintiff's tender. The builder wrote to the plaintiff that the latter's scheme had been approved by the architect, and that he, the builder, would be glad if the plaintiff would let him have full details. The plaintiff replied thanking the builder for accepting his estimate, and promising to send him details. The plaintiff then proceeded with the work. The plaintiff having requested that a sum should be paid to him on account, the architect refused to certify it to him, but it was paid to him by the builder. The builder being unable to pay the plaintiff the balance due to him in respect of the work, the plaintiff brought an action against the defendants to recover the amount:—Held, that the contract for the heating apparatus was not between the plaintiff and the defendants, but between the plaintiff and the builder only, and that the defendants were not liable. Crittall Manufacturing Co. v. London County Council (75 J. P. 203) and Young & Co. v. White (76 J. P. 14; 28 T. L. R. 87) disapproved. Hampton v. Glamorgan County Council, 84 L. J. K.B. 1506; 113 L. T. 112; 79 J. P. 473; 13 L. G. R. 819—C.A.

Rescission — Innocent Misrepresentation — Restitutio in Integrum.]—A claim by contractors for the rescission of a contract for the construction of a railway, on the plea that the contract had been entered into under essential error, induced by the innocent misrepresentation of the railway company as to the nature of the strata through which the railway passed, rejected on the ground that restitutio in integrum had become impossible by reason of the completion of the railway by the contractors after full knowledge of the facts. Glasgow and South-Western Railway v. Boyd & Forrest, 84 L. B. POWERS AND LIABILITIES OF ARCHITECT.

Powers of Architect.]—By clause 16 of a building contract it was provided that the architect should, during the progress of the works, have power to order in writing from time to time the removal from the works of any materials which in his opinion were not in accordance with the specification, and the substitution of fresh material, and the contractors were forthwith to carry out such order at their own cost. Clause 17 provided that defects or other faults appearing within twelve months from the completion of the works arising in the architect's opinion from materials or workmanship not in accordance with the drawings and specifications, should, upon the directions in writing of the architect, be amended by the contractors at their own cost, unless the architect should decide that they ought to be paid for same:—Held, that clause 16 was intended to apply to emergencies during the progress of the work, and that where the architect had seen a piece of work and had not condemned it the clause no longer applied; and that clause 17 applied when in fact the work was badly done. In the latter case the architect was no longer acting on an emergency, but must act judicially. Adcock's Trustee v. Bridge Rural Council, 75 J. P. 241—Phillimore, J.

Authority of Architect to Employ Measurer.]—There is no usage of trade by which the official architect of a building company, which has not commenced operations or approved of plans, or instructed the architect to proceed with the building, has implied authority to employ the services of a measurer to the effect of rendering the building company liable for the measurer's charges. Black v. Cornelius (6 R. 581) distinguished. Knox & Robb v. Scottish Garden Suburb Co., [1913] S. Liability of Architect for Negligence.]—In the carrying out of a building contract a large amount of flooring had to be laid down. Four years after the building was finished dry rot broke out under the floors, and upon investigation it was discovered that the design which was intended to prevent dry rot occurring had been departed from in certain material respects. The architect had done nothing to see that the design had been complied with:—Held, that the matter was not one of detail which the architect was entitled to leave to the clerk of works, and that the architect was liable in an action for negligence. Leicester Guardians v. Trollope, 75 J. P. 197—Channell, J.

Provision for Payment of Liquidated Damages for Delay—Failure of Contractor to Complete Contract—Completion by Other Person—Applicability of Provision as to Payment of Liquidated Damages.]—A contract for the construction of certain works by a specified date contained a clause providing for the payment of liquidated damages at certain rates by the contractor for each week's delay beyond that date. It was further provided that if the contractor should suspend the works the employer might take possession of the plant and materials and engage others to complete the contract. The contractor became bankrupt and suspended the works, and the employers thereupon engaged other persons to complete them, but they were not completed until at least six weeks after the date specified in the original contract. In an action at the instance of the employers for the loss incurred by them through the failure of the contractor to fulfil his contract the pursuers claimed (inter alia) damages for six weeks' delay at the rates specified in the liquidated damages clause:—Held, that, while the pursuers were entitled to sue for damages for breach of contract, they could not found on the liquidated damages clause, as that clause applied only where the contractor had himself completed the contract, and could not apply where the control of the contract, and so of the time taken to complete it, had passed out of his hands. British Glanzstoff Manufacturing Co. v. General Accident, Fire, and Life Assurance Corporation, [1912] S. C. 591—Ct. of Sess. Affirmed, [1913] A.C. 143—H.L. (Sc.)

Penalty for Non-completion within Contract Time—Delay Caused by Extra Works—Final Certificate of Engineer — Jurisdiction of Engineer to Determine the Exclusion of Penalties.]—A building contract entered into by G. for the erection of artisans' cottages for an urban council contained the following conditions and provisions—namely, that in consideration of the payment of the contract price by instalments, payable on the certificate of the council's engineer, the contractor should within one week from the signing of the contract begin, and within nine months from that date complete, the contract works, unless delayed by strikes or lock-outs; that the contractor should carry out all necessary works and complete all works specified in the plans &c. annexed to the contract, or implied or incidental thereto, or to be thereafter specified or required by explanatory instructions or drawings, being in conformity with the original specifications &c., and such additional instructions and drawings not being so in conformity with the original specifications &c. as should from time to time during the progress of the contract work be required by the council's engineer, subject in case of non-completion within the contract time to forfeiture out of the money due to the contractor of a sum of 5*l.* per week for every week elapsing after the completion of the contract time; that it should be lawful for the council's engineer, or the council, by written instructions to make alterations and deviations and to supply omissions in or to the original specifications &c., and that such alterations &c. should not vacate the contract, but should be determined as thereby provided, and the value thereof deducted from or added to the contract price; and that the decision of the council's engineer "with respect to the amount, state, and condition of the works actually executed and any other question that might arise concerning the construction of the plans, sections, elevations, drawings, and specifications and contract, and the execution of the works included therein, or in any wise relating thereto, shall be final and legally binding and without appeal." The contract works were in fact not completed within the contract time, but certain extra works had been ordered by the council and were executed by the contractor. The council's engineer having from time to time given certificates for the payment of the instalments of the contract price, by his final certificate awarded a sum in respect of extra works, but in that certificate did not refer to or make any deduction in respect of penalties for non-completion within the contract time. In an action by G. for the recovery of portion of the contract price from the council, the council pleaded that penalties for non-completion within the contract time had arisen, and that the same should be deducted from the money due to the plaintiff, who in reply pleaded that the delay in completion was caused by the extras ordered and executed; and further, that, by reason of the final certificate of their engineer, the defendants were estopped from making any claim in respect of penalties. The jury found that there was no waiver of the right to penalties by the defendants, and assessed damages for delay at 30*l.*:—Held, that the jurisdiction conferred upon the council's engineer by the contract did not extend to his determining whether the penalty clause in the contract was or was not excluded by the order for, and execution of, the extras. Held further (Boyd, J., dissenting), that, as it appeared that the plaintiff had been prevented from completing within the contract time by the extra works ordered, the penalty clause of the contract was extinguished, and the plaintiff was entitled to judgment on his claim. Gallivan v. Killarney Urban Council, [1912] 2 Ir. Time Limit—Impossibility of Performance within Stipulated Time.]—A firm of joiners contracted to perform the joiner work on certain buildings which were to be erected, and undertook to complete their department of the work by a specified date. The building owners entered into similar contracts with other tradesmen for other departments of the work, except that the plasterer was not bound to complete his work within any specified time. Owing to delay in the execution of the mason's and plasterer's contracts it became impossible for the joiners to complete their work within the stipulated time; but they completed their work with all reasonable dispatch after it became possible for them to proceed with it. The building owner resisted an action by the joiners for payment for the work done under the contract, on the ground that the pursuers, having failed to complete the work within the stipulated time, were in breach of their contract:—Held, that in the circumstances the pursuers were absolved from the obligation of the time limit, and decree for payment was granted; per Lord Dundas, on the ground that it was a condition precedent of the contract that the pursuers should obtain timeous access to the premises on which the work was to be performed, and that, if this was withheld from them by any cause, they were proportionally freed from the operation of the time limit; per Lord Salvesen, on the ground that the impossibility of performance was caused by the act or omission of the building owner, in respect that he had failed to fix a time limit for the completion of the plasterer's contract; and per Lord Guthrie, on both of the above grounds. Duncanson v. Scottish County Investment Co., [1915] S. D. REMUNERATION.

Work Done on Land by Builder in Expectation of Lease — Discontinuance of Work by Builder—Benefit to Freeholder—Implied Contract to Pay for Work.]—The plaintiff, who was a builder, entered into an arrangement under which he was to erect a building on a piece of land upon the terms that the building should be in accordance with the requirements of the freeholder of the land, who upon its completion should give the plaintiff a lease of of premises at 90*l.* a year, and that the plaintiff should sub-let them at 500*l.* a year. At that time the intended freeholder was one W., and in the course of certain negotiations between the various persons interested in the speculation, but before they had finally come to terms, certain drawings of a portion of the work were shewn to the plaintiff, and he was asked to begin the work. He accordingly did so, and had proceeded with the work for some time, incurring considerable expense in executing the same, when it was arranged that in place of W. the defendant should become the freeholder, and an alteration in the character of the building was insisted on, which the plaintiff was unwilling to accept on the ground that it would involve a considerably larger expenditure on his part than he had originally contemplated. He therefore discontinued the work, and eventually brought an action against the defendants to recover compensation for the amount which he had expended on the same:—Held, that, the arrangement being one under which the plaintiff was to erect the building at his own cost on the defendant's land, no promise to pay him for the work executed by him could be implied from the request to him to start the work, nor from the acceptance by the defendant of the benefit of the work. Wheeler v. Stratton, 105 L. T. 786—D.

Obligation on Contractor to Complete Building by Specified Date—Wrongful Temporary Exclusion of Contractor from Site by Third Person — Consequent Loss to Contractor — Implied Warranty by Building Owner against such Wrongful Exclusion—Implied Warranty of Use of Land not Vested in Building Owner — Alleged Change in Circumstances making Contract Inapplicable.] — A contract between the plaintiff and the defendants, an urban council, provided that the plaintiff should build a school for the defendants upon land belonging to them, that he should be entitled to enter on the site immediately, and that he should complete the work by a specified time under penalties. The only access to the site was from a certain road, and, as the soil of the defendants' land was soft, and the side of the road adjoining that land had not been made up and was also soft, the contract further provided that the plaintiff might lay a temporary sleeper roadway from the road to the site. The contract also provided that, when the sleeper roadway was removed, the plaintiff should make a permanent pathway from the road to the site, and a gateway on the boundary of the defendants' land, and should do certain incidental paving work on the adjoining portion of the road. The plaintiff entered upon the land and commenced work, but was forced to abandon it in consequence of certain claims and the threat of an injunction by R., a third person, the owner of the soil under the road, who alleged that he had not dedicated to the public the unmade-up side of the road, and that that consequently was not a public highway, but his private property, upon which the plaintiff was not entitled to enter. As the result of legal proceedings by the defendants, R.'s claims were held to be unfounded, and the plaintiff resumed and completed the work. The side of the road adjoining the defendants' land did not become a street vested in the defendants as local authority, of which they could give the plaintiff possession for the purpose of doing the work intended to be done thereon, until the plaintiff had executed the greater part of the building work under the contract. The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants, claiming damages in respect of the delay caused by the action of R.:—Held, that there was no implied warranty by the defendants against wrongful interference by third parties with the plaintiff's free access to the site; that there was no implied warranty by the defendants that the plaintiff should be entitled to have possession of and do work upon the portion of the road adjoining the entrance until after the sleeper roadway had been removed, which meant, until after the building work, or the greater part of it, had been completed; that there was no evidence of any request by the defendants to the plaintiff that he should stop work; and that the fact that the plaintiff was prevented from laying sleepers in the unmade-up part of the road did not render the performance of the contract commercially impossible, or constitute so complete a change in the circumstances contemplated by the parties that the contract was no longer applicable to them; and, consequently, that the plaintiff was not entitled to recover. Porter v. Tottenham Urban Council, 84 L. J. K.B. 1041; [1915] 1 K.B. 776; 112 L. T. 711; 79 J. P. 169; 13 L. G. R. 216; 31 T. L. R. 97—C.A.

Lump Sum Contract — Defects in Work — Right to Recover—Quantum Meruit.]—Certain builders entered into a contract to carry out a large number of alterations and repairs to a house in accordance with specifications for a lump sum of 264*l.* In an action by the builders to recover this sum the official referee found that the builders had failed to complete the contract in the following particulars: First, the concrete used to underpin a wall was not in accordance with the specifications either as to quality or quantity; secondly, certain rolled steel joists supplied had not been bolted at the top in accordance with the specifications; and thirdly, solid columns, four inches in diameter, had been supplied in place of hollow columns, five inches in diameter. He therefore held that the plaintiffs were not entitled to be paid anything under the contract:—Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the lump sum of 264*l.*, subject to a deduction of the amount necessary to make the work correspond with that contracted to be done. The defects and omissions in the work amounted only to a negligent performance of the contract and not to an abandonment of or failure to complete the contract. Dakin & Co. v. Lee, 84 L. J. K.B. 2031; 59 S. J. 650—C.A.

Decision of the Divisional Court (84 L. J. K.B. 894) affirmed. Ib.

Deviations Sanctioned by Architect—Buildings Accepted on Completion.]—A builder entered into a contract to erect a building in accordance with certain plans and in conformity with a detailed estimate of prices. The building was erected under the supervision of the employers' architect, who during the course of erection sanctioned certain deviations from the details of the building set forth in the estimate. As the building proceeded the architect granted the usual certificates, and the instalments of the contract price were duly paid. When the building was completed the employers accepted it and entered into possession. On the builder suing them for the unpaid balance of the contract price the employers resisted payment, on the ground that, in respect of these deviations, the building was not conform to contract:—Held (Lord Skerrington dissenting), that the builder was entitled to recover the balance of the contract price—per the Lord President, on the ground that, although the architect had no authority to sanction the deviations, and consequently a breach of contract had taken place, the defenders' remedy in the circumstances was limited to a claim of damages for which they had no record in the present action; per Lord Johnston, on the ground that, as the details in the contract and estimate were lacking in precision and ambiguous, it was within the power of the architect to determine how the work was to be carried out. Ramsay v. Brand (25 R. 1212) and Steel v. Young ([1907] S. C. 360) discussed and doubted. Forrest v. Scottish County Investment Co., [1915] S. C. 115—Ct. of Sess.

Part of Work to be Supplied by Particular Maker—Inefficiency of Part Supplied.]—The plaintiffs, a firm of engineers, undertook to execute certain works in accordance with specifications. Under the contract, a windmill had to be obtained from certain makers, which, when supplied, proved inefficient. Delay took place in the completion of the contract, and the defendants purported to act upon the forfeiture clause. The plaintiffs then, treating the contract as wrongfully terminated by the defendants, sued them on a quantum meruit:—Held, that the plaintiffs were not liable for defects in the windmill, and that they were entitled to recover. Bower v. Chapel-en-le-Frith Rural Council, 75 J. P. 122; 9 L. G. R. 339—Lawrance, J. New trial ordered, 75 J. P. 321; 9 L. G. R. 663—C.A.

False Representation as to Nature of Work —Fraudulent Party Barred from Relying on Conditions in his Favour.]—A railway company invited tenders for the construction of a line of railway, and for the information of intending offerers exhibited what purported to be a journal of bores taken along the proposed line. A lump sum written contract was concluded, which stated that the company did not guarantee the accuracy of the bores, and would not be liable for claims in respect of any error in, or omission from, the specification of work prepared by them. The contractors were also taken bound (inter alia) to make good any injury to water pipes caused by their operations. During the progress of the work it was discovered that the nature of the ground was materially different from that which the journal represented it to be, and it ultimately appeared that the bores had been taken by servants of the company, who, as the company knew, had no skill in such work, and that the so-called "journal" was not a record kept by the borers, but was compiled by the company's engineer from notes supplied by the borers. In compiling the "journal," the engineer had in several instances inserted, not what the borers said, but what the engineer thought they meant, with the result that ground was called "soft" when in reality it consisted, and had been reported by the borers to consist, of hard material. It was also discovered that a bridge required to be built at great expense to carry certain water pipes, the existence of which was perfectly well known to the railway company, but was not disclosed by them to the contractors. In consequence of these circumstances the work cost far more than the contract price, on account both of the extra labour required and of the disorganisation caused by the unexpected obstacles. The contractors made frequent protests while the work was in progress, but were induced to continue by assurances on the part of the company, and by some extra payments. After the completion of the line, in an action by the contractors against the railway company,—Held, that the contractors were entitled to recover in respect of the extra cost of construction a reasonable compensation therefor, either in name of quantum meruit or in name of damages. Boyd & Forrest v. Glasgow and South-Western Railway, [1911] S. C. 33—Ct. of Sess. Reversed on the facts, [1913] A.C. 404—H.L. (Sc.)

Contract for making Railway Siding—Necessity for Detailed Account of Claim.]—In a contract for the construction of a railway siding entered into between a railway company and a quarry master it was stipulated that the company should construct certain works and that the quarry master should thereafter pay to the company—first, the cost of the labour expended on the works, and, secondly, interest on the value of materials used in connection therewith, as such cost and interest should be determined by the engineer of the company. The company having rendered an account of sums said to be due under the contract, certified by their engineer, in which the cost of labour and the value of the materials employed were stated as lump sums and without details, the quarry master refused to pay the account, and the company thereupon sued him to enforce payment:—Held, that the action must be dismissed as premature on the ground that the pursuers had made no proper demand under the contract, and that, although the contract made the engineer the final judge of the amount due, this did not absolve the company from the necessity of giving particulars of their claim. Held, further, that as the reference to the engineer was a reference to him as a man of skill, he was entitled to arrive at his determination by whatever methods he chose, and was not bound to take evidence or hear parties. North British Railway v. Wilson, [1911] S. C. 730—Ct. of Sess.

Arbitration Clause—Reference of Matters to Building Owners' Architect — Payments on Certificate of Arbitrator — Improper Delay in Issue of Final Certificate — Architect Improperly Influenced by Building Owners—Disqualification.]—Under a building contract the decision of the architect of the building owners relating to any matters or thing or the goodness or sufficiency of any work, or the extent or value of any extra or omitted work, was to be final, conclusive, and binding on all parties; and payments as the work proceeded were to be made on the certificate of the architect. The architect having taken a wrong view of his position and being improperly influenced by the building owners, delayed issuing his certificate for the outstanding balance due to the contractor. After the work had been completed and after the period of maintenance had expired, the contractor brought an action against the building owners to recover the balance due to him. After the commencement of the action the architect issued his final certificate:—Held, that the building owners could not, as a defence to the action, rely on the issue of the certificate being a condition precedent to the right of the contractor to commence proceedings for the recovery of the balance, or on the certificate itself as being when issued an adjudication, as to the amount of the claim, which was binding on the contractor. Hickman v. Roberts, 82 L. J. K.B. 678; [1913] A.C. 229; 108 L. T. 436*n*.—H.L. (E.)

Whether Certificate of Engineer Condition Precedent to Action.] — A contract for the supply of machinery contained provisions for payment of the price by certain instalments to be paid after production of the certificate of the purchasers' engineer that such instalments were due and payable. A portion of the machinery having been rejected by the purchasers, an action was brought by the sellers for the unpaid balance of the purchase price without production of the engineer's certificate that the balance sued for was due and payable:—Held, on the construction of the contract, that the production of a certificate from the engineer had not been made a condition precedent to the right to recover payment, and accordingly that the action was competent. Howden v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., [1912] S. C. 920—Ct. of Sess.

"Retention money"—Charge on.]—A building contract provided that the contractor should, at his own cost, complete and deliver to a rural council on or before the date fixed the whole of certain sewage works for a lump sum; but a clause in the conditions incorporated in the contract provided as follows: "The contractor shall be entitled to payment for his work in manner following: the work shall be measured monthly and 80 per cent. of the value of the work executed shall be paid to the contractor upon the engineer's certificate. When the whole of the works have been certified as duly completed a further sum of 15 per cent. shall be paid, and the balance within six months after the works shall have been delivered up to the council and shall have been certified by the engineer to be completed. . . ." The plaintiffs were mortgagees of moneys payable to the contractor under the contract. At the time of the granting of the mortgage the contractor had already given the defendants a charge on his retention money under the contract. On a question as to what was assigned to the defendants as retention money,—Held, that in making the assignment the contractor intended, and was understood by the defendants as intending, to include not only the 5 per cent., but also the 15 per cent., as retention money. West Yorkshire Bank v. Isherwood, 76 J. Injury by Premeditated Assault.]—"Accident" in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, includes any injury not expected or designed by the injured workman himself, and therefore a premeditated injury inflicted on a workman in the course of his employment, in pursuance of a criminal conspiracy against him, may be an "accident" within the meaning of the Act. Nisbet v. Rayne & Burn (80 L. J. K.B. 84; [1910] 2 K.B. 689) and Anderson v. Balfour ([1910] 2 Ir. R. 497) approved. Murray v. Denholm & Co. ([1911]

S. C. 1087) disapproved. Trim Joint District School v. Kelly, 83 L. J. P.C. 220; [1914] A.C. 667; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 359; 111 L. T. 305; 58 S. J. 493; 30 T. L. R. 452—H.L. (Ir.)

Judgment of the Court of Appeal in Ireland (47 Ir. L. T. 151; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 401) affirmed, Lord Dunedin, Lord Atkinson, and Lord Parker dissenting. Ib.

One of a party of workmen, employed in a woodyard to take the place of others who were on strike, was injured by the attacks of the strikers, who rushed the police guarding the yard and assaulted the workers:—Held, that this was not a case of injury by accident within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Anderson v. Balfour ([1910] 2 Ir. R. 497) and Nisbet v. Rayne (80 L. J. K.B. 84; [1910] 2 K.B. 689) disapproved. Murray v. Denholm, [1911] S. C. 1087—Ct. of Sess.

Per The Lord Justice-Clerk and Lord Salvesen; dub. Lord Dundas: The accident, if it was an accident, did not arise "out of" the employment. Ib.

Assault by Employer.]—The applicant, an errand boy in the service of the respondent, was, while at work, attacked by the respondent with a chopper and so severely injured as to be totally incapacitated. The respondent had been in an asylum and was subject to periodical fits of melancholia:—Held, that the applicant's injuries were not caused by "accident." Blake v. Head, [1912] W.C. & I. Rep. 198; 106 L. T. 822; 28 T. L. R. 321—C.A.

Cashier—Special Risk—Duty to Carry about Money—Robbery and Murder.]—A cashier was employed by certain colliery owners, and it was part of his regular duty to take weekly large sums of money from his employers' office to their colliery by rail for the payment of the wages of the colliers. Whilst he was thus engaged he was robbed and murdered in the train. His widow applied for compensation:—Held, that the murder was an "accident" within section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that it arose not only in the course of, but also out of, the employment. Nisbet v. Rayne, 80 L. J. K.B. 84; [1910] 2 K.B. 689; 103 L. T. 178; 54 S. J. 719; 26 T. L. R. 632—C.A.

Pneumonia Caused by Inhaling Carbon-monoxide Gas.]—A miner in a coal mine who had fired a shot returned three minutes afterwards to the working place, while it was still full of smoke. Soon after he felt ill, and ultimately developed pneumonia, of which he died, the pneumonia being caused by the inhalation of carbon-monoxide gas. In proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act it was proved that the firing of shots was of daily occurrence at the miner's working place; that the firing of the shots generated carbon-monoxide gas in quantities which varied with the ventilation; and that on former occasions the miner had frequently suffered from headache, giddiness, and nausea through inhaling the gas. The arbitrator having found that the death of the miner resulted from injury by accident, the Court refused to disturb his decision, holding that the unexplained and unforeseen presence of the gas in fatal quantity on the occasion in question might reasonably be said to be an "accident." Kelly v. Auchenlea Coal Co., [1911] S. C. 864—Ct. of Sess.

Death from Disease — Ptomaine Poisoning Caused by Sewer Gas—"Injury by accident" — Notice of Accident — Delay — "Reasonable cause."]—Except in the case of the industrial diseases scheduled in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to which by section 8 the provisions of the Act are to apply, unless the applicant can indicate the time, the day, and circumstance and place in which the accident has occurred, by means of some definite event, a disease cannot be treated as a personal "injury by accident" within section 1, subsection 1 of the Act, and the applicant is not entitled to compensation. Eke v. Hart-Dyke, 80 L. J. K.B. 90; [1910] 2 K.B. 677; 103 L. T. 174; 26 T. L. R. 613—C.A.

In July, 1909, a gardener and labourer and caretaker was ordered by his employer to open certain cesspools for the purpose of inspection, and was engaged in such work on four or five different days. Early in August he became unwell, and on August 23 saw a doctor, who thought he was suffering from the smell of paint. In September another doctor saw him and considered that he was affected with sewer-gas poisoning. He died on October 30, 1909, but no notice was given to his employer until December 30. His widow took proceedings for compensation. The application for arbitration gave no date as to when the alleged accident occurred. It was admitted that the man's disease was obscure. The County Court Judge found that it was not possible to give any particular day as the date of the accident, but he decided that the man died from poisoning contracted whilst working on the cesspools, and that the employer was not prejudiced in his defence by want of notice; and he awarded compensation:—Held, that the second limb of proviso (a) in sub-section 1 of section 2 of the Act of 1906 had nothing to do with the prejudice caused to the employer by the want of notice, which was dealt with in the first limb, but said that the want of notice should not be a bar to proceedings for compensation if such want was occasioned by a reasonable cause; and that under the circumstances there was "reasonable cause" for not giving the notice. But held (Kennedy, L.J., doubting), that there had not been an accident within the meaning of the Act, that the County Court Judge's finding was not sufficient to support his decision, and that consequently no compensation was payable. Ib.

Brintons, Lim. v. Turvey (74 L. J. K.B. 474; [1905] A.C. 230) distinguished. Broderick v. London County Council (77 L. J. K.B. 1127; [1908] 2 K.B. 807) explained. Ib.

Incapacity Due to Heart Disease.]—A workman while engaged in lifting a weight in the course of his employment felt a pain in the breast followed by palpitation of the heart. It was proved that he was found to be suffering from heart disease of long standing which was bound to manifest itself sooner or later and probably in the way described; and that from that time his condition became gradually worse until, eventually, he became permanently incapacitated for work as a result of the diseased state of his heart. It was not proved that the lifting of the weight had accelerated the progress of the disease :—Held, that on these facts the arbitrator was entitled to find, as he did, that the workman had failed to prove that his incapacity was due to an "accident" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Clover, Clayton & Co. v. Hughes (79 L. J. K.B. 470; [1910] A.C. 242) distinguished. Spence v. Baird & Co., [1912] S. C. 343; [1912] W.C. Rep. 18—Ct. of Sess.

Accident Causing Loss of Finger — Subsequent Employment in Different Work — Inflammation of Hand — Liability of First Employer.]—In 1902 a workman employed as a riveter met with an accident resulting in the amputation of his forefinger. His employers paid compensation, and the workman, having to all appearance completely recovered, was in 1903 taken on to the lighter employment of a caulker at usual wages by the same employers. In 1910 the hand became inflamed as the result of the workman using a new pneumatic hammer, and the workman claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for injury arising out of the 1902 accident. The County Court Judge found that the 1902 accident was a contributory cause to the injury, and made an award in the workman's favour :—Held, that the question whether the 1902 accident was a contributing cause was irrelevant, and that the claim was misconceived. Held, also, that there was no evidence to justify the County Court Judge in finding that the first accident was a contributing cause. Noden v. Galloways, Lim., 81 L. J. K.B. 28; [1912] 1 K.B. 46; [1912] W.C. Rep. 63; 105 L. T. 567; 55 S. J. 838; 28 T. L. R. 5—C.A.

Cut Finger—Septic Infection—Amputation Necessitated.]—A workman while at his home cut the forefinger of his right hand slightly with an ordinary clean household knife. He sucked the wound, bound it up with a clean rag, and afterwards returned to his work as fireman on a railway. While so engaged, coal dust, oil, grease, and other noxious matter worked through the bandage into the cut, septic infection supervened, and eventually the forefinger had to be amputated :—Held, that to attribute the septic infection to the workman's employment was at best a mere "surmise, conjecture, or guess," there being many possible sources of infection; and that therefore the workman's claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for compensation failed. Chandler v. Great Western Railway, [1912] W.C. Rep. 169; 106 L. T. 479—C.A.

Pneumonia Following upon Chill—Chill Due to Partial Immersion in Water Accumulating in Pit.]—During the working time in a coal pit, which was a wet pit, water began to accumulate owing to a defect in the pump; and the pump being stopped for repair, the water accumulated still further. When the miners found the water rising they decided to leave the pit, and hastened to the pit bottom, where they were kept waiting for twenty minutes, during which time they were severely chilled by the water, which rose to their knees, and by exposure to the current of cold air descending the shaft. One of these miners on reaching the pit head lingered there for at least twenty minutes, and on arriving at his home complained of chill, and next day suffered from a cough, hoarseness, and pains, but went to his work. After several days—on three of which he worked at the pit—he was found to be suffering from pneumonia, of which he ultimately died :—Held (Lord Salvesen dissenting), that the occurrence in the mine on the day in question was an "accident," and that there was evidence on which the arbitrator might competently find that the deceased's pneumonia was due to that occurrence. Drylie v. Alloa Coal Co., [1912] S. C. 549; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 213—Ct. of Sess.

In consequence of an accident in one of the shafts of a mine the workmen were withdrawn, and, as only one shaft was available, some of the men were kept waiting for a long time at the bottom of the shaft before they could be brought up, and were exposed to a current of cold air. In consequence one of them got a bad chill which turned to pneumonia, of which he died :—Held, that his death was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and that his dependants were entitled to compensation. Drylie v. Alloa Coal Co. ([1913] S. C. 549) approved. Brown v. Watson, Lim., 83 L. J. P.C. 307; [1915] A.C. 1; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 228; 111 L. T. 347; 58 S. J. 533; 30 T. L. R. 501—H.L. (Sc.)

Judgment of the Second Division of the Court of Session in Scotland ([1913] S. C. 593; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 233) reversed. Ib.

Pleurisy Following upon Chill.]—A collector and canvasser, who had contracted pleurisy, claimed compensation from his employers averring that in order to finish his work timeously one day he had to over-exert himself in climbing the stairs of a tenement; that he became "sweated" and contracted a chill which developed into pleurisy, and that he thus sustained an accident in the course of his employment. The arbitrator, without allowing a proof, dismissed the application as irrelevant, holding that the workman had failed to aver an "accident" within the meaning of the Act :—Held, that the arbitrator was right. M'Millan v. Singer Sewing Machine Co., [1913] S. C. 346; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 70—Ct. of Sess.

Deafness Following upon Chill — Miner Voluntarily Waiting in Water Accumulated in Mine through Breakdown of Pump.]—A miner, about to ascend to the surface at the end of his shift, in order to be among the first to obtain a place in the cage, stood for upwards of thirty minutes in a pool of water which had accumulated in the pit bottom owing to a defect in the pump. If he had waited his turn upon dry ground, as he might have done, he could have reached the cage comparatively dry. Owing to the wetting he contracted a chill which produced deafness, causing incapacity :—Held, that the incapacity was not due to injury by accident within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1903. Drylie v. Alloa Coal Co. (supra) distinguished. M'Luckie v. Watson, Lim., [1913] S. C. 975—Ct. of Sess.

Pilot Jumping into Boat — Getting Wet — Sciatica.]—A man was employed as a pilot to take a ketch out of harbour. Having piloted her out, he attempted to get into his own boat, towing astern of the ketch, in order to go ashore. He jumped in, alighting somewhere near the bows of the boat, with the result that they went under water, and he was wetted to the thighs. He was pulled aboard the ketch again. He ultimately got ashore in the boat. Subsequently he suffered from sciatica in consequence of this wetting :—Held, that he was suffering from injury by "accident," and that the accident arose "out of and in the course of" his employment within section 1, subsection 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Barbeary v. Chugg, 84 L. J. K.B. 504; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 174; 112 L. T. 797; 31 T. L. R. 153—C.A.

Accident Causing Idleness, and Idleness Producing Obesity.]—The respondent, a workman employed by the appellants, was injured by an accident arising out and in the course of his employment. The appellants paid him compensation for three years, and then made an application for a review of the payments, on the ground that he had recovered from the effects of the accident. The evidence was that the incapacity resulting from the injuries had ceased, but that enforced idleness for three years in consequence of the accident had caused the respondent, who was an elderly man with a natural tendency to obesity, to become so obese as to incapacitate him for his former active employment, and make him capable of sedentary employment only. The arbitrator found that he was partially incapacitated from work, but that such incapacity did not result from the accident, and terminated the compensation :—Held, that he was justified in so doing on the evidence. Taylor & Co. v. Clark, 84 L. J. P.C. 14; 111 L. T. 882; 58 S. J. 738—H.L. (Sc.)

Decision of the First Division of the Court of Session in Scotland ([1914] S. C. 432; 51 Sc. L. R. 418) reversed. Ib.

Accident Causing Disease and Ultimately Death—Workman Quite Healthy before Accident — After-effects of Operation Immediate Cause of Death—Effect of Medical Evidence.]—A workman received a heavy blow on his back by accident in the course of his employment, and was incapacitated for over three months. He was able to resume work for six months, but was never as well as he had always been before the accident. He was operated upon for acute kidney trouble, and the operation was successful, but revealed the possibility that other causes than the accident might have brought about his condition. He ultimately died from the after-effects of a subsequent operation intended to heal the scar caused by the first one :—Held, that, having regard in particular to the fact that he had always been in good health before the accident, there was evidence from which the inference that his death was thereby caused was properly drawn. Lewis v. Port of London Authority, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 299; 111 L. T. 776; 58 S. J. 686—C.A.

Workman Suffering from Disease — Death Accelerated.]—Where a workman is suffering from an internal disease of some standing, the symptoms of which became acute immediately after an accident in the course of his employment, and of which he dies within a short time, the arbitrator, in proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is justified in finding that the death was accelerated by the accident, and in awarding compensation to the workman's dependants. Woods v. Wilson, Sons & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1067; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 285; 113 L. T. 243; 59 S. J. 348; 31 T. L. R. 273—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 569; 29 T. L. R. 726) reversed (Lord Parker and Lord Sumner dissenting). Ib.

Death Due to Heart Failure.]—In an arbitration, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator found that a farm labourer, apparently in good health, died suddenly while engaged, in the course of his ordinary work, in lifting baskets of corn to feed a bruising machine; that the cause of death was "failure of the heart"; and that "a contributing cause of the failure of the heart's action was the strain arising from the exertion made by the deceased in repeatedly stooping to fill the basket with corn and then lifting it when full up to the level of his shoulders in order to feed the bruiser" :—Held, that there were no facts stated from which the arbitrator could competently infer that the death was due to injury by accident within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, since there was no particular event or occurrence to which the death could be attributed. Clover, Clayton & Co. v. Hughes (79 L. J. K.B. 470; [1910] A.C. 242) distinguished. Ritchie v. Kerr, [1913] S. C. 613; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 297—Ct. of Sess.

Death from Heart Weakness Set up by Operation—Operation not Confined to Injury Caused by Accident.]—A workman accidentally ruptured himself in the course of his employment and was obliged to undergo an operation for hernia. In the course of the operation he was discovered to be suffering also from another hernia of long standing, and both hernias were operated upon at the same time. He subsequently died, the cause of death being found to be heart weakness and degeneracy "set up by the strain of the operation." In defence to a claim for compensation the employers maintained that, death being due to an operation part of which only was rendered necessary by the accident, the operation was a novus actus intervening to break the chain of causation between the accident and the death :—Held, that on the facts stated there was evidence to justify the arbitrator in finding that death was the result of the accident the workman had sustained in the course of his employment. Thomson v. Mutter, Howey & Co., [1913] S. C. 619; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 241—Ct. of Sess.

Death Accelerated by Workman's Conduct.]—An accident to a workman in the course of his employment brought on pneumonia, and he was sent into hospital. After being there three days he insisted on leaving and walking home, although warned by the doctor at the hospital that this was dangerous to life. Two days later he died at home, the immediate cause of death being pneumonia. In an application by his widow for compensation, the arbitrator obtained a report from a medical referee which stated that the workman's "folly in leaving the hospital probably accelerated his death," but that this circumstance could not "disestablish the conclusion that but for the accident" the workman "would not have died how and when he did die." On considering the report and the facts of the case, the arbitrator "found in fact that but for the accident the deceased would not have died at the time at which and in the way in which he did die, and found, in fact and law, that the said injury by accident was thus the cause of the death." On appeal by the employer,—Held, that it was the duty of the arbitrator to decide, in terms of the actual words of the First Schedule, whether the workman's death had "resulted" from the accident; and as the arbitrator in his finding had not decided that question, the case should be remitted to him to do so and report. The arbitrator having thereafter reported that he found as a fact that the death "resulted" from the accident, the Court, holding that there was evidence on which he was justified in coming to this conclusion, affirmed his decision. Dunnigan v. Cavan and Lind, [1911] S. C. 579—Ct. of Sess.

Death from Disease Following on an Accident.]—A workman had a fall from a ladder whereby his ankle was injured, and he also suffered from severe pains and general shock. He was thereafter confined to bed, and although the injury to his ankle improved, he continued to suffer pain and remained in a low state of health, until about a month after the accident he was seized with violent internal pains and died, the cause of death being certified as appendicitis peritonitis. In an arbitration upon a claim by his widow for compensation, in which two doctors were examined for each side, there was a conflict of medical evidence, one doctor for the claimant being of opinion that it was probable that the workman "would have been alive now had he not met with the accident," the other being of opinion that the condition of which the workman died "was consequent, indirect if you will, of the accident," and that "in all probability" he "would not have died but for the accident." The two doctors examined for the respondents could see no connection between the accident and the cause of death. The arbitrator having found that the death was the result of the accident,—Held, that there was evidence upon which that judgment could be supported. Euman v. Dalziel & Co., [1913] S. C. 246; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 49—Ct. of Sess.

Incapacity—Supervening Disease—Effect of Disease to Aggravate Injury.]—A workman met with an accident to his knee in the course of his employment. A slight operation became necessary and was successfully performed, but three or four days later the workman developed scarlet fever. The wound subsequently suppurated and the knee joint had to be excised, thereby causing incapacity. The medical evidence was that the suppuration might have been caused by the scarlet fever, but that, apart from the accident, it could not have had that effect. On an application by the workman to recover compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906,—Held, that it followed from the medical evidence that the incapacity resulted from the accident. Brown v. Kent, Lim., 82 L. J. K.B. 1039; [1913] 3 K.B. 624; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 639; 109 L. T. 293; 29 T. L. R. 702—C.A.

Once it is established that the incapacity of a workman has been caused by an accident, it makes no difference that a fresh cause, arising casually and uninvited by any special condition of the workman, may have aggravated the injury resulting from the accident and contributed to the incapacity. Ib.

Return to Work after Accident—Supervening Aneurism.]—A miner strained his back on December 7, 1911, and in consequence became incapacitated for work. On May 1, 1912, a medical referee certified that he would be able to resume his usual work in three weeks, and he returned to work on May 27. He continued to work, doing a full shift at the coal face until August 15, when he became totally incapacitated, and was found to be suffering from dilatation of the heart caused by an aneurism of the aorta. He did not feel pain in the cardiac region until July, and the doctors who had attended him previously, including the medical referee, had not noticed any symptoms of heart trouble. In a claim for compensation the arbitrator was of opinion that the aneurism was caused by the miner being engaged between May and August at work which was beyond his physical powers, and found that his present incapacity was not due to the accident of December 7 :—Held, that the arbitrator was entitled to arrive at that decision. Paton v. Dixon, Lim., [1913] S. C. 1120—Ct. of Sess.

Incapacity Caused by Accident — Incapacity Caused by Disease — Each Cause Operating Independently — Each Cause Equally Disabling.]—A workman met with an accident in the course of his employment. His employers admitted liability and paid him a weekly compensation by arrangement with him and not under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. On May 20, 1912, they stopped payment of the compensation on the advice of doctors who reported that the workman was suffering from heart disease. On July 5, 1912, the workman commenced arbitration proceedings claiming compensation from May 20, 1912. The County Court Judge found that the heart disease was not caused by the accident; that the workman was suffering from partial incapacity for work caused by two things—by the accident and also by the heart disease, each cause operating independently of the other; and that there was no work which the accident prevented him from doing which the heart disease did not also prevent him from doing. On these findings,—Held, that as the incapacity caused by the accident still continued, the workman, notwithstanding the subsequently supervening cause of incapacity, was entitled to compensation under section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Harwood v. Wyken Colliery Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 414; [1913] 2 K.B. 158; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 317; 108 L. T. 282; 57 S. J. 300; 29 T. L. R. 290—C.A.

Incapacity for Work—Loss of Eye—Subsequent Accident making the Loss Apparent.]—A workman many years back, while in the service of a different employer, met with an accident through which he lost the sight of one eye, but the loss was not apparent, and he was able to obtain employment at usual wages as if his sight had been normal. In 1910, while in the service of the respondents, he met with a second accident which necessitated the removal of the blind eye and rendered the loss apparent, as the result of which, though now completely recovered, he was unable to obtain further employment in his trade :—Held (dissentiente Fletcher Moulton, L.J.), that as the second accident did not cause a physical incapacity, but only revealed a pre-existing incapacity, the workman was not now entitled to compensation under the Act. Ball v. Hunt, 80 L. J. K.B. 655; [1911] 1 K.B. 1048; 104 L. T. 327; 55 S. J. 383; 27 T. L. R. 323—C.A.

Per Fletcher Moulton, L.J. : The words "incapacity for work" in Schedule I. clause 1 (b) ought not to be limited to mere loss of physical power, but include inability to find employment as a workman resulting from the injury. A workman guarantees his ability to do the work for which he is employed, but he is under no obligation to disclose his physical defects to his employer. Ib.

Rupture of Aneurism of Aorta — Rupture Caused by Strain in Performance of Ordinary Work—Natural and Inevitable Termination of Disease.]—A workman, who was fifty years of age, had been employed at the respondents' tin sheds for ten years. On October 5, 1914, while shifting tin plates from a pile to a trolly, he stood on the trolly and was pulling a box weighing 2cwt. towards him with a tool when his hands let go and he fell backwards dead off the trolly on to the floor. His death was discovered by a post-mortem examination to have been caused by rupture of an aneurism of the aorta. Sticking the tool into and drawing the box forward was the easiest part of the work; the heavier was lifting the boxes when the shed heap had got lower than the heap on the trolly. The medical evidence was to the effect that it was the continued strain of ten years' work and the walls of the arteries gradually getting weaker accounted for the condition of the workman; that the strain in pulling the box forward was quite sufficient to cause the rupture of the aneurism, that being the culminating point; and that the cause of his death was the natural and inevitable termination of his disease, the final burst being practically instantaneous :—Held, that there was clearly an "accident" within the meaning of the statutory provision as construed by the House of Lords in Fenton v. Thorley & Co. (72 L. J. K.B. 787; [1903] A.C. 443); and that the facts of the present case were practically indistinguishable from those of Clover, Clayton & Co. v. Hughes (79 L. J. K.B. 470; [1910] A.C. 242). McArdle v. Swansea Harbour Trust, [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 448; 113 L. T. 677—C.A.

Recurrence of Rupture—No Proof of Specific Accident.]—A farm labourer, while engaged in his employment, had a recurrence of an old rupture, which became strangulated and caused his death. There was no proof of anything specific having happened to him to cause the rupture to recur, and the arbitrator refused compensation to the workman's dependants on the ground that it was not proved that the workman had met with an accident : —Held, that it could not be said that the arbitrator had come to an unreasonable decision. Walker v. Murray, [1911] S. C. 825 —Ct. of Sess.

Trawler on Fishing Voyage — Admiralty Directions to Master to Avoid Mine Field—Trawler Traversing Mine Field Blown up by Mine—Injury to Engineer.]—The master of a steam trawler proceeding upon a fishing voyage was warned by the Admiralty of an enemy's mine field, and directed to steer a roundabout course which would avoid it. In spite of these instructions he steered an easterly course directly through the mine field towards his fishing ground. While the vessel was in the mine field he saw some mines, which he buoyed, and then steered southward to warn some warships, which he saw in that direction, of the mines. While on this course the vessel struck another mine and was blown up. The chief engineer was severely injured by the explosion, and claimed compensation. He was unaware of the Admiralty instructions :—Held, that the injury was caused by "accident," and that, as it happened while the engineer was carrying out the lawful orders of the master, it arose "out of and in the course of" the employment within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Risdale v. "Kilmarnock" (Owners), 84 L. J. K.B. 298; [1915] 1 K.B. 503; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 141; 112 L. T. 439; 59 S. J. 145; 31 T. L. R. 134—C.A.

Obedience to Directions of Superior Workman—Enlargement of Scope of Employment.]

—Obedience to the directions of a superior fellow workman may so enlarge the scope of employment of a workman that an accident resulting from an act done in accordance with those directions, although in contravention of the express regulations of the employer, may entitle the workman to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, inasmuch as to impose upon a workman the duty of ascertaining the authority of a superior fellow workman to give such directions would be to lay upon him an obligation which in many cases it would be impossible for him to discharge. Geary v. Ginzler, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 314; 108 L. T. 286—C.A.

—— Workman Acting Reasonably and Within Ambit of his Employment.]—The applicant, who was employed as a lighterman by the respondent, received instructions from him to take on the early morning flood tide a barge which was lying in the river Thames to the south of midstream off a wharf to a certain place. While waiting until the tide had ebbed sufficient for him to reach the barge the applicant stepped into a boat that was lying on the mud to rest himself. In so doing he slipped with his foot caught under the thwart of the boat, and sustained injuries :—Held (dubitante Eve, J.), that the evidence was sufficient to support the finding that the applicant in going to rest in the boat was acting reasonably and within the ambit of his employment; and that therefore the accident which befell him arose "out of and in the course of" his employment, within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, entitling him to compensation. May v. Ison, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 40; 110 L. T. 525—C.A.

Scope of Employment—Direction to Find a Job—Extension of Scope of Employment.]—A boy, who was employed to take trucks full of wood away from a machine and stack them, was seen by his employer doing nothing, and was ordered to find a job. There was nothing for him to do in connection with the trucking, and so he started to clear up, this being work he had been put to two days before. He then found that the suction pipe or blower of the machine in connection with which he did the trucking was blocked up, and he took a stick and tried to clear it. While doing so he slipped and put his hand near a rotary saw forming part of the machine, with the result that he was incapacitated. The machine was a very complicated one, and there were four men and two boys to attend to it. It was part of the duty of a boy attending to the machine to clear the blower :—Held, that the order to find a job extended the sphere of the boy's employment so as to entitled him to engage himself on any boy's work that was not obviously improper for him to do, and therefore that the accident arose out of the boy's employment, and he was entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, s. 1. Lane v. Lusty, 84 L. J. K.B. 1342; [1915] 3 K.B. 230; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 326; 113 L. T. 615—C.A.

Assault by Employer.]—The applicant, an errand boy in the service of the respondent, was, while at work, attacked by the respondent with a chopper and so severely injured as to be totally incapacitated. The respondent had been in an asylum and was subject to periodical fits of melancholia :—Held, that the applicant's injuries were not caused by "accident" or by an accident arising out of the employment within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and therefore that the applicant was not entitled to compensation under the Act. Blake v. Head, [1912] W.C. Rep. 198; 106 L. T. 822; 28 T. L. R. 321—C.A.

Employment during Strike — Assault by Strikers — Special Bargain to Indemnify for Injury by Strikers—Enlargement of Course of Employment.]—A master engaged a servant who was a storekeeper to work for him as a carter during a strike, on the understanding that he would indemnify him for any injury that occurred to him as a result of doing such work :—Held, that this special contract did not enlarge the course of the servant's employment within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, so as to enable the servant to recover compensation under that statute for injuries sustained by him by being assaulted by strikers at a time that, in the absence of such enlargement, was not within the course of his employment. Poulton v. Kelsall, 81 L. J. K.B. 774; [1912] 2 K.B. 131; [1912] W.C. Rep. 295; 106 L. T. 522; 28 T. L. R. 320—C.A.

Felonious Assault—Death from Injury—Risk Incidental to Employment.] — In the afternoon of May 17, 1913, the yard foreman of a firm of furniture removers was assaulted in the yard by a man who was one of the odd-job men employed at times by the firm. The foreman died of his injuries. Among his duties were the taking on of those odd-job men and also letting out vans to any applicants. The day before the assault this man applied for a van for the morning of the following day, but failed to get it, as he came late. There was evidence of the rough character of the odd-job men, and the risk of assault from them when refused a job. There was no evidence of any risk in connection with letting out vans :—Held, that the risk of such an assault was incidental to the employment, and that the accident therefore arose out of and in the course of the employment within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, s. 1, sub-s. 1. Weekes v. Stead, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 1542; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 434; 111 L. T. 693; 58 S. J. 633; 30 T. L. R. 586—C.A.

Engine Driver—Injury by Bombardment—Whether Arising "out of" Employment.]—The appellant, who was an engine driver in the employment of the respondents, a railway company, was on duty with his engine between East and West Hartlepool at the time of the bombardment of Hartlepool by German warships in December, 1914. A shell burst close to him, and he left his engine and sought shelter behind some trucks, but went back to his engine to open the injector in order to prevent the boiler tubes from getting burnt.

When returning to shelter he was struck by a splinter of shell and wounded. On his filing a claim for compensation, the Judge dismissed the claim, holding that the appellant was not exposed to additional risk by reason of his being in charge of the engine and that therefore the accident did not arise "out of" his employment :—Held, on appeal, that as the appellant was not entitled to compensation unless he could prove that he was exposed by the nature of his employment to some special or peculiar risk beyond that of all other inhabitants of Hartlepool, the appeal must be dismissed. Cooper v. North-Eastern Railway, 85 L. J. K.B. 187; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 572; 60 S. J. 105; 32 T. L. R. 131—C.A.

Assault by Drunken Man.]—While a carter was in charge of his employers' horse and van in a street a drunken man approached and struck the horse. The carter warned the man that the horse might hurt him, and the man thereupon assaulted the carter and struck him a blow on the head from which he died. On a claim for compensation by the widow of the carter,—Held, that, assuming the occurrence to have been an "accident," it did not arise "out of" the employment, the risk of being assaulted by a drunken man not being in any way specially connected with or incidental to the employment of a carter; and that the widow was therefore not entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Warner v. Couchman (81 L. J. K.B. 45; [1912] A.C. 35; [1912] W.C. Rep. 28) followed. Mitchinson v. Day, 82 L. J. K.B. 421; [1913] 1 K.B. 603; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 324; 108 L. T. 193; 57 S. J. 300; 29 T. L. R. 267—C.A.

Per Buckley, L.J. : To entitle an applicant to compensation under the Act the occurrence must be one in which there is personal injury by something arising in a manner unexpected and unforeseen from a risk reasonably incidental to the employment. Ib.

A workman in an iron foundry, while engaged in his employment there, was struck by a stranger who had found his way into the works in a state of intoxication. When the blow was struck the workman was working in a stooping position in proximity to boxes of molten metal. In consequence of the blow, and of his position when he was struck, the workman lost his balance and fell between the boxes, burning and bruising his arm :—Held, that the arbitrator was entitled to find that the workman was injured by an accident arising out of his employment. Macfarlane v. Shaw (Glasgow), Lim., [1915] S. C. 273; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 32—Ct. of Sess.

Tortious Act — Stone-throwing by Boys.] — The appellant, a boy of fourteen, was employed by the respondents at their colliery to pick stones out of coal passing along a belt. Another boy, who was similarly employed a few yards off, mischievously threw a stone which hit the appellant in the eye, so that he lost the sight of it. There was a notice prohibiting stone-throwing, but the boys, of whom there were several, sometimes threw stones at each other to attract attention. On an application by the appellant for compensation the County Court Judge found that the accident arose out of the appellant's employment, as he was exposed to the special risk of stones being thrown by other boys, and made an award in his favour :—Held, that the question was one of fact, and there was evidence which, coupled with general knowledge as to boys' habits, was sufficient to support the Judge's conclusion. Clayton v. Hardwick Colliery Co., 85 L. J. K.B. 292; 60 S. J. 138; 32 T. L. R. 159—H.L. (E.) Reversing, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 343; 111 L. T. 788—C.A.

Cashier—Special Risk—Duty to Carry about Money—Robbery and Murder.]—A cashier was employed by certain colliery owners, and it was part of his regular duty to take weekly large sums of money from his employers' office to their colliery by rail for the payment of the wages of the colliers. Whilst he was thus engaged he was robbed and murdered in the train. His widow applied for compensation :—Held, that the murder was an "accident" within the meaning of section 1, subsection 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that it arose not only "in the course of," but also "out of," the employment, inasmuch as the duty of carrying the money about subjected the cashier to the special risk of being robbed and murdered, which was consequently incidental to his employment; and that therefore the widow was entitled to compensation. Challis v. London and South-Western Railway (74 L. J. K.B. 569; [1905] 2 K.B. 154) and Anderson v. Balfour ([1910] 2 Ir. R. 497) applied. Nisbet v. Rayne, 80 L. J. K.B. 84; [1910] 2 K.B. 689; 103 L. T. 178; 54 S. J. 719; 26 T. L. R. 632—C.A.

Driver of Taxicab—Shot by Sentry—Risk Incidental to Employment.]—A taxicab driver was employed to drive an officer to a fort guarded by sentries at two o'clock in the morning. The night was windy and rainy. The driver in approaching the fort was challenged by a sentry, but failed to hear the challenge owing to the wind and rain and the noise of the engine of the cab, and he was shot by the sentry. He sought to recover and was awarded by the arbitrator compensation for the accident from his employers :—Held, that there was evidence on which the arbitrator could properly find that the driver was, from his employment, more exposed to the risk of such an accident as occurred than an ordinary member of the public, and that the arbitrator was justified in awarding compensation. Thorn v. Humm & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1459; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 224; 112 L. T. 888; 31 T. L. R. 194—C.A.

Workman Committing Suicide—Insanity.] —See Grime v. Fletcher, post, col. 1965.

Drunken Workman — Special Risk of Employment.]—When a workman in the course of his employment meets with his death or is seriously and permanently disabled as the result of an accident arising out of a special risk of the employment, the employer is liable to pay compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to him, or in the case of death to his dependants, although the accident was due to his drunken condition. Fraser v. Riddell & Co. ([1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 125; 1913, 2 S. L. T. 377) followed. Williams v. Llandudno Coaching and Carriage Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 655; [1915] 2 K.B. 101; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 91; 112 L. T. 848; 59 S. J. 286; 31 T. L. R. 186—C.A.

Driver of Traction Engine Falling from Engine while Drunk.]—The driver of a traction engine while driving the engine fell from the footplate and was run over and killed. In an application for compensation at the instance of his widow the arbitrator found that the accident did not arise out of his employment in respect that the man was under the influence of drink and unfit for his work at the time of the accident:—Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Fraser v. Riddell & Co., [1914] S. C. 125; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 125—Ct. of Sess.

Trawler on Fishing Voyage — Admiralty Directions to Master to Avoid Mine Field—Trawler Traversing Mine Field Blown up by Mine—Injury to Engineer.]—The master of a steam trawler proceeding upon a fishing voyage was warned by the Admiralty of an enemy's mine field, and directed to steer a roundabout course which would avoid it. In spite of these instructions he steered an easterly course directly through the mine field towards his fishing ground. While the vessel was in the mine field he saw some mines, which he buoyed, and then steered southward to warn some warships, which he saw in that direction, of the mines. While on this course the vessel struck another mine and was blown up. The chief engineer was severely injured by the explosion, and claimed compensation. He was unaware of the Admiralty instructions:—Held, that the injury was caused by "accident," and that, as it happened while the engineer was carrying out the lawful orders of the master, it arose "out of and in the course of" the employment within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Risdale v. "Kilmarnock" (Owners), 84 L. J. K.B. 298; [1915] 1 K.B. 503; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 141; 112 L. T. 439; 59 S. J. 145; 31 T. L. R. 134—C.A.

Ordinary Street Dangers—Coachman Injured while Cycling to Fetch Employer's Letters.]—A coachman, in obedience to his orders, had, from time to time, to fetch his employer's letters from a post office in a small country town four miles off, and in doing so he generally, as his employer was aware, rode a bicycle. When his employer was at home he might have to go to the post office every evening; at other times he might not go for a fortnight. On one occasion, when returning with letters, he was injured through a man lurching against his bicycle and knocking him over:—Held (dubitante Lord Johnston), that the accident arose "out of" the employment, although the danger was one common to all the users of the roads, and although, owing to the infrequency of the coachman's employment, he was not exceptionally liable to that danger. Hughes v. Bett, [1915] S. C. 150; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 614—Ct. of Sess.

Charwoman Sent to Post Letter—Injury—Nature of Risk.]—The applicant, who went to the respondent's house each day under an agreement to assist the household staff, was sent to post a letter for the respondent, and while going to the post office she slipped and broke her leg:—Held, that the applicant was not entitled to compensation, as her employment did not expose her to any special risk greater than that of an ordinary person. Sheldon v. Needham, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 274; 111 L. T. 729; 58 S. J. 652; 30 T. L. R. 590—C.A.

Use of Master's Horse and Cart by Servant to Fetch his Box — Terms of Employment — No Contract by Master to have Box Fetched.]—A farm servant drove a horse and cart of his employer's, a farmer, from the farm to a station five miles away, in order to fetch a box of his to the farm. On the way to the station a motor car frightened the horse, with the result that the servant's left leg was broken and had to be amputated. It was a term of his employment that he could have the use of his employer's horse and cart to fetch his box, but there was no contractual obligation by his employer to have it fetched:—Held, that the accident did not arise "out of" the employment within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Whitfield v. Lambert, 84 L. J. K.B. 1378; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 48; 112 L. T. 803—C.A.

Canvasser and Collector—Going Rounds on Bicycle — Fatal Injury Caused by Electric Tram Car.]—A canvasser and collector in the employment of a supply company, whilst going his rounds on a bicycle, was knocked down by an electric tram car and fatally injured. It was no part of his duties to ride a bicycle for that purpose, and although it was permitted it was neither required nor desired nor encouraged by his employers:—Held, that under the circumstances the deceased met his death by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. M'Neice v. Singer Sewing Machine Co. ([1911] S. C. 12; 48 Sc. L. R. 15) approved and followed. Warner v. Couchman (80 L. J. K.B. 526; [1911] 1 K.B. 351) explained. Pierce v. Provident Clothing and Supply Co., 80 L. J. K.B. 831; [1911] 1 K.B. 997; 104 L. T. 473; 55 S. J. 363; 27 T. L. R. 299—C.A.

A salesman and collector in the employment of a firm of sewing machine manufacturers, whilst riding in the street on a bicycle in the course of his employment, was kicked on the knee by a passing horse, and incapacitated for work:—Held, that the accident arose out of his employment within section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. M'Neice v. Singer Sewing Machine Co., [1911] S. C. 12—Ct. of Sess.

Chill Contracted.]—A journeyman baker who in his rounds delivered bread to his master's customers on a cold day, and in receiving money and giving change contracted a chill, followed by œdema, which disabled him for a time, was held not to have been injured "by accident arising out of his employment," and not to be entitled to compensation. Decision of the Court of Appeal (80 L. J. K.B. 526; [1911] 1 K.B. 351) affirmed. Warner v. Couchman. 81 L. J. K.B. 45; [1912] A.C. 35; [1912] W.C. Rep. 28; 105 L. T. 676; 56 S. J. 70; 28 T. L. R. 58—H.L. (E.)

Rheumatism Caused by Immersion while Baling Water in a Pit.]—The pumps in a coal pit broke down and the pit became flooded. Five days after the breakdown a workman whose ordinary employment was that of a "brusher," went down the pit in the belief that he was going to his regular work, but on reaching the bottom he was directed to bale the water which had accumulated. He stood for several hours immersed up to his chest, and thereby contracted rheumatism, by which he became incapacitated:—Held, that the incapacity was attributable to accident arising out of and in the course of the workman's employment, and entitled him to compensation. Welsh v. Glasgow Coal Co., [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 463; [1915] S. C. 1020—Ct. of Sess.

Death in Consequence of Chill.]—In consequence of an accident in one of the shafts of a mine the workmen were withdrawn, and, as only one shaft was available, some of the men were kept waiting for a long time at the bottom of the shaft before they could be brought up, and were exposed to a current of cold air. In consequence one of them got a bad chill which turned to pneumonia, of which he died:—Held, that his death was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and that his dependants were entitled to compensation. Drylie v. Alloa Coal Co. ([1913] S. C. 549; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 213) approved. Brown v. Watson, Lim., 83 L. J. P.C. 307; [1915] A.C. 1; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 228; 111 L. T. 347; 58 S. J. 533; 30 T. L. R. 501—H.L. (Sc.)

Judgment of the Second Division of the Court of Session in Scotland ([1913] S. C. 593; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 233) reversed. Ib.

Brewers' Drayman — Continuous Duty in Streets for Twelve Hours—Leaving Dray to Get Refreshment.]—A drayman whose duties took him into the streets for twelve hours continuously away from his home and his employers' place of business, while going his proper rounds, stopped opposite a public house. He left his dray, crossed the street to the public house, got one glass of ale there, and in re-crossing the street to his dray was run over and killed. He was not away from his dray for more than two minutes:—Held, that the street risk he ran was one incidental to his employment, and that under the circumstances of the employment he was entitled so to procure reasonable liquid refreshment, and that the accident therefore arose "out of and in the course of" the employment within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Martin v. Lovibond & Sons, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 806; [1914] 2 K.B. 227; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 76; 110 L. T. 455—C.A.

Herd Cycling between Two Farms on which He was Employed — Risk Unconnected with Employment.]—A herd who was employed to look after the stock on two farms, on one of which he lived, was starting on a bicycle to traverse the distance between them (535 yards), along a public road, when a dog, his own property, collided with the bicycle and knocked it down, and the herd thereby sustained injuries from the fall which caused his death:—Held, that the accident did not arise "out of" the employment and that his dependants were not entitled to compensation. Greene v. Shaw, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 430; [1912] W. C. Rep. 25—C.A.

An accident does not arise "out of" the employment unless caused by risk peculiar to that particular employment, and not common, at least in an equal degree, to the general public. Ib.

Collector Falling on Stair.]—A collector for an insurance company, whose duty it was to make a door-to-door collection of premiums, fell upon a stair which he had occasion to use while seeking to collect a premium, and was injured:—Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Millar v. Refuge Assurance Co., [1912] S. C. 37—Ct. of Sess.

Gardener Slipping on Footpath.]—The circumstance that the soil of a footpath which a workman used as a member of the public was vested in his employer was held not to render an injury that he sustained through slipping and falling while passing along the footpath on his way to his employment an "injury by accident arising out of and in the course of" his employment within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, so as to entitle him to compensation under that Act. Williams v. Assheton-Smith, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 146; 108 L. T. 200—C.A.

Commercial Traveller while Drunk Run Over by Train—Unexplained Death.]—A commercial traveller in the course of his rounds arrived late in the day at a town where he had customers. He, however, did not attempt to transact business, but proceeded to get intoxicated, and while in this condition found his way to the railway station (where he could get a train for his home), and when last seen uninjured he was sitting on a seat on the platform. After a goods train had passed, he was found on the line, having been run over by the train and having sustained injuries from which he died. No one saw how he got or fell on to the line:—Held, that the accident did not arise out of the employment of the deceased. Whether it even arose in the course of the employment, quære. Semble (per the Lord Justice-Clerk), that it did not. Renfrew v. M'Crae, Lim., [1914] S. C. 539—Ct. of Sess.

Engine Driver Alighting from his Engine during Journey.]—While a goods train was standing in a siding, having drawn up there for the purpose of allowing an express train to pass, the engine driver alighted from the engine. Shortly afterwards his body was found on the railway line, he having, it was assumed, been knocked down and killed by a light engine which came along :—Held, that the burden had not been discharged which lay upon the applicant for compensation as the sole dependant of the deceased of shewing that the accident was one which arose "out of and in the course of the employment" of the deceased within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Dyhouse v. Great Western Railway, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 491; 109 L. T. 193—C.A.

Brakesman on Train—Attending to Points—Onus of Proof.] —A brakesman was in a train composed of an engine pushing three trucks in front without a brake van, when the train overtook another train consisting of a brake van behind and an engine in front. The two trains ran together uncoupled, but buffer to buffer. They were approaching points about a quarter of a mile distant, after passing which the trains were to stop, and the deceased was to descend and turn the points so as to enable the trains to run into a siding. The deceased was seen climbing by the buffers from the front truck of his own train to the brake van of the other train, in the act of doing which he fell and was killed :—Held (Lord Atkinson dissenting), that it was a legitimate inference that the accident arose out of and in the course of the man's employment. Evans & Co. v. Astley, 80 L. J. K.B. 1177; [1911] A.C. 674; 105 L. T. 385; 55 S. J. 687; 27 T. L. R. 557—H.L. (E.)

Brakesman Riding on Lorry—Duty to Walk behind Lorry.]—A workman was employed to attend to the screw brakes at the rear of a lorry which was carrying a heavy casting, and it was his duty to walk behind it continuously to be ready to apply the brakes at any moment. There was a rule, of which the workman was aware, that no one but the driver should ride on the lorry, but in spite of this he took his seat besides the driver on the front of the lorry. On being required by the driver, under whose orders he was, to put on the brakes, he fell in attempting to jump off the lorry, and was injured. In a claim for compensation the arbitrator found that the accident did not arise out of the workman's employment : Held, affirming that determination, that in being on the front of the lorry instead of walking at the rear, the workman had created for himself a risk which was not incidental to his employment. Revie v. Cumming, [1911] S. C. 1032—Ct. of Sess.

Workman Getting off Waggon to Pick up his Pipe.]—A workman, whose duty it was to load and accompany a train of waggons drawn by a traction engine, in dismounting from a waggon on which he was riding, for the purpose of recovering a pipe he had dropped, fell and was run over by the waggon :—Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. M'Laughlan v. Anderson, [1911] S. C. 529—Ct. of Sess.

Traveller—Duty at Goods Yard—Attempt to Cross Railway Lines—Fatal Accident.] — A workman was employed as a traveller, and it was his duty to inspect scrap iron consigned to his employers at various railway stations. After one of such inspections at a goods yard he had in the course of his employment to return to the warehouse, and in order to do so he attempted to cross the lines of railway, but was killed by shunting operations :—Held, that as the workman was doing something in the course of his employment and was not acting outside its scope, his dependants were entitled to compensation from his employers. Sanderson v. Wright, Lim., [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 177; 110 L. T. 517; 30 T. L. R. 279—C.A.

Injury by Falling Slate during Gale.] — During a severe gale an engineer's fitter was engaged in erecting machinery in an open yard near to a building from the roof of which slates were being blown. While stooping to adjust a large piece of machinery, he was struck on the head by a falling slate and injured :—Held, that the arbitrator was entitled to find that the accident arose out of the employment. Adamson v. Anderson & Co., [1913] S. C. 1038—Ct. of Sess.

During a severe gale a carter in charge of a horse and lorry within his employer's yard was struck by a sheet of corrugated iron blown from the roof of an adjoining building, and was injured :—Held (dub. Lord Dundas), that the arbitrator was not entitled to find that the accident arose out of the employment. Adamson v. Anderson (supra) distinguished. Guthrie v. Kinghorn, [1913] S. C. 1155—Ct. of Sess.

Dangerous State of Roof in Servant's Sleeping Apartment.] — A domestic servant, employed in a private hotel, was called by her mistress at six o'clock in the morning to light the fire in the kitchen range. While in the act of getting up to do so, some mortar from the rendering attached to the slates fell into her right eye, in consequence of which she lost the sight of that eye. Handfuls of mortar had often before fallen from the slates above the servant's sleeping room to the knowledge of her employer :—Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Aldridge v. Merry, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 308; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 97—C.A.

Fever Hospital Attendant Contracting Fever—Proof as to Time and Place.]—A workman is not entitled to recover compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, unless he can satisfy the Court of the particular time, place, and circumstances in which the injury by accident alleged by him happened. The applicant was employed as a porter at a scarlet fever hospital, and among his duties was that of cleaning out the mortuary. He had an attack of influenza in February, 1911, and returned to work on March 22. On April 1, and for some days previous to that date, he was out and in the fever ward, and on April 1 he cleaned out the mortuary. There was no proof that at that time there was in the mortuary any dead body of a person who had died of scarlet fever. Three days later the applicant was found to be suffering from scarlet fever which incapacitated him for work. On a claim by him for compensation, the County Court Judge found that the applicant contracted fever on April 1 in the mortuary, and that he contracted it nowhere else; that there was an injury by accident within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906; and that the applicant was therefore entitled to an award of compensation :—Held, that there was no evidence to justify the conclusion that there was a particular time and place at which the applicant had contracted the disease, and that the applicant had failed to shew that he had met with an injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Martin v. Manchester Corporation, [1912] W.C. Rep. 289; 106 L. T. 741; 76 J. P. 251; 10 L. G. R. 996; 28 T. L. R. 344—C.A.

Workman Employed in Removing Sewage Contracting Typhoid Fever.]—A workman was employed as a machinery attendant, and part of his duty consisted in removing sewage out of the machinery. After having been engaged several years in this employment he contracted typhoid fever, of which he died. Medical evidence was given that he might have acquired the disease by handling the sewage, but no evidence was given that the removal of the sewage was the cause of the disease :—Held, that the evidence did not establish that the death resulted from an accident in the course of the employment, and that there was no right of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Finlay v. Tullamore Union, [1914] 2 Ir. R. 233—C.A.

Injury to Finger while Removing Sock before Commencing Work.] — In the cotton mill where the applicant was a minder it was the practice for the workers, for their own convenience, and it might be in order to do more efficient work, to take off their coats and waistcoats, and usually, although not universally, they also worked without socks. The applicant, just before commencing work, injured his finger in the course of removing a sock, and was thereby incapacitated for some time from doing his work :—Held, that the accident did not arise out of the employment, and therefore that the applicant was not entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Peel v. Lawrence, [1912] W.C. Rep. 141; 106 L. T. 482; 28 T. L. R. 318—C.A.

Master of Workhouse—Fall Down Steps of Residence in Workhouse—Giddiness Caused by Cough.] — The master of a workhouse was sitting on the top of some steps leading to his residence at the workhouse, there being nothing peculiar or particularly dangerous about them, talking to the labour master, when a fit of coughing came on, caused by a disease of his lung, which made him giddy, and he fell down the steps and received an injury which caused his death a few days afterwards :—Held, that the accident did not arise out of his employment, and his dependants were not entitled to compensation. Butler v. Burton-on-Trent Union, [1912] W.C. Rep. 222; 106 L. T. 824—C.A.

School Janitor Injured by Falling in Street through Faintness.]—A school janitor conveying a message on school business through the streets of Paisley about noon on a hot July day was overcome by giddiness or faintness brought on by the heat, and fell, struck his head against the pavement, and sustained injuries of which he died :—Held, that the accident did not arise out of his employment. Rodger v. Paisley School Board, [1912] S. C. 584; [1912] W.C. Rep. 157—Ct. of Sess.

Accident Causing Disease and Ultimately Death—Workman Quite Healthy before Accident — After-effects of Operation Immediate Cause of Death — Effect of Medical Evidence.]—A workman received a heavy blow on his back by accident in the course of his employment, and was incapacitated for over three months. He was able to resume work for six months, but was never as well as he had always been before the accident. He was operated upon for acute kidney trouble, and the operation was successful, but revealed the possibility that other causes than the accident might have brought about his condition. He ultimately died from the after-effects of a subsequent operation intended to heal the scar caused by the first one :—Held, that, having regard in particular to the fact that he had always been in good health before the accident, there was evidence from which the inference that his death was thereby caused was properly drawn. Lewis v. Port of London Authority, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 299; 58 S. J. 686—C.A.

Tuberculosis Supervening — Death Accelerated by the Accident.]—On July 2, 1914, an accident happened to a workman. He was taken to a hospital, where he remained until July 15, when he was taken to the workhouse infirmary. There he stayed until October 14. On that date he was taken back to his home. On October 16 he was found to be suffering from acute and active tuberculosis, and he was taken to another workhouse infirmary, where he died on December 2. The accident affected the workman mentally at first and for some considerable time afterwards. One of the doctors stated that he had diagnosed the case, and that the workman was admitted to the infirmary with a diagnosis of general paralysis of the brain. There were signs of chronic bronchitis, but no definite signs of pulmonary tuberculosis were noted, the disease being quiescent all the time he was an inmate of the infirmary. Other medical evidence was to the effect that it was a bad case, going very rapidly when the doctor saw the workman, and that it might have been going three months before. A post-mortem examination was held upon the body, and as a result of that the doctor who made it stated that the workman had been suffering from double pulmonary tuberculosis, but latent for two years or longer, and that in his opinion the acute condition was of three months' duration. Further medical witnesses stated that a serious disease, such as that which was occasioned by the accident to the workman in the present case, might have caused the latent tuberculosis to become acute. In these circumstances it was decided by the learned County Court Judge that the dependants of the workman were entitled to compensation. The employers appealed. The question was whether upon the evidence that was adduced before the learned County Court Judge it was possible for him properly to come to the conclusion that the workman's death was the result of the accident in the sense that it was accelerated by the accident :—Held, that there was evidence which justified the learned County Court Judge in coming to the conclusion at which he did—namely, that the death of the workman was accelerated by the accident, the same sufficing to set up the diseased condition of the workman; and that there was no trace of novus actus interveniens. Beare v. Garrod, [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 438; 113 L. T. 673—C.A.

Death from Angina Pectoris — Onus of Proof.]—A workman employed in fairly light work in a colliery was taken ill. He went home and died the same day from angina pectoris. The man's heart was found to be in bad condition of long standing. The medical evidence was that angina pectoris might be brought on by several causes and might be due to circumstances which could scarcely be called an accident at all :—Held, that, though as a matter of conjecture it was probable, it was not proved as a matter of legitimate inference from the facts, that the death was due to an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment. Barnabas v. Bersham Colliery Co. (103 L. T. 513) followed and applied. Clover, Clayton & Co. v. Hughes (79 L. J. K.B. 470; [1910] A.C. 242) distinguished. Hawkins v. Powell's Tillery Steam Coal Co., 80 L. J. K.B. 769; [1911] 1 K.B. 988; 104 L. T. 365; 55 S. J. 329; 27 T. L. R. 282—C.A.

Wasp Sting—Normal Risk.]—A workman was stung in the leg by a wasp when working a threshing machine, and as the result of the sting died subsequently of blood poisoning :—Held, that the workman's widow could not recover compensation because the accident did not arise out of the workman's employment, but was due to a risk common to all mankind. Craske v. Wigan (78 L. J. K.B. 994; [1909] 2 K.B. 635) and Warner v. Couchman (80 L. J. K.B. 526; [1911] 1 K.B. 351) followed. Amys v. Barton, 81 L. J. K.B. 65; [1912] 1 K.B. 40; [1912] W.C. Rep. 22; 105 L .T. 619; 28 T. L. R. 29—C.A.

Heat Apoplexy.] — A plumber who was engaged in laying and jointing iron pipes in the open air on a day of unusual heat, and who had to stoop at his work, was taken ill while so employed and died some days afterwards from heat apoplexy :—Held, that, even assuming that there had been an "accident," it did not arise "out of" the deceased's employment, as there was no peculiar danger to which he had been exposed by the nature of his employment beyond that to which other persons who had to stoop at outdoor labour on the day in question were exposed. Blakey v. Robson, Eckford & Co., [1912] S. C. 334; [1912] W.C. Rep. 86—Ct. of Sess.

Death Due to Apoplexy Brought on by Overexertion.]—A gate keeper employed at a flax mill—whose duty it was, besides attending to the gate, to take charge of the ambulance appliances for use in cases of accidents occurring in the works, to telephone for the doctor in case of necessity, and to attend personally to minor accidents—was informed, while on duty, of a scaffold accident in the works to some slaters, who were not in the employment of the flax spinners, but who were engaged in doing work at the mill. The gate keeper ran to the scene of the accident, and then back to the gate to telephone for a doctor. The exertion of running and the excitement brought on an apoplectic shock, from which he died in a few hours :—Held, that the death of the workman was due to an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Aitken v. Finlayson, Bousfield & Co., [1914] S. C. 770—Ct. of Sess.

Injury Producing Paralysis.] — Where a workman while engaged at work which he was employed to do sustained a partial fracture of his spine, which led in time to paralysis, producing a condition that resulted in his death about nine months after the occurrence of the accident, it was decided that the Court was bound to draw the inference that the death was due to an accident that arose "out of and in the course of the employment" of the deceased workman. Hewitt v. Stanley, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 495; 109 L. T. 384—C.A.

Right to Occupy Cottage in Return for Performance of Additional Duties—Death Caused while Sleeping in Cottage — Tenancy.] — A workman, who was employed as a steel-tester, was permitted by his employers to occupy a cottage adjoining their offices on the terms of a written memorandum by which he agreed to be responsible for the cleaning of the offices and other duties, in return for which he could live in the cottage, rent and rates free, with coal and light provided. The cleaning and other duties were performed by his daughters. The workman was killed while sleeping in the cottage by the escape of gas from a stove in the basement of the offices into his bedroom. On an application for compensation by his dependants it was held that death had been caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of the employment, the memorandum constituting a contract of service by which the workman was obliged to sleep in the cottage, and compensation was awarded :—Held (Kennedy, L.J., dissenting), that the written memorandum was merely a tenancy agreement embodying a contract for services, and that there was no evidence to support the award of the County Court Judge. Wray v. Taylor Brothers & Co., [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 446; 109 L. T. 120—C.A.

Seaman Drinking Water Containing Caustic Soda.]—A seaman, employed on a vessel lying in a Mediterranean harbour, received injuries through drinking from a tin water which contained caustic soda. The drinking water for the crew was supplied from a pump, but, this water not being cold, the crew were in the habit of drawing it off in their tins, which they placed in cool places to allow the water to cool, and the tins were then used indiscriminately by any members of the crew. The practice was known to, and sanctioned by, the ship's officers. The tin containing the soda did not belong to the seaman in question, but he, finding it in a cool place, drank from it in the belief that it contained pure water which had been placed there to cool :—Held, that there was evidence on which the arbitrator was entitled to find that the seaman's injuries were caused by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. M'Kinnon v. Hutchison, [1915] S. C. 867—Ct. of Sess.

Fireman Falling Overboard.] — A fireman during his watch in the tropics disappeared :—Held, that on the facts there was evidence to justify a finding that the man came on deck for air, and that he fell overboard in the course of his employment. Lee v. Stag Line, [1912] W.C. Rep. 398; 107 L. T. 509; 56 S. J. 720—C.A.

Disappearance of Seaman while on Duty on Deck.] — A sailor was seen by his captain about 4 A.M. going on deck to keep his watch from 4 A.M. to 8 A.M. He was complaining of giddiness and was last seen about 7 A.M., and was not found, though search was made for him :—Held, on a balance of probabilities, that he had met with his death by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. "Swansea Vale" (Owners) v. Rice, 81 L. J. K.B. 672; [1912] A.C. 238; [1912] W.C. Rep. 242; 104 L. T. 658; 12 Asp. M.C. 47; 55 S. J. 497; 27 T. L. R. 440—H.L. (E.)

Unexplained Disappearance of Seaman from Ship.]—The second cook employed on board a steamship left his duties in the galley in the course of a voyage when the ship was rolling heavily, and he was not seen again. He suffered from a disease of the kidneys which would necessitate his going repeatedly to the urinal :—Held, that the inference was irresistible that the deceased accidentally fell overboard and was drowned; but that, in the absence of any evidence to shew how he got out of his galley and fell overboard, there was nothing to take the case out of the region of "mere surmise, conjecture, or guess," which did not suffice to establish the dependants' claim for compensation. Burwash v. Leyland & Co., [1912] W.C. Rep. 400; 107 L. T. 735; 56 S. J. 703; 28 T. L. R. 546—C.A.

The unexplained drowning of a seaman who rose from his sleep and went on deck for the sake of fresh air, and whose body was found in the water immediately under his usual resting place, does not justify the inference of fact that he met with an accident arising out of his employment. (The Lord Chancellor and Lord James of Hereford dissenting.) Marshall v. "Wild Rose" Steamship, 79 L. J. K.B. 912; [1910] A.C. 486; 103 L. T. 114; 11 Asp. M.C. 409; 54 S. J. 678; 26 T. L. R. 608—H.L. (E.)

The Court may infer from the unexplained drowning of a seaman while engaged in doing his duty on board his ship at sea, that the death was due to an accident arising out of as well as in the course of his employment. A workman, who was chief engineer of a steamship on a voyage from Petrograd to Hull, gave orders on the evening of June 15, 1913, that he was to be called at 5.40 A.M. next day, about two hours earlier than the usual time. This was done, and at 5.50 A.M. he was seen in his working clothes walking aft, where he went behind the wheelhouse. He was never seen again. The ship was then in the North Sea, and was due to arrive at its port that day. The workman had been worried on the journey about something that had happened to the propeller, and the propeller could be seen from aft if a man put his head and shoulders through the rails at the side of the ship, or climbed over them. The ship was steady at the time. The County Court Judge drew the inference that the man had put himself on duty on the morning of the accident to attend to the machinery, and had met his death in trying to look at the propeller. He therefore held that the accident arose out of as well as in the course of the man's employment, and awarded compensation to his dependants :—Held, that there was evidence to support the inference of the County Court Judge. Proctor v. "Serbino" (Owners), 84 L. J. K.B. 1381; [1915] 3 K.B. 344; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 425; 113 L. T. 640; 59 S. J. 629; 31 T. L. R. 524—C.A.

Seaman Found Drowned — Arbitrator's Decision—Award of Compensation—Evidence to Support Award.]—While the respondents' steamship was lying in harbour the body of a man employed on the vessel as cook and steward, who, when last seen alive, was lying in his bunk, was found on the following day in the sea at a short distance from the vessel. His death was due to drowning and the body bore no marks of violence. He had never been seen to be the worse for liquor, but he was subject to nausea and had been frequently seen vomiting over the side of the vessel. On an application by the man's dependants for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator drew the inference that the man had accidentally fallen overboard and been drowned, and held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the man's employment, and awarded compensation :—Held (Lord Dunedin and Lord Atkinson dissenting), that the decision of the arbitrator must be affirmed as there was evidence to support it. Kerr (or Lendrum) v. Ayr Steam Shipping Co., 84 L. J. P.C. 1; 58 S. J. 737; 30 T. L. R. 664—H.L. (Sc.)

Decision of the Court of Session ([1913] S. C. 331; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 10) reversed. Ib.

A sailor, whose engagement on a ship was completed, was leaving the ship by means of a ladder to get on to a dolphin, which was a floating stage belonging to the Port Authority. He got on to the dolphin, but before he could reach the bridge connecting the dolphin with the quay he fell and was killed. In a claim for compensation by his widow, the County Court Judge held that the deceased's employment ceased when he arrived on board the dolphin owned by the Port Authority, and therefore that the applicant was not entitled to compensation. The applicant appealed :—Held, dismissing the appeal, that the employers' liability ceased when the deceased reached the dolphin, which was part of the dock premises. Cook v. "Montreal" (Owners), [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 206; 108 L. T. 164; 57 S. J. 282; 29 T. L. R. 233—C.A.

Seaman's Return to Ship.]—The master of a ship lying in Bangor Roads went on shore, and after staying about an hour at an hotel went to the pier and hailed the ship to send a boat. But before a boat came he fell into the sea and was drowned. It was not shewn that he went on shore on the ship's business :—Held, that the accident did not arise out of the employment. Fletcher v. "Duchess" Steamship (Owners), 81 L. J. K.B. 33; [1911] A.C. 671; [1912] W.C. Rep. 16; 105 L. T. 121; 55 S. J. 598; 27 T. L. R. 508—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (sub nom. Hewitt v. "Duchess" Steamship (Owners), 79 L. J. K.B. 867; [1910] 1 K.B. 772) affirmed. Ib.

A sailor, having been absent on leave, was returning to his ship, when he fell into the water. There was no evidence whether he had ever reached the gangway which led from the wharf to the ship and was well lighted :—Held, that the accident arose in the course of but not out of the employment, and that no compensation was payable. Kitchenham v. "Johannesburg" Steamship, 80 L. J. K.B. 1102; [1911] A.C. 417; 105 L. T. 118; 55 S. J. 599; 27 T. L. R. 504—H.L. (E.)

—— Drunken Sailor — Return to Ship Unfit for Duty.] — A sailor who had gone ashore without leave returned to his ship in a state a drunkenness. The ship at the time, having got in her gangways and cast off her ropes from the quay, was already moving, her deck being still alongside and level with the wall of the quay. The sailor, with the assistance of two persons standing on the quay, was pushed on to the deck of the ship, where he fell on his hands and knees. After a minute or two he tried to get on to his feet, but staggered backwards and fell into the water and was drowned, the ship then having moved about three feet from the wall :—Held, that the sailor having arrived on board ship unfit for duty, the accident, which was due solely to his own drunkenness, was not an accident arising out of his employment, and accordingly his dependants were not entitled to compensation under section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Frith v. "Louisianian" (Owners), 81 L. J. K.B. 701; [1912] 2 K.B. 155; [1912] W.C. Rep. 285; 106 L. T. 667; 28 T. L. R. 331—C.A.

A sailor who had been on shore with leave returned to his ship at night in a drunken condition and started to mount the gangway from the quay to the ship, holding on to the ropes on either side. When part of the way up he let go with one hand, overbalanced, and fell on to the quay and was killed. The County Court Judge found on the evidence that the primary cause of the accident was the man's drunken condition, but that there were really two concurrent causes for the accident—first, the fact that he was mounting the gangway to return to his employment, and was thereby subjected to a special risk; and secondly, his drunken condition. He therefore held that the accident arose out of the man's employment and awarded compensation to his dependants :—Held, by the Court of Appeal (Pickford, L.J., dissenting), that, as the accident was caused by the sailor's drunken condition, it did not arise out of the man's employment and the dependants were not entitled to compensation. It made no difference for this purpose that the accident had happened within the ambit of the employment. Frith v. "Louisianian" (Owners) (81 L. J. K.B. 701; [1912] 2 K.B. 155; [1912] W.C. Rep. 285) followed. Nash v. "Rangatira" (Owners), 83 L. J. K.B. 1496; [1914] 3 K.B. 978; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 490; 111 L. T. 704; 58 S. J. 705—C.A.

Seaman Attempting to Reach Ship in a Boat without Oars.]—A ship's engineer who had been ashore in the course of his employment attempted to reach his vessel, which was moored one hundred yards from the shore, alone and without oars in a twenty-seven foot lifeboat which should have been manned by a crew of six rowers, trusting that the boat would be carried in the direction of the vessel by the force of wind and tide, his only means of directing its course being by paddling with the rudder. He was blown out to sea and was drowned :—Held that the accident did not arise out of the employment. Halvorsen v. Salvesen, [1912] S. C. 99—Ct. of Sess.

Steward on Steamship—Death by Drowning —Evidence.]—A steward employed on a steamship of the respondents, which was lying in a harbour, was seen by the captain lying in his bunk at about 4.30 P.M. partially dressed. The captain told him to prepare tea for the crew before the ship sailed at 6 P.M. He was never seen alive again. His clothing, boots, cap, purse, and watch were found on a settee in the saloon out of which his cabin opened, and the next day his body was found in the water dressed only in his underclothing. There were no marks of violence, and death was due to drowning. There was evidence that he was a good-tempered, sober, sociable man, and that he suffered from attacks of nausea and vomiting. In a proceeding by his dependants under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator held that he met his death by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment :—Held, that on the facts admitted and proved there was evidence to support such finding. Lendrum v. Ayr Steam Shipping Co., 84 L. Mate of Vessel — Fall from Bridge after being Ordered Below as Unfit for Duty.]—C. was mate of a steamship. He came on board at night heavily under the influence of drink, and went on the bridge, where, as was his duty, he took the wheel. Owing to his dangerous steering, the master ordered him below as not being fit for duty. C. remained for eight or ten minutes at the head of the ladder leading to the deck. A thud was shortly afterwards heard, and C. was found at the foot of the ladder with a wound on his head, from which death subsequently resulted. No one saw him fall:—Held, that there was no evidence that the accident arose out of the employment. Murphy v. Cooney, [1914] 2 Ir. R. 76; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 44—C.A.

Sailor Leaving Ship — Accident Due to Means of Access — Ladder from Quay.] — A seaman was leaving his ship on the completion of his day's work. The ship was moored against the quay of a harbour, and the only access to the quay was by a plank which was laid from the ship to a perpendicular ladder fixed to the side of the quay, which was the property of the harbour authority. The man crossed the plank in safety, but fell from the ladder into the harbour, and was injured:—Held, that the ladder being the only means of access from the ship to the quay, the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, s. 1, sub-s. 1. Cook v. "Montreal" (Owners) ([1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 206) distinguished. Webber v. Wansbrough Paper Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 127; [1915] A.C. 51; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 313; 111 L. T. 658; 58 S. J. 685; 30 T. L. R. 615—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (82 L. J. K.B. 1058; [1913] 3 K.B. 615; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 627) reversed. Ib.

"Crew to provide their own provisions"— Seaman on Shore to Purchase Provisions and Drowned while Returning to Ship.] — A seaman had signed articles for a coasting voyage, which contained the term "Crew to provide their own provisions." When the ship had arrived in a harbour he went ashore to buy necessary provisions, and after doing so left the shop in the direction of the pier where the ship was lying. It was a dark, wet, stormy night, and the next day his body was found in the water near the pier:—Held, that the accident by which he lost his life did not arise out of his employment, as he was not absent from the vessel in pursuance of a duty to his employer. Parker v. "Black Rock" (Owners), 84 L. J. K.B. 1373; [1915] A.C. 725; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 369; 113 L. T. 515; 59 S. J. 475; 31 T. L. R. 432—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (83 L. J. K.B. 421; [1914] 2 K.B. 39; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 116) affirmed. Ib.

Seaman Returning to Vessel — Fall from Quay.]—A seaman employed on a ship in port went ashore after work was over, as he was entitled to do, partly to buy food (which under his contract of employment he was bound to provide for himself) and partly to see the town. On returning to the vessel, before he had reached the gangway, which was the only access from the quay to the vessel, he accidentally fell from the quay into the water and was drowned. The passage way along the quay from the gangway to beyond the point where the man fell was narrowed to a width of two feet by a row of barrels which were standing on the quay. The arbitrator found that the accident did not arise out of the seaman's employment:—Held, that there was evidence to warrant that finding. Craig v. "Calabria" (Owners), [1914] S. C. 765—Ct. of Sess.

Discharging Vessel.]—A seaman employed on board a fishing vessel was engaged in discharging fish from it across a gangway resting on a floating pontoon. While he was standing in the middle of the gangway it became necessary to lower the end of it that rested on the pontoon. Instead of walking off the gangway the seaman caught hold of the stem of another vessel which was moored alongside, and swung himself therefrom. While doing so he slipped and fell into the water, sustaining such serious injuries that he died:—Held, that the accident arose "out of" as well as "in the course of" the seaman's employment. Gallant v. "Gabir" (Owners), [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 116; 108 L. T. 50; 12 Asp. M.C. 284; 57 S. J. 225; 29 T. L. R. 198—C.A.

Ship's Carpenter Burnt by Shavings Accidentally Set on Fire by Shore Labourer.]—A ship's carpenter, working on the poop of a vessel lying in harbour, was severely burnt owing to some shavings by which he was surrounded being ignited by a match carelessly thrown down by a shore labourer. The carpenter's trousers happened to be saturated with inflammable oil which had leaked from a barrel he had shifted in the course of his work, and thus readily caught fire from the shavings:—Held, that he was injured by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Manson v. Forth and Clyde Steamship Co., [1913] S. C. 921; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 399—Ct. of Sess.

Pilot Jumping into Boat — Getting Wet — Sciatica.]—A man was employed as a pilot to take a ketch out of harbour. Having piloted her out, he attempted to get into his own boat, towing astern of the ketch, in order to go ashore. He jumped in, alighting somewhere near the bows of the boat, with the result that they went under water, and he was wetted to the thighs. He was pulled aboard the ketch again. He ultimately got ashore in the boat. Subsequently he suffered from sciatica in consequence of this wetting:—Held, that he was suffering from injury by "accident," and that the accident arose "out of and in the course of" his employment within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Barbeary v. Chugg,

Sunstroke.] — While a ship on which the applicant was an officer was in a West Indian port, loading cargo, the applicant was on May 31, 1910, posted on a portion of the steel deck, which was unprotected by an awning, and he had to lean over a hatchway from 6 A.M. to 11 A.M. to superintend the work. At 11 A.M. he was taken ill with sunstroke, which resulted in injury to his eyes. In a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the County Court Judge made an award in favour of the applicant on the ground that he had been subjected to an abnormal risk in the course of his employment:—Held, that there were facts on which the County Court Judge could come to that conclusion. Davies v. Gillespie, 105 L. T. 494; 56 S. J. 11; 28 T. L. R. 6—C.A.

Asphyxiation by Fumes of Stove in Cabin.] —While the respondents' steamship was lying in port in the Black Sea in February, 1911, the second engineer, on account of the intensity of the cold, rigged up a stove in his cabin. He had been allowed by the chief engineer to use the stove during the daytime, but was forbidden to use it at night, as it was dangerous. On February 9 there was no fire in the stove at 11 P.M., but apparently the second engineer lit the fire at some period of the night, and he was found dead the next morning, having been asphyxiated by the fumes of the fire. On an application by his dependant for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the County Court Judge held that the accident arose out of and in the course of the deceased's employment; he accordingly made an award of compensation:—Held (Cozens-Hardy, M.R., doubting), that there was evidence upon which the County Court Judge could find as he did. Edmunds v. "Peterston" (Owners), 28 T. L. R. 18—C.A.

Workman Assisting Fellow Servants to Work for Third Party.] — A carter in the service of carting contractors was employed to deliver goods to consignees. It was his duty to sling the goods from his lorry into tackle provided by the consignees, but he had no duty to receive or stow the goods inside the consignees' warehouse. A custom prevailed among the carters, which was not proved to have been known to their employers, that, when several were delivering goods at the same time, one remained outside and slung the goods from all the lorries, while the others entered the warehouse and helped the consignees' servants to receive and stow the goods. For these services each carter, including the one who remained with the lorries, received remuneration from the consignees. When the carter, in accordance with this custom, was slinging goods from several lorries belonging to his employers, he was injured by accident while working on a lorry other than that of which he was in charge:—Held, that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment with the contractors. Goslan v. Gillies, [1907] S. C. 68, distinguished. Carlton v. Sinclair, Lim., [1914] S. C. 871—Ct. of Sess.

Travelling in Cart to Receive Wages.] —The applicant was employed on different farms belonging to the respondent. Having finished his work at one farm, the applicant was proceeding to another, about two miles distant by road, for the purpose of receiving his day's pay and to enquire about the work for the next day. Finding an empty cart belonging to the respondent returning to the same farm, the applicant attempted to get into it, and while so doing an accident occurred to him. The respondent's workmen not unfrequently returned in such an empty cart, and this fact was known to him:—Held, that it was no part of the applicant's contract of service that he should travel to his employer's farm by a cart, whereby he added unnecessarily to the risk of his employer; and that therefore he was not entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Parker v. Pout, 105 L. T. 493—C.A.

Journey by Railway—Returning from Work—Entering Train in Motion—Added Peril.] — A workman was employed to work for his employers in Sheffield and was given a railway season ticket between that place and Rotherham, where he and his employers lived. He was expected to return to Rotherham and report at the office at 6 P.M. each day. Arriving one day late at the station at Sheffield for the last train that would reach Rotherham before 6 P.M., he attempted to enter it while it was in motion, but fell and suffered injuries from which he died:—Held, that, by attempting to enter the train while in motion, the workman exposed himself to an additional risk by doing an unauthorised and illegal act, which was not in any way incidental to his employment, and his dependants were therefore not entitled to compensation. Jibb v. Chadwick, 84 L. J. K.B. 1241; [1915] 2 K.B. 94; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 342; 112 L. T. 878; 31 T. L. R. 185—C.A.

Workman Injured while Going to His Work.]—A workman, employed in oil works, was going to his work at night by a path (which was one of several means of access available to him) situated on land leased by his employers, and provided and maintained by them as an access for their employees, although members of the public were also allowed to use it. At a spot where the path ran alongside a switchback lie he strayed on to the lie and was run over by a railway waggon and killed. The ground on each side of the spot where the accident happened was occupied by bings and sidings in connection with the works, but the spot was eighty yards from the nearest building belonging to the works, and was 330 yards from that department of the works to which the deceased's employment was exclusively confined. An arbitrator having found that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of the employment in respect first, that the workman had only been exposed to the same risks as any member of the public, while using a route of his own choosing; and secondly, that he had been injured before he reached the "margin of his employment,"—Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment. Nicol v. Young's Paraffin Light Co., [1915] S. C. 439; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 72—Ct. of Sess.

A miner going to his work went across a footpath which was a near way to the pit. Just after leaving the high road he had to descend some steps cut in the mountain side to get on to the path. The morning was frosty and he slipped on the steps and was injured. The steps were over three-quarters of a mile from the pit:—Held, that the accident did not arise in the course of the man's employment. Davies v. Rhymney Iron &c. Co. (16 T. L. R. 329) followed. Walters v. Staverley Coal and Iron Co., 105 L. T. 119; 55 S. J. 579—H.L. (E.)

A workman who was proceeding to his employers' works took a route that he had been in the habit of using for many years, along a footpath which ran across a vacant piece of land and then on to a railway line and so on to the works. The property in the vacant piece of land was vested in the employers. While on this footpath, at a distance of little short of a quarter of a mile from the place where the workman was to go, he slipped on some ice and injured his ankle:—Held, that the workman had no right to go, and his employers could not confer upon him any right to go, along the railway line; that another route existed by which he had already access to his work; and that therefore the accident could not be deemed to have arisen "in the course of" his employment. Gilmour v. Dorman, Long & Co., 105 L. T. 54—C.A.

Workman Killed while Returning from Work.]—A workman, employed underground in a coal mine, on finishing his day's work returned to the surface and was proceeding home by a track along the side of a private branch railway line, the property of his employers, when he was knocked down and killed by an engine at a point four hundred yards distant from the mouth of the pit:—Held, that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Caton v. Summerlee and Mossend Iron and Coal Co. ([1902] 4 F. 989) followed. Graham v. Barr and Thornton, [1913] S. C. 538; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 202—Ct. of Sess.

Death whilst Returning from Work on Bicycle—Use of Bicycle under Contract of Service.]—A workman was employed at 6*d.* an hour to work his employers' threshing machines, and he had also to go about the district allotted to him looking after his employers' interests. As a term of his contract of service, he was provided with a bicycle for going to and from his work as well as for going from one part of his district to another in the course of his employment. When he was working at a distance from the employers' works he was not expected to return there at the end of the day, but ceased work each day at 6 P.M. On September 25, 1912, the workman had been engaged in working a threshing machine some distance away and had stopped working at 6 P.M. Subsequently, whilst riding on the bicycle to his home, he was run into by a motor lorry and killed:—Held, that the accident did not happen in the course of the workman's employment and that his dependants were not therefore entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Edwards v. Wingham Agricultural Implement Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 998; [1913] 3 K.B. 596; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 642; 109 L. T. 50; 57 S. J. 701—C.A.

Cremins v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefold, Lim. (77 L. J. K.B. 326; [1908] 1 K.B. 469), and Mole v. Wadworth ([1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 160) discussed. Ib.

Actual Work under Contract Ended—Wages for Past Work—Injury whilst Returning from Pay Place.]—The applicant was employed at the respondents' cotton mill as a piecer, her duty being to assist a minder. By the usage of the mill wages were made up to Wednesday, but were paid on Friday at the mill. The applicant actually ceased to work under her contract of service on a Wednesday, and went on the following Friday to the fifth floor of the mill to receive her wages for her past work. She was paid, and was coming down the stairs of the mill when she slipped and was injured:—Held (Buckley, L.J., dissenting), that the accident arose out of and in the course of her employment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that consequently the applicant was entitled to compensation. Lowry v. Sheffield Coal Co. (24 T. L. R. 142) applied. Riley v. Holland, 80 L. J. K.B. 814; [1911] 1 K.B. 1029; 104 L. T. 371; 27 T. L. R. 327—C.A.

Casual Labourer on Farm—Contract of Service—Termination of Employment.]—A farmer employed a proprietor of threshing machines to supply a threshing machine, accompanied by two men to drive and feed it, for the purpose of threshing his corn. It was the practice in the district for several casual labourers to follow a threshing machine in the expectation of being taken on by the various farmers for the threshing. The applicant was one of six men who were thus taken on by the farmer. After the threshing was finished and these men had been paid, they helped the men with the threshing machine to move it off the farm on to the roadway. In doing so the applicant was injured, and he brought these proceedings, claiming compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, from the farmer. It appeared from the evidence that the casual labourers always helped to get the threshing machine on to and off the farm, and that it often could not be done without their help. The farmer stated that, when he engaged the threshing machine with two men, he understood he would have to supply the rest of the labour on the farm:—Held (dubitante Phillimore, L.J.), that it was part of the applicant's employment by the farmer to help in getting the threshing machine on to and off the farm, and therefore that the accident arose out of and in the course of his employment by the farmer, within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Newson v. Burstall, 84 L. J. K.B. 535; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 16; 112 L. T. 792; 59 S. J. 204—C.A.

Conveyance of Workman from Work by Train—Attempt to Get Out at Wrong Place.] —The applicant, who was in the employment of the appellants, a colliery company, was going home by a train which was run by a railway company under a contract with the appellants to carry workmen free to and from their employment, and in order to shorten his way home he attempted to jump off the moving train before it reached the place where it ordinarily stopped for the workmen to alight. The result was that he was injured: —Held, that as the applicant had attempted to get out at a place other than the proper place, the accident did not arise out of his employment, and therefore he was not entitled to compensation. Price v. Tredegar Iron and Coal Co., [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 295; 111 L. T. 688; 58 S. J. 632; 30 T. L. R. 583—C.A.

Going Home in Employer's Boat — Only Means of Transit — Injury in Boat before Landing—Use of Boat Implied Term of Contract.] — A farm labourer employed by the year worked on his employer's farms, one of which was situate in the island of Ramsey, and the other on the mainland of Wales opposite to the island. His home was on the mainland. He had no means of crossing between the island and the mainland except by a boat of his master's. On December 8, 1912, his employer took him in his boat across from the island to the mainland. He was going home, and was not going on his master's business. Just before reaching land, in trying to get out of the boat, he slipped and hurt himself on the gunwale of the boat. Shortly afterwards he was landed. Next day he died from the effects of his hurt:—Held, that it was an implied term of his contract that he might at all reasonable times go home in his employer's boat, and that the accident therefore arose "out of and in the course of" his employment within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Richards v. Morris, 84 L. J. K.B. 621; [1915] 1 K.B. 221; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 112; 110 L. T. 496—C.A.

Inference as to Cause of Death.]—A bricklayer in the employment of the respondents returned from work on December 27, 1911, with a sore on the back of the thumb of his left hand. The wound appeared to heal, but ultimately blood poisoning ensued in the armpit, and the workman died on January 30, 1912. His dependants claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and evidence was given that injuries such as this were common in the case of bricklayers. The workman was engaged in cutting grooves in a wall, and had to use a hammer and chisel. In doing such work the face of the hammer might slip off the chisel and hit the workman's hand. The medical evidence was that the inflammation started under the man's armpit in the form of an abscess, due to an inflamed gland, and that an injury to the back of the thumb might give rise to this. The doctor was of opinion that the bacillus got into the man through this injury, but he said in cross-examination that he could not say that a dirty condition of the armpit might not have caused the abscess. The County Court Judge drew the inference that the man died from septic poisoning resulting from an injury which arose out of and in the course of his employment, and awarded compensation: —Held, that there was evidence from which the County Court Judge might infer that the injury to the workman happened to him while he was at work, and further that the County Court Judge was justified in accepting the evidence of the doctor and holding that the workman's death was due to the accident. Fleet v. Johnson, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 149; 57 S. J. 226; 29 T. L. R. 207—C.A.

Evidence — Inference.] — A workman employed on the night shift in the defendants' colliery went to his work on the night of Friday, December 9, about eleven o'clock, and returned at 7.30 the next morning. On his return there was a red patch on his right arm, and also a scratch on his thumb. The workman died on December 21 of blood poisoning, which, according to the medical evidence, resulted from the scratch on the thumb. Evidence was given that there had been some fall of stone on the man while he was working on the Friday night. The medical testimony, however, was to the effect that the red patch on the arm was caused by inflammation from the scratch on the thumb, and that no case had ever been known in which inflammation had appeared earlier than twelve hours after the introduction of the septic poisoning. In a claim for compensation by the workman's widow the County Court Judge thought there was no satisfactory direct evidence that the injury through which septic poisoning was caused was received at the colliery, but he was, however, of opinion, on the authority of Mitchell v. Glamorgan Colliery Co. (23 T. L. R. 588), that he was entitled to infer that the probabilities were that the injury was received at the colliery, and he concluded that the injury arose out of and in the course of the employment of the workman. On an appeal by the employers:—Held, allowing the appeal, that there was no evidence, and nothing in the case of Mitchell v. Glamorgan Colliery Co. (supra), which entitled the County Court Judge to draw the inference which he did. Jenkins v. Standard Colliery, 105 L. T. 730; 28 T. L. R. 7—C.A.

—— Balance of Evidence.] — A collier died from acute blood poisoning caused, according to the medical evidence, by septic infection getting into a superficial abrasion of the skin just below his kneecap. That was stated to be a frequent cause of blood poisoning in colliers, abrasions being occasioned by kneeling on the coal dust while working in a very narrow seam. The dependant of the deceased claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. It was decided by the County Court Judge that if he was allowed to draw a legitimate inference from the fact that the deceased had been cutting coal on his knees in a very narrow seam the conclusion would be that he was injured while working in his employer's colliery; but that, according to the principle laid down in authorities subsequent to that of Mitchell v. Glamorgan Coal Co. (23 T. L. R. 588), other possibilities could not be disregarded. The dependant appealed :—Held, that the finding of the County Court Judge ought not to be interfered with. Howe v. Fernhill Collieries, 107 L. T. 508; [1912] W.C. Rep. 408—C.A.

—— Balance of Probabilities—Inference to be Drawn.]—On the morning of August 14, 1911, a collier started at his work in his employers' coal mine having made no complaint to any one, nor did any one see him walking as if there was anything the matter with his feet. Later on he came out of the stall where he had been working and complained to the headman that his foot hurt him. The headman found in the stall a piece of rock, weighing about three or four pounds, on the floor, which had fallen from the roof during the working hours. On August 19 a doctor examined the foot and found a small wound about half an inch in length of a kind that might have been caused, in the doctor's opinion, by a piece of stone falling on it, and death, in the doctor's opinion, was due to tetanus supervening on the wound. A scratch or nearly healed scar on the sole of the foot was also discovered. On August 25 the workman was found to be suffering from tetanus, from which he died the next day. The County Court Judge, giving effect to what was laid down by the House of Lords in Richard Evans & Co. v. Astley (80 L. J. K.B. 1177; [1911] A.C. 674), held that the more probable conclusion from the evidence was that an accident had happened to the deceased arising out of and in the course of his employment, the inference to be drawn therefrom being that the wounds on his foot were caused by the fall of the stone; and that therefore his death was caused by that accident. The employers appealed :—Held, that there was evidence to support the finding of the learned County Court Judge. Stapleton v. Dinnington Main Coal Co., 107 L. T. 247; [1912] W.C. Rep. 376—C.A.

ii. Accident in Doing Act Without Authority or in Contravention of Rules.

Act of Workman Outside Sphere of his Employment.]—Where a workman is employed to do a particular thing and to do it in a particular way and meets with an accident, he may obtain compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1906, if in the course of doing that he never embarked on a dangerous mode contrary to the regulations of his employers. But where being employed at area "A," which is limited to the sphere of his operations, he goes into area "B" and meets with an accident, the employer is not liable, inasmuch as the workman has done something which he was not authorised or employed to do, and altogether outside the sphere of his employment. McCabe v. North, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 513: 109 L. T. 369—C.A.

Prohibited Act Outside Employment—Cleaning Machinery in Motion.]—A workman was employed in a factory as underman at a mangle. His duties were to carry the cloth to and from the mangle and to assist the headman in putting it on to the rollers. It was no part of his duty to be inside the rail fencing the mangle or to interfere with the mangle while working. Cleaning machinery while in motion was prohibited, but on two days in each week the machinery was stopped in the early morning for cleaning, and it was the duty of the workman to assist the headman to clean the mangle at those times. While the machinery was in motion, and in the absence of the headman, the workman, without orders, went inside the rail and attempted to clean a part of the mangle, and was injured :—Held, that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. M'Diarmid v. Ogilvie, [1913] S. C. 1103—Ct. of Sess.

Serious and Wilful Misconduct — Non-compliance with Special Rules.]—The applicant for compensation was a girl of fourteen, who was engaged as a bottler in a soda-water factory. While she was at work a bottle exploded in the machine, and a piece of glass struck and injured her right wrist, with the result that she was disabled for fourteen weeks. At the time of the accident she was wearing a glove on her left hand, but had no protection on the right as required by the special rules under the Factory and Workshop Acts for the bottling of soda water, which were posted up. The employer set up that the accident was due to the applicant's serious and wilful misconduct in not wearing protective gauntlets on both arms as required by the rules, and as she had been told to do by himself and the forewoman. The County Court Judge found that gauntlets were provided, that the applicant knew she had to wear them, but that the forewoman, whose duty it was to see that the applicant wore them, had allowed her to do the work without a gauntlet on her right hand to disregard the rules, and only verbally told the applicant to obey the rules to protect herself with the employer. The County Court Judge therefore held that the defence of serious and wilful misconduct had not been established :—Held, that the Court would not interfere with the decision of the County Court Judge. Casey v. Humphries, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 485; 57 S. J. 716; 29 T. L. R. 647—C.A.

Doing Work in a Wrong Way.]—If an accident occurs through a workman doing his work in a wrong way it may be an accident arising out of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The respondent was employed by the appellants to attend to a rolling machine. It was his duty to stand at the machine, but he chose, in disobedience to the rules, to sit on the guard, and in consequence his foot was caught in the rollers and seriously injured. The accident would not have happened if he had remained standing :—Held, that the accident arose out of his employment, and that he was entitled to compensation. Blair & Co. v. Chilton, 84 L. J. K.B. 1147; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 283; 113 L. T. 514; 59 S. J. 474; 31 T. L. R. 437—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 346) affirmed. Ib.

Disobedience — Distinction between Doing Assigned Task in Wrong Way and Doing Task not Assigned.] — A workman was employed to dig flints in a quarry where there was a trench into which he was forbidden to go. On the evidence his employment was to dig in the quarry, but not in the trench. An accident having caused his death while in the trench,—Held, that his dependants were not entitled to compensation. Harding v. Brynddu Colliery Co. (80 L. J. Coal Miner not Working where Directed — Disobedience to Orders — Orders Limiting Method, not Sphere of Employment.]—A coal miner was at work in a mine hewing coal at a spot in a gallery known as the "horse level." The under-manager, seeing there was danger there from a threatened fall of stone, directed the miner and others working with him to move from the horse level a few yards into an adjoining gallery running at right-angles into the horse level, and get the coal there. While the miner was working a stone fell upon him, causing injuries resulting in permanent incapacity. It was proved that at the time of the accident the miner was not working where directed by the under-manager, but in the horse level. On an application by the workman for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906,—Held, that the workman had been guilty of disobedience of orders in not working where directed; that the orders went only as to the method in which the work was to be done and not to limit the sphere of the employment; and that, inasmuch as the workman was about the work he was employed to do, though in an improper manner, the accident was one arising "in the course of the employment" so as to entitle him to compensation. Jackson v. Denton Collieries Co., [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 91; 110 L. T. 559—C.A.

Workman Resorting to Wrong Place for Necessary Purpose—Serious and Wilful Misconduct.]—A workman, who was employed to attend to the boilers at a colliery, left his work on one occasion for a necessary purpose; but instead of going to the water closets provided by his employers, he went into a space under the table engine about four feet in height. While there he accidentally plunged his foot into a cistern in the floor of this place, which received the escape water from the engine, and his foot was thereby scalded: —Held, that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of his employment. Thomson v. Flemington Coal Co., [1911] S. C. 823—Ct. of Sess.

Per Lord Salvesen: The workman was guilty of serious and wilful misconduct. Ib.

The deceased workman was a labourer employed in the construction of a dock, and at eleven o'clock at night the night gang, of whom he was one, were ordered to go from one part of the dock to another. They marched in single file, and the deceased, who was the last man in the file, intimated to the next man in front that he wanted to stop to ease nature. The others went on, and after a while the next man called out to the deceased asking him why he was not coming on. Getting no answer, he went back and found the deceased dead, his body having been crushed between the upper and lower parts of a hoist. The structure was so low that the deceased must have stooped down to enter. The scene of the accident was amply lighted. The arbitrator found as a fact that the man entered the hoist intentionally, and that it was an unreasonable place for him to go to for the purpose, and that therefore the accident did not arise out of the employment:—Held, that, there being evidence to support these findings, the arbitrator was justified in finding that the accident did not arise out of the employment, the risk taken by the workman not being one reasonably incident to the employment. Rose v. Morrison & Mason, Lim., 80 L. J. K.B. 1103; 105 L. T. 2—C.A.

Dangerous Method of Doing Work.] — On September 20, 1913, a farm bailiff locked up the outbuildings in his charge at 8 P.M., and after laying the key of the poultry house on a ledge near a sliding window in the cowshed, locked up the cowshed and put the key to it in his pocket. He was away for over three hours, and on his return he went round the premises according to his usual practice to see that everything was all right. He also went to the cowshed to get the key of the poultry house, as he always kept the keys intrusted to him in his house at night. He then found that he had left the key of the cowshed in his house near by. Thereupon he went to the sliding window, opened it, and vaulted on to the window sill some five feet from the ground. Then, sitting on the sill, he reached inside for the key, but in doing so overbalanced and fell, and was killed. There were other occasions on which he had vaulted on to the sill to get keys from the ledge:—Held, that, although it might be that the deceased had acted imprudently in vaulting on to the sill to get the key, the accident was one which arose out of and in the course of the man's employment, and his dependants were entitled to recover compensation from the employer under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Pepper v. Sayer, 83 L. J. K.B. 1756; [1914] 3 K.B. 994; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 423; 111 L. T. 708; 58 S. J. 669; 30 T. L. R. 621—C.A.

The transgression of a prohibition which limits the sphere of employment is an act not within the scope of a workman's employment, and therefore he is not entitled to compensation if an accident results; but he may be if the prohibition only extends to conduct within the sphere of his employment. Plumb v. Cobden Flour Mills Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 107; [1914] A.C. 62; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 48; 109 L. T. 759; 58 S. J. 184; 30 T. L. R. 174—H.L. (E.)

A workman who was employed to stack

sacks by hand, made use, with the object of making the work easier, of the revolving shafting of some machinery which ran through the room in which he was employed. This use of the shafting was not known to his employers, and would have been forbidden by them if they had known of it. He was caught by the shafting and severely injured while so engaged: —Held, that the accident did not arise "out of" his employment within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that he was not entitled to compensation. Ib.

Getting on Train in Motion.]—A workman on his way home by a route across his employer's property which he was allowed to take, tried to get into one of the trucks of a train which was moving up an incline, which was on his way home, and fell between the trucks and was killed. There was a regulation that no one except the persons in charge of the train should ride on any moving train on an incline without special leave:—Held, that the accident did not arise "out of" or "in the course of" his employment, and that his dependants were not entitled to compensation. Pope v. Hill's Plymouth Co., 105 L. T. 678; [1912] W.C. Rep. 15—H.L. (E.)

A workman was employed as a shunter, and it was part of his duty to walk in front of any train with which he was working while it moved about the employers' works. On January 17, 1914, he worked with an engine until 12.30 P.M., when it was time to stop work. The engine had to return to its shed three-quarters of a mile away, and started to go there, pushing four waggons in front of it. According to the workman's own story, he jumped upon a front buffer of the leading waggon, and then slipped, fell across the rails, and was run over. In the result both his legs had to be amputated. There was a notice in the locomotive shed that the look-out man must be in front of the waggons on pain of instant dismissal, and the workman admitted that he had no business to get on to a buffer, and that any one seen riding on the buffer by the manager would be dismissed. Upon an application for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906.—Held (Phillimore, L.J., dissenting), that the accident did not arise "out of" the employment, but was due to an added risk to which the workman's conduct had exposed him, and which was put outside the sphere of his employment by a genuine prohibition. Barnes v. Nunnery Colliery Co. (81 L. J. K.B. 213; [1912] A.C. 44; [1912] W.C. Rep. 90) applied. Chilton v. Blair & Co. ([1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 346) distinguished. Herbert v. Fox & Co., 84 L. J. Train Provided for Conveyance of Workmen to Colliery—Riding on Footboard—Prohibited Act.]—A collier on his way to the colliery in a train provided for the men by the employers, when near the station and before the train had stopped, got out of the carriage on to the footboard so as to be ready to jump off as soon as the train arrived at the stopping-place. He fell off and lost both hands. The County Court Judge held that he was riding in the train in the course of his employment, and therefore, although he was guilty of wilful misconduct, the injury being permanent, he was entitled to compensation:—Held (Buckley, L.J., dissenting), that this decision must be affirmed. Per Buckley, L.J.: The accident was caused by a peril which did not arise out of the employment, but from an added peril to which the workman by his own conduct exposed himself. Watkins v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds, 106 L. T. 818; [1912] W.C. Rep. 151—C.A.

Workman in Course of Employment Walking on Railway instead of on Road.]—A canal overseer, having occasion, in the course of his employment, to walk from a railway station to his office on the banks of the canal, proceeded thither along the railway line, where, at a narrow and dangerous spot, he was knocked down and killed by a passing train. There was no necessity for the deceased to go along the railway line, for he could have proceeded to his office by the public road, the distance being only slightly longer. He had no right to walk on the railway line, and had been warned by one of his superiors not to do so:—Held, that, although the accident arose "in the course of" the employment, it did not arise "out of" the employment. M'Laren v. Caledonian Railway, [1911] S. C. 1075—Ct. of Sess.

Dangerous Act Committed in Breach of Rules—Railway Porter Jumping on to Footboard of Incoming Train.]—A railway porter, whose duty it was to unload passengers' luggage, was seriously and permanently injured by falling on to the rails while attempting to jump on to the footboard of an incoming train in order to be ready to remove the luggage as quickly as possible when the train stopped. This act was in breach of the company's rules, a copy of which the porter had received but had not read, and he had been reprimanded by the station master for doing the same thing on previous occasions: —Held, that the accident arose out and in the course of his employment. M'William v. Great North of Scotland Railway, [1914] S. C. 453; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 135—Ct. of Sess.

Message Clerk Injured while Boarding Tramcar in Motion.]—A boy, employed as a message clerk, was sent on an errand and given money to pay for his tramway fare. While attempting unnecessarily to board a tramway car in motion—which, as he knew, was forbidden—he fell and was injured:—Held, that the accident did not arise out of the boy's employment. Symon v. Wemyss Coal Co., [1912] S. C. 1239; [1912] W.C. Rep. 336—Ct. of Sess.

Message Boy Injured while Using Hoist against Orders.]—A message boy was employed by a fishmonger to deliver fish at the kitchen of an infirmary situated on the third storey of the building. The ordinary means of access to the kitchen was a stair, but there was also a hoist, with, however, a notice, publicly displayed, announcing that it was to be used only by servants of the institution and worked only by those authorised by the directors. The message boy, when on his way to deliver fish at the infirmary, found the gate of the hoist standing open, entered the hoist and set it in motion, and his foot was jammed between the floor of the hoist and the wall, and injured. He knew he was doing wrong in using the hoist, for on several previous occasions, and in particular on the evening before the accident, the porter had seen him making his way to the hoist, and had rebuked him and forbidden him to use it, and sent him up the stair :—Held, that the accident did not arise out of and in the course of the boy's employment. M'Daid v. Steel, [1911] S. C. 859—Ct. of Sess.

Bookkeeper in Course of Employment Killed in Crossing Railway Line at Station—Risk Increased by Defiance of Rules.]—A bookkeeper and manager employed by a builder had in the course of his employment to travel daily a short distance by train to a station near which his employer lived, and where his work lay. On arrival, in order to save time, instead of using the footbridge provided for passengers, he used to cross the line on the level. The rules of the company prohibited this practice, but they were not enforced by the station master, and it was adopted by many other people, including the employer himself. One day, in so crossing the line, the workman was knocked down and killed by an express train :—Held, that the accident did not arise out of the employment. Pritchard v. Torkington, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 271; 111 L. T. 917; 58 S. J. 739—C.A.

Coal Mine—Explosion—Miner's Breach of Order.]—A fireman discovered a dangerous accumulation of gas in an "upset" in a mine, and accordingly placed a fence across the entrance with the words "No road up here" chalked upon it. A miner, for the purpose of getting a pick which had been left in the upset and which he required for his work, crossed the fence with a naked light in his cap, entered the upset, and was killed by an explosion of gas. The miner, who had been in conversation with the fireman and had watched him erecting the fence, had been told not to enter the upset and understood that there was a dangerous accumulation of gas there, besides being well aware of a special rule in force in the mine forbidding miners to pass any fence :—Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the deceased's employment. Conway v. Pumpherston Oil Co., [1911] S. C. 660—Ct. of Sess.

Observations on disobedience to an order as affecting the question whether an accident arises "in the course of" the employment. Ib.

Miner Endeavouring to Fire a Blast Contrary to Rule.]—A miner was employed in a pit in which the use of explosives was regulated by certain rules which provided (inter alia)—First, that every charge should be fired by a competent person appointed in writing for this duty; and secondly, that detonators should be under the control of a person specially appointed in writing, and should be issued only to shot firers. The mine owners had in writing duly appointed a shot firer, and had also appointed him to have the control of the detonators. In the absence of the shot firer the miner, who had in the course of his employment been preparing a shot for firing, and who had in his possession a detonator, which, however, he had not obtained from the shot firer, determined to fire the shot himself, and inserted the detonator in it for that purpose. The insertion of detonators was usually performed by the miners and not by the shot firer. When the miner attempted to ignite the fuse the shot exploded prematurely and killed him, the cause of the explosion being an accidental ignition of the fuse prior to the miner's attempt to ignite it :—Held, that the accident happened while the miner was arrogating to himself a duty which he was neither engaged nor entitled to perform, and accordingly that it did not arise out of and in the course of the employment. Kerr v. Baird, [1911] S. C. 701—Ct. of Sess.

—— Miner Taking upon Himself Duty not Intrusted to Him.]—A repairer was engaged in making repairs on an air course in a mine, and it was necessary for him to bring wood to that place for the purpose. This could be done by hauling the wood up the air course, or by taking it up in hutches by a wheel brae, and the repairer was directed to take it up by the air course and not by the wheel brae. The wheel brae was worked by gravity, an empty hutch or a hutch loaded with wood being pulled up by a descending hutch loaded with coal. At the foot of the wheel brae was posted a "hanger on" to whose sole charge was entrusted the duty of attaching hutches there and of giving the necessary signals to the man at the top, who then set the hutches on the wheel brae in motion. The hanger on had attached an empty hutch and had given the appropriate signal to the man at the top, and then temporarily left the foot of the brae to wheel out a full hutch. In his absence the repairer loaded the empty hutch in an unskilful manner with wood, and the man at the top, having already received the necessary signal, attached a full hutch and started the wheel. The chain broke, and the repairer was struck by the descending full hutch and killed :—Held, that the repairer was killed while arrogating to himself a duty which he was neither engaged nor entitled to perform, and accordingly that the accident did not arise out of his employment. Kerr v. Baird & Co. ([1911] S. C. 701) followed. Burns v. Summerlee Iron Co., [1913] S. C. 227; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 45—Ct. of Sess.

Miner Connecting Detonator Wire to Cable —Unauthorised Act.]—An injury to a workman by an accident caused by his arrogating to himself duties which he was not called on to perform, and had no right to perform, does not arise out of his employment, if the efficient cause of the accident is connected with the arrogation of unauthorised duty by the workman. But where the authorised "shot firer" in a mine allowed a workman to connect the detonator wire with the electric cable, which he ought not to have allowed, and then himself connected the cable with the battery, and fired the shot prematurely, whereby the workman was injured,—Held, that the injury did not arise out of illicit and unauthorised action of the workman, and that he was entitled to recover compensation as for an injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. Smith v. Fife Coal Co., 83 L. J. P.C. 359; [1914] A.C. 723; 111 L. T. 477; 58 S. J. 533; 30 T. L. R. 502—H.L. (Sc.)

Miner—Sphere of Employment—Serious and Wilful Misconduct.]—The deceased workman was a collier and was employed with another man to drill a hole from above into a stall below to let out the gas in the stall. The entrance to the stall from below had been blocked with boards to shew that it was unsafe to enter. The drill had been driven some time without reaching the stall, and the deceased asked an overman if he might go into the stall from below in order to judge from the sound if the drill was being driven in the right direction, and the overman forbade him to do so. Notwithstanding this, the deceased entered the stall and was suffocated by the gas:—Held (Cozens-Hardy, M.R., and Kennedy, L.J.; Buckley, L.J., dissentiente), that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment, and that the dependants were entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Harding v. Brynddu Colliery Co., 80 L. J. K.B. 1052; [1911] 2 K.B. 747; 105 L. T. 55; 55 S. J. 599; 27 T. L. R. 500—C.A.

Collier Killed while Riding in Tub—Prohibition against, without Permission of Manager or Underlooker.]—A collier met his death while riding in a tub at the conclusion of his mining work in the night shift. There was a rule at the employers' colliery to the effect that no person should ride any animal, tub, or waggon except when permitted by the manager or underlooker. There was no proof that the deceased had ever been furnished with a copy of that special rule, or that his attention had ever been called thereto by any one in authority. Moreover, there was no evidence that the deceased knew that he was doing wrong in travelling as he did in the tub. The fireman was the only person who could be regarded as the official in charge of the mine at night. The manager never went down the mine, and the underlooker seldom went down—three or four times a year. In the case of the night shifts when the tubs were going up to a large extent empty, the general practice of the workmen leaving the night shift in order to return to their homes, was to ride in the tubs in the particular part of the mine where the accident to the deceased occurred, and to do so with the acquiescence and tacit permission of the fireman:—Held, that the effect of the acquiescence and tacit permission given by the fireman—who was the proper person to give permission when permission was required—to a collier who was not proved to have seen or even known of the existence of the rule in question, and who had acted in accordance with that which was the universal custom in the mine, was sufficient; and that to suggest that an individual collier was to ascertain the authority of the fireman was altogether unreasonable, and therefore that it was a case in which the employers must be taken through their official in charge to have "winked at" the non-observance of the rule; and that therefore it was not such an unauthorised act on the part of the collier as to disentitle his dependant to compensation. Barnes v. Nunnery Colliery Co. (81 L. J. K.B. 213; [1912] A.C. 44) distinguished. Richardson v. Denton Colliery Co., [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 554; 109 L. T. 370—C.A.

A miner on leaving his work jumped on to a hutch for the purpose of getting a ride to the pit bottom, and was injured by reason of his doing so. By a special rule in force in the mine, of which the miner was aware, miners were forbidden to ride on hutches:—Held, that the injury was not caused by an accident arising "out of" the employment. Kane v. Merry & Cunninghame, [1911] S. C. 533—Ct. of Sess.

A boy of seventeen travelled in a tub drawn by an endless rope along a level in a mine and was fatally injured. The use of the tubs was forbidden both by notice in the mine and by a special rule of the colliery:—Held, that the accident did not arise out of the deceased's employment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Barnes v. Nunnery Colliery Co., 81 L. J. K.B. 213; [1912] A.C. 44; 105 L. T. 961; 56 S. J. 159; 28 T. L. R. 135; [1912] W.C. Rep. 90—H.L. (E.)

Process of Mining—Surface Labour.]—A man employed at the pit-head of a colliery as a surface labourer,—Held, not to be employed in the process of "mining" in the sense in which that expression is used in relation to industrial diseases in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Scullion v. Cadzow Coal Co., [1914] S. Disablement "the happening of the accident"—Claim by Workman who has Left Employment Prior to Date of Disablement.]—Section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, which makes disablement by industrial disease equivalent to injury by accident for purposes of compensation, contains a proviso that "the disablement . . . shall be treated as the happening of the accident":—Held, that the proviso merely fixes the date of disablement as the date from which the compensation is payable, and does not have the effect, where the workman has left the employment prior to the date of the disablement, of excluding a claim for compensation on the ground that the accident did not happen in the course of the employment. Neary v.

Eczematous Ulceration—Disease Contracted in Service of One Employer — Recurrence on Subsequent Employment by Another — Susceptibility to Disease—Liability of Successive Employers.]—A workman contracted, in 1910, an industrial disease while engaged in building work in the employment of certain employers. He left their service to obtain work of another character. In January, 1913, he engaged in the same sort of work which had caused the disease, with Messrs. M., and the disease returned. He left their employment after working for a few days and received compensation from them down to March, 1913, when he had recovered from the disease. He then undertook other work, but in June, 1914, he went back to the same sort of work, and got employment with S. & M., and the disease reappeared, and he had to abandon the job. He claimed compensation from Messrs. M. on account of the injury sustained in January, 1913. The County Court Judge found that, although he had recovered from the attack of January, 1913, the susceptibility to the disease continued, and he awarded compensation to be paid by Messrs. M. :—Held, that prima facie the workman was entitled to recover compensation from S. & M. as his last employers, who ought to have been respondents and might have set up, under section 8, sub-section 1 (i) (c) (ii), that other employers were liable, but that it was not open to him to make a claim and recover compensation from Messrs. M., as it was not shewn that his susceptibility to the disease was contracted while in their employment. Timpson v. Mowlem & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1449; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 219; 112 L. Lead Poisoning—Last Employer—Burden of Proof—"At or immediately before the date of the disablement."]—Where a claim for compensation is made by the dependant of a workman who has died from a disease mentioned in the Third Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, against an employer by whom he has been employed within twelve months previous to the date of his death in a process, the nature of which is such as to cause the disease, the applicant proceeding under section 8, sub-section 1, must prove that the disease was in fact caused or aggravated by that employment, and it is not enough merely to shew that the employment was one of a nature or kind in which the disease might be caused. Dean v. Rubian Art Pottery, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 799; [1914] 2 K.B. 213; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 147; 110 L. T. 594; 58 S. J. 302; 30 T. L. R. 283 – C.A.

A workman who was already suffering from advanced lead poisoning worked for 8½ days only for the respondents in March and April, 1913, in a lead process, leaving their employment on April 19. He died on May 15, 1913, as a result of lead poisoning :—Held, that under section 8, sub-section 1, the workman's dependants, in order to recover compensation from the respondents, must shew that the death was due to lead poisoning arising out of the employment with the respondents. Held, also, that the burden of proof could not be shifted on to the respondents under sub-section 2 of section 8, as April 19, when the workman was last employed by the respondents, was not "at or immediately before" his death on May 15. Ib.

A miner was employed by A between January 28 and April 16, 1913. From April 16, 1913, till January 27, 1914, he was out of employment owing to an injury to his leg. Having recovered from that injury he entered the employment of B on January 27, 1914. He worked in that employment on that day and the following day, but did not return to his work after January 28, 1914, owing to trouble with his eyesight. He was afterwards certified to be suffering from miner's nystagmus, the disablement being found to date from January 28, 1914. In an arbitration in which the miner claimed compensation from B, the Sheriff-Substitute held that the disease was in part due to the nature of the workman's employment before January 28, 1914, and in part due to the nature of his employment between January 28, 1913, and April 16, 1913, and on January 27 and 28, 1914; and he awarded compensation :—Held, that it was not necessary for the workman, in order to succeed in his application, to prove either—first, that the disease was due to any particular thing done to or suffered by him on the two days he was in the employment of B; or secondly, that it was solely due to the nature of his employment during the period of twelve months prior to his disablement to the exclusion of any previous period; and award upheld. Dicta in Dean v. Rubian Art Pottery (83 L. Observations (per Lord Johnston and Lord Skerrington) as to the meaning of the term "employment" in section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Ib.

A miner obtained from a certifying surgeon a certificate that he was disabled for work by miner's nystagmus, which is one of the diseases scheduled to the employment of mining. For eight months prior to the date of disablement he had been out of employment, having been incapacitated, while working as a miner, by an accident, which, however, was not proved to have caused or accelerated the nystagmus. The miner having claimed compensation from the employer with whom he was last employed—that is, eight months before the disablement,—Held, that the employment was not "at or immediately before the date of disablement" in the sense of sub-section 2 of section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and consequently, that the miner was not entitled to the benefit of the statutory presumption that his disease was due to the nature of his employment, but that the onus was upon him to prove that it was so. M'Taggart v. Barr, [1915] S. C. 224; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 335—Ct. of Sess.

"Due to the nature of any employment" —Disease "contracted."]—Observations (per Lord Skerrington) on the interpretation to be put on the words "due to the nature of any employment," and the word "contracted," used in section 8 of the Act with regard to industrial diseases. Ib.

Liability of Recurrence after Recovery—Increased Susceptibility—Congenital Defect—Onus of Proof.—A miner who had been incapacitated by an industrial disease, and had been paid compensation, completely recovered, and the compensation was stopped. He then applied for an award as being partially incapacitated owing to increased susceptibility from having once had the disease, and adduced medical evidence to this effect. There was unanimous medical evidence, however, that such susceptibility was also due to a congenital defect from which he suffered. The County Court Judge held there was no incapacity, and dismissed the application:—Held, that there was no misdirection. Jones v. Guest, Keen & Nettlefolds, Lim., [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 508; 60 S. J. 75—C.A.

Nystagmus—Liability to Recurrence—Loss of Employment—"Sequelæ" of Disease.]—Where a workman who has suffered from nystagmus—an industrial disease within section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906—has recovered from the disease, but is proved to be under an increased susceptibility to a recurrence of the same complaint, whereby he loses employment, he is entitled to compensation under the Act. Such susceptibility is not a "sequela," but a result of the disease. Dicta of the Court in Jones v. New Brynmally Colliery Co. ([1912] W.C. Rep. 281) followed. Garnant Anthracite Collieries v. Rees, 81 L. J. K.B. 1189; [1912] 3 K.B. 372; 107 L. T. 279; [1912] W.C. Rep. 396—C.A.

Where there was no evidence that miner's nystagmus—an "industrial disease" within the meaning of section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906—from which a collier had been suffering, due to the nature of the employment in which he had been employed, but from which he had entirely recovered, rendered him more liable to the danger of a recurrence of that disease rather than that he possessed a physical susceptibility to the disease not common to all colliers, it was held that there was not sufficient evidence to support an award for compensation under section 1 of the Act because his employers would not permit him to work for them underground again. Jones v. New Brynmally Colliery Co., 106 L. T. 524; [1912] W.C. Rep. 281—C.A.

Decision of Medical Referee Final—Form of Certificate.—The order of a medical referee, allowing an appeal against the refusal of a certifying surgeon to give a certificate of disablement to a workman in respect of an industrial disease and fixing the date of the man's disablement, is a sufficient certificate for the purpose of proceedings for compensation under section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906; and it is a final and conclusive finding for the purposes of these proceedings that the workman has suffered from the industrial disease, and has been thereby disabled from the date of disablement to the date of the hearing before the certifying surgeon from earning full wages at the work at which he was employed. Chuter v. Ford & Sons, Lim., 84 L. J. K.B. 703; [1915] 2 K.B. 113; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 104; 112 L. T. 881; 31 T. L. R. 187—C.A.

Act Incorporated in Scheme.]—The rules of a contracting-out scheme which had been duly certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies provided that it was intended to be in substitution for the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and common law liability, and was intended to provide a fund for the payment of compensation to any member of the scheme in respect of personal injury caused by accident arising out of or in the course of such member's employment:—Held, that the word "accident" must be read in the sense in which it is used in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and as therefore including disablement owing to industrial disease, and that the sections of the Act of 1906 dealing with the recovery of compensation for industrial disease must be read into the scheme. Horn v. Admiralty Commissioners, 80 L. J. K.B. 278; [1911] 1 K.B. 24, distinguished. Leaf v. Furze, 83 L. J. K.B. 1822; [1914] 3 K.B. 1068; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 601; 111 L. T. 1100—D.

Sea Voyage to Place of Work—Loss of Ship—Death of Servant—Compensation—Member of Ship's Crew.]—The Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, has no application in the case of an accident happening on a British ship on the high seas unless the accident happens to a member of the crew within the provisions of section 7 of the statute. Schwartz v. India-rubber, Gutta-percha, and Telegraph Works, Lim., 81 L. J. K.B. 780; [1912] 2 K.B. 299; 106 L. T. 706; 28 T. L. R. 331; [1912] W.C. Rep. 190—C.A.

An electrical engineer was engaged by an English company to do certain electrical work for them in Teneriffe, and whilst on his way in a British ship to perform his duties—his fare being paid by his employers, as well as his wages during the voyage—the ship in which he travelled was lost in the Bay of Biscay, and he was presumed to have been drowned:—Held, that his widow was not entitled to recover compensation under section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, inasmuch as the Act only applies to cases of employment within the ambit of the United Kingdom, unless the person injured is a member of the crew of a British ship within the meaning of section 7 of that Act, whereas the deceased man did not come within the provisions of that section. Ib.

Employment of a Casual Nature—Jobbing Gardener.]—A man who described himself as a jobbing gardener was employed at a daily wage in lopping trees and doing other work in a private garden for a period which had lasted five weeks, when he was incapacitated by accident :—Held, in a claim for compensation, that he was not a "workman" within the definition of the Act, as his employment was of a casual nature. Knight v. Bucknill, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 175; 57 S. J. 245—C.A.

Meters and Weighers Licensed by Conservancy Board under Statutory Powers—Meter Weighing for Steamship Company.]—A conservancy board under statutory provisions appointed and licensed a body of meters and weighers for their port. The board derived no pecuniary profit from their services. Only licensed meters and weighers could be employed in the port. They could be dismissed by the board. They were sent in rotation to persons desiring their services. Such persons paid for their services according to a fixed scale through the meters office of the board, and not directly. Such persons entirely controlled the actual work done, and could, if dissatisfied with a meter, dismiss him and ask for another licensed meter, but otherwise they had no power of selection and dismissal. A steamship company required a meter to weigh cotton cake on their steamer in the port. Weighing of cotton cake in the port was not compulsory, but the company wished it done there. In the course of his employment the meter sent by the board met with an accident. He claimed compensation from the company :—Held, that there was evidence to justify the County Court Judge in finding that the meter was a "workman" and that the company were his "employers" within section 13 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and therefore liable to pay him compensation. Wilmerson v. Lynn and Hamburg Steamship Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 1064; [1913] 3 K.B. 931; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 633; 109 L. T. 53; 57 S. J. 700; 29 T. L. R. 652—C.A.

"Member of employer's family dwelling in his house"—Son Paying Board—Accident Occurring while Temporarily Absent on a Job.]—A glazier, aged twenty-six, was employed as an ordinary workman by, and lived with, his father in Glasgow, paying board and lodging. While engaged on a job for his father in Oban, where he lived in lodgings, he was accidentally injured. The son claimed compensation from his father, maintaining that being forisfamiliated he was not "a member of the employer's family," within section 13 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and further, that, being absent at Oban, he was not "dwelling in his house" within that section :—Held, that at the time of the accident he was "a member of the employer's family dwelling in his house," and accordingly was not a "workman" entitled to compensation. M'Dougall v. M'Dougall, [1911] S. C. 426—Ct. of Sess.

Inmate of Charitable Institution Receiving Monthly Payments in Course of Industrial Training.]—A blind pauper was injured while working in the industrial department of a charitable institution. The department, which supplied industrial training to blind persons, was not self-supporting, but depended partly on charitable aid. On account of the pauper the institution received 14*l.* 8*s.* per annum from his parish, and 20*l.* per annum from a charitable fund, and, on the other hand, supplied him with his board, lodging, and clothing, and paid him 5*s.* a month :—Held, first, that the pauper was a "workman" within the Workmen's Compensation Act; and secondly, that as the monthly payments to such blind persons were supposed, in the institution, to represent 20 per cent. of their average earnings, the compensation fell to be calculated on that basis. MacGillivray v. Northern Counties Blind Institute, [1911] S. C. 897—Ct. of Sess.

Captain of Barge.]—The owner of a sailing barge having arranged for the freight payable for a cargo on a certain voyage, appointed a man to act as captain of the vessel, giving him instructions where he was to go and what he was to do. The captain received a share of the net freight. During the voyage the captain was injured by accident :—Held, that the relation of master and servant existed between the owner of the barge and the captain, the latter being a "workman" who had entered into a "contract of service" with an employer within the meaning of section 13 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906; and that therefore he was entitled to claim compensation under that Act. Boon v. Quance (102 L. T. 443) distinguished. Smith v. Horlock, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 441; 109 L. T. 196—C.A.

Employee of Board of Guardians Appointed Subject to Approval of Local Government Board.]—A workman employed by a board of guardians who have the right of directing him in his work and of dismissing him at their own pleasure, and who are liable to pay his wages, is a servant of such board within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, although the appointment of such workman by the board of guardians, and the amount of his wages, require the approval of the Local Government Board. Doran v. Waterford Union Guardians (37 Ir. L. T. Rep. 158) approved. Murphy v. Enniscorthy Union Guardians ([1908] 2 Ir. R. 609) and National Insurance Act, 1911, In re; Officers of South Dublin Union ([1913] 1 Ir. R. 244) distinguished. Finlay v. Tullamore Union, [1914] 2 Ir. R. 233—C.A.

Harvesting—Payment in Beer and Supper—No Money Payment.]—A quarryman after his day's work was done assisted a farmer in carrying hay, and while so occupied fell from a cart and injured his spine. He was in the habit of rendering such services to the farmer for beer, or beer and supper, but he received no money payments :—Held, that there was no contract of service within section 13 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that if there was such a contract, it was illegal under the Truck Acts, 1831 and 1887. Kemp v. Lewis, 83 L. J. K.B. 1535; [1914] 3 K.B. 543; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 512; 111 L. T. 699—C.A.

Hop Picker—Domestic Servant on Holiday.]—The applicant, who was a girl of seventeen years of age and was in domestic service, arranged to go hop picking with her aunt during her fortnight's summer holiday. The aunt kept house for the applicant's father, and was employed by the respondent to pick hops for him at 1*s.* for six bushels. Besides the applicant she took with her the applicant's six brothers and sisters, who were of ages varying from twelve months to fifteen years. They were accompanied by a neighbour and her family, and the aunt and neighbour shared a crib which was divided into two parts. The crib stood in their two names, and each was paid for the hops collected into her share of the crib. On the last day of her fortnight's holiday the applicant met with an accident while hop picking, and she claimed to recover compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, from the respondent. Three matters were mainly relied on as proving a contract of service between her and the respondent. First, she gave evidence that at an interview between her aunt and the respondent, at which she was present, she heard the respondent tell her aunt that he would engage her (the applicant). In cross-examination she admitted, however, that she did not remember exactly what happened then, and it appeared that the respondent did not come to an agreement with the aunt until a subsequent date. Secondly, on reaching the hop garden, the applicant and her aunt and a sister fifteen years of age went to the respondent's farm to get bedclothes for the family, and their names were taken as the persons responsible for what each received. Thirdly, some days after the hop picking commenced the three of them saw the respondent with regard to hiring money. The farmer gave the aunt 1*s.* for herself, and she then asked for 6*d.* for each of the two girls, and, on being given two sixpences, handed one of them to the applicant, who, however, told her aunt to keep it towards her food. It appeared from the evidence that it was usual to give a hop picker 1*s.* hiring money, and that, when she brought with her children who had come to an age when their work would be really useful, she also received 6*d.* for each of them:—Held, that there was no evidence to support a finding that the relationship of servant and employer existed between the applicant and the respondent. Richards v. Pitt, 84 L. J. K.B. 1417; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 417; 113 L. T. 618—C.A.

Employment "for the purposes of the employer's trade or business"—Farmer—Man Specially Employed to Cut Hedge.]—The garden of a labourer was separated from the adjoining land of a farmer by a hedge on the land of the farmer, and the labourer complained of the height of the hedge. The farmer agreed with the labourer that the latter should cut the hedge and he would pay him 10*s.* for doing it, the farmer to have the poles from the hedge to use in his hopfield. While cutting the hedge the labourer met with an accident:—Held, that the employment, though of a casual nature, was for the purpose of the farmer's trade or business, and the labourer was a "workman" within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Tombs v. Bomford, 106 L. T. 823; [1912] W.C. Rep. 229—C.A.

"Person whose employment is of a casual nature"—Regular Seasonal Employment.]—A labourer who had been regularly employed every year for many years to work in the woods on a gentleman's estate during the season for this work, which lasted some two months, for the season, at a weekly wage, was injured by accident in this employment:—Held, that the employment was not of a casual nature, and that the man was a "workman" within section 13 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and was entitled to compensation under the Act. Smith v. Buxton, 84 L. J. K.B. 697; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 126; 112 L. T. 893—C.A.

Workman Engaged by Different Masters in a Common Employment—Interchange of Work with Knowledge and Permission of Employers—Custom of Port—Unloading Collier.]—Four men were engaged in the unloading of a collier. Three of these, a tipper and two winchmen, were employed by the shipowner; the fourth, a barrow man, was employed by the coal merchant who chartered the ship. The tipper got tired of his work and asked the barrow man to exchange work with him, which was done, the barrow man tipping the tubs of coal as they were hoisted from the hold into the barrow and the tipper wheeling off the barrow when full. While the barrow man was thus occupied in tipping he was accidentally knocked into the hold by a tub and was killed. The three surviving workmen proved that it was the habit of men so employed at the port to interchange work in this manner when unloading colliers, and there was no evidence to the contrary, and the employers did not deny their knowledge of the practice or allege that they prohibited it. There was no other evidence of any custom to interchange work at the port when unloading coal:—Held, that no such custom was proved; but that as the four men were at the time of the accident engaged in the common employment of getting the coal from the ship to the premises of the coal merchant the interchange of work was in the nature of a deviation from the workmen's special employment for the benefit and with the sanction of the employer; that the accident arose out of and in the course of the deceased's employment, and that his dependants were entitled to compensation. Henneberry v. Doyle, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 529; [1912] W.C. Rep. 14—C.A.

Independent Contractor—Agreement by Employer to Give Workman Information Enabling Him to Supplement Earnings—Services of Workman not Temporarily Lent.]—A workman was engaged by the lessee of a theatre to do work which occupied him part of the morning and the whole of each evening. For this he was paid a weekly wage, and given early information as to the movements of theatrical performers, so as to enable him to contract with them for the moving of their luggage to and from the railway station at the beginning and end of each week. While removing luggage in the performance of one of these contracts he met with injury by accident:—

Held, that he was not under the control of the lessee at the time, or temporarily lent to another person, but an independent contractor, and therefore that the accident did not arise out of or in the course of his employment. Huscroft v. Bennett. [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 9; 110 L. T. 494; 58 S. J. 284—C.A.

Payment for Some Time—Evidence of Agreement to Pay—Contention that Workman not in Employment—Estoppel.]—E. & Co. were the owners of barges each of which had a captain and mate. E. & Co. appointed the captain, and he, without any interference from E. & Co., appointed the mate, paying him a certain proportion of the amount he received from E. & Co. E. & Co. insured against liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act in respect of all the captains and also in respect of the mates. One of the mates met with an accident on a barge on February 7, 1910. E. & Co. paid him 6*s*. a week for more than six months, and it was admitted that this money came from the insurance company. A correspondence then took place between E. & Co. and a solicitor acting for the mate, which resulted in his being paid 8*s*. a week until May, 1911, it being admitted the money came from the insurance company. The County Court Judge held there was evidence of an agreement by E. & Co. to pay the applicant 8*s*. a week during incapacity, and that they were estopped from contending that at the time of the accident the mate was not in their employment:—Held, that the circumstances did not amount to an estoppel: that there had been no agreement by E. & Co. within section 1, sub-section 3, to treat the mate as a servant within the Act, and any such agreement was of no effect as the Act only applied to workmen who came within the definition in section 13. Standing v. Eastwood & Co., 106 L. T. 477; [1912] W.C. Rep. 200—C.A.

Incapacity Alleged to be Due to Similar Injury in Previous Employment — Onus of Proof.]—In December, 1908, a workman in the course of his employment felt a severe pain in his right knee on raising from a kneeling position, and on examination it was found that the cartilage was torn. Three years before, while in another employment, he had sustained a wrench to the same knee, which had incapacitated him for some weeks, after which he was able to resume his ordinary work. It was not clear on the evidence whether the later injury was connected with the former, or, if so, to what extent it was so connected. In answer to a claim by the workman for compensation against the firm in whose employment he was in December, 1908, the employers maintained that the incapacity was not due to an accident occurring in the course of his employment with them, but to the original injury:—Held, that as the injury in December, 1908, was apparently sustained in the employment of his then employers, the onus was on them to shew that it was really due to the former accident; that they had failed to discharge this onus; and that they were accordingly liable to pay compensation. Borland v. Watson, Gow & Co., [1912] S. C. 15—Ct. of Sess.

Effect of Imprisonment of Workman—Continuance of Incapacity Caused by Accident. — A workman who had met with an accident in the course of his employment, and was in receipt of 1*l*. a week compensation from his employers, was convicted of stealing and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment with hard labour. The employers stopped payment. The workman claimed compensation. He was still suffering from partial incapacity for work as the result of his accident:—Held, that, as the incapacity caused by the accident still continued, the workman, notwithstanding his imprisonment, was entitled to compensation under section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. McNally v. Furness, Withy & Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 1310; [1913] 3 K.B. 605; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 717; 109 L. T. 270; 29 T. L. R. 678—C.A.

Stoker in Mercantile Marine — Member of Royal Naval Reserve.] — Per Cozens-Hardy, M.R., and Fletcher Moulton, L.J.: The effect of section 9 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is to exempt the Crown from liability under the Act towards persons in the naval or military service of the Crown, and not in any way to affect the position of other persons. Per Farwell, L.J.: The effect of section 9 is to exclude the Crown and persons in the naval or military service of the Crown from the operation of the Act, and section 13 must accordingly be read as if the words "other than the Crown" were written into the definition of "employer," and the words "other than persons in the naval and military service of the Crown" were written into the definition of "workman." Brandy v. "Raphael" Steamship, 80 L. J. K.B. 217; [1911] 1 K.B. 376; 103 L. T. 746; 11 Asp. M.C. 541; 27 T. L. R. 127—C.A.

"Remuneration"—Amount of Earnings—Additions to Wages—Bonus—Profits on Sales of Spirits.] — The word "remuneration" in section 13 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is used in the same sense as "earnings" in the Act. Dothie v. Mac-Andrew & Co. (77 L. J. K.B. 388; [1908] 1 K.B. 803) followed. Skailes v. Blue Anchor Line, 80 L. J. K.B. 442; [1911] 1 K.B. 360; 103 L. T. 741; 55 S. J. 107; 27 T. L. R. 119—C.A.

A steward on a ship received 232*l*. per annum for wages, board and lodging, and other items, also a certain bonus from his employers if everything was satisfactory during the voyage, and also he was allowed to retain profits made by retailing glasses of whisky. Held (Fletcher Moulton, L.J., differing), that these items should be taken into account in arriving at the remuneration of the steward, so that if they brought it beyond 250*l*. a year he would not be a "workman" within the Act, and the claim of his widow for compensation on account of his death would fail. Ib.

Per Fletcher Moulton, L.J.: The question of "remuneration" must be determined by the contract of service, and not by an ex post facto examination of what may have happened under it, and therefore the contingent advantage from the bonus, not being mentioned in the contract and being a voluntary payment, should not be taken into account. As to the profits by retailing glasses of whisky, there was no evidence of the amount derived from this source which would enable the arbitrator to take such profit into account. Ib.

—— "Average weekly earnings"—Basis of Computation—Deductions for Assistance.]—A dairyman, who had to "take charge of and manage" for his employer a herd of forty-five cows and heifers "according to instructions" from his employer, and to perform duties connected therewith "as and when required" by his employer, receiving therefor 45*s.* a week with a house and some extras, was assisted in his work by his two sisters, who lived with him, and whom he paid for their assistance, though not under any agreement with them. There was no agreement between him and his employer that he should get or pay for assistance. Upon a claim for compensation for accident in the employment,—Held, that the man was a "workman" within section 13 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that, in estimating his "average weekly earnings" under Schedule I. clause 2 of the Act, the value of the sisters' assistance could not be deducted. Roper v. Freke, 84 L. J. K.B. 1351; [1915] 3 K.B. 222; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 377; 113 L. T. 635; 59 S. J. 596; 31 T. L. R. 507—C.A.

—— Exceeding 250*l.* a Year.]—The captain of a ship was employed under an agreement dated March 13, 1914, to take command at the rate of wages of 20*l.* per month, and it was provided in the agreement that if he kept the ship free of all damage and claims he was to receive a gratuity of 48*l.* per annum, but that if he failed to do so he was to forfeit the gratuity and have his remuneration reduced to 16*l.* per month. The ship was lost with all hands on April 12, 1914, and the widow applied on behalf of herself and the other dependants of the deceased for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. In the course of the proceedings the value of the deceased's board and accommodation on his ship was assessed at 45*l.* 10*s.* per annum, and no question arose as to this:—Held, that the captain's remuneration did not exceed 250*l.* a year, and that he was therefore a "workman" within section 13 of the Act, and that his dependants were entitled to compensation. Williams v. "Maritime" (Owners), 84 L. J. K.B. 663; [1915] 2 K.B. 137; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 97; 112 L. T. 907; 31 T. L. R. 218—C.A.

In determining the remuneration, regard must be had only to the existing agreement and what had happened under it, and seeing that the ship had been lost she had not been kept free of damage, and the deceased's salary must be taken as 16*l.* per month, which, with 45*l.* 10*s.* for board and lodging, was less than 250*l.* a year. So held by Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., and Swinfen Eady, L.J. (Phillimore, L.J., dubitante). Per Phillimore, L.J.: The better course is to estimate the salary having regard to the various possible contingencies; but if this is done the remuneration is still less than 250*l.* a year. Ib.

Claim for Death of Seaman—Unregistered Ship—Ship Originally Registered.]—The registration of a ship of thirty-five tons was closed and she sailed as an unregistered ship from Lowestoft for Norway, and on the voyage was lost at sea. Upon claim for compensation by the dependant of a deceased seaman lost with the ship,—Held, that the ship was not a British ship within section 2 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and that no claim could be made under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, s. 7, sub-s. 1. Mortimer v. Wisker, 83 L. J. K.B. 1245; [1914] 3 K.B. 699; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 530; 111 L. T. 732; 30 T. L. R. 592—C.A.

Payments Ended by Arbitrator on Ground of Recovery — Supervening Incapacity — New Application for Compensation—Competency.]—The compensation payable under a recorded agreement to a workman by his employers in respect of injuries received in an accident was ended by an arbitrator on an application for review brought under section 16 of Schedule I. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, on the ground that the workman had recovered. Subsequently the workman instituted arbitration proceedings under section 1, sub-section 3 of the Act, for an award of compensation, averring that incapacity had again supervened:—Held, that the new application was incompetent and that the workman could not again obtain compensation in respect of the accident, the payments having been ended by the arbitrator. Cadenhead v. Ailsa Shipbuilding Co., [1910] S. C. 1129—Ct. of Sess.

ii. Crew of Fishing Vessels.

Fisherman Partly Remunerated by Share in Earnings.]—A fisherman was employed as the member of the crew of a steam trawler upon a contract of service with the master, representing the owner, under which he received wages at the rate of 30*s.* a week and a commission of 2*d.* per 1*l.* on the gross value of the fish landed under deduction of the cost of carriage. During the only week of his employment his commission amounted to 7*s.*:—Held (Lord Dundas dissenting), that he was not remunerated by a share in the profits or the gross earnings of the working of the vessel, and accordingly was not excluded from claiming compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Colquhoun v. Woolfe, [1912] S. C. 1190; [1912] W.C. Rep. 343—Ct. of Sess.

A man employed on a fishing vessel who receives, in addition to his food and some other small perquisites, wages at a fixed rate per week, and also poundage on the net profits of the voyage, is a member of the crew of a fishing vessel remunerated by a share in the profits of the working of such vessel within section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and therefore the Act does not apply to him. Costello v. Kelsall, 82 L. J. K.B. 873; [1913] A.C. 407; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 410; 108 L. T. 929; 57 S. J. 609; 29 T. L. R. 595—H.L. (E.)

—— Share of "stocker"—Loss of Vessel—No Stocker on Board—Contract of Service—Right to Stocker by Custom of Port.] — A fishing vessel was lost with all hands a day after leaving port. Compensation was claimed for the death of a seaman on board her. In addition to his wages the deceased was entitled, by the custom of the port, to a share of "stocker." There was no stocker on board the vessel when she went down. She was proceeding to fishing grounds, where on former trips a considerable amount of stocker had been taken :—Held, that it was a term of the contract of service that the deceased should be remunerated by a share of stocker, and that he was therefore "remunerated by shares in the profits or the gross earnings" within section 7, sub-section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, so that his dependants were not entitled to compensation under the Act. Stephenson v. Rossall Steam Fishing Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 677; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 121; 112 L. T. 891—C.A.

—— Running Agreement — Failure to Shew Correct Remuneration—Right to Prove Correct Amount.]—The failure to insert in a running agreement the correct remuneration of the crew as required by section 400 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, does not preclude the owners of the fishing boat from proving the actual remuneration on an application by a member of the crew for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Burman v. "Zodiac" Steam Fishing Co.; Williams v. "Duncan" (Owners); McCord v. "City of Liverpool" (Owners), 83 L. J. K.B. 1683; [1914] 3 K.B. 1039; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 520; 112 L. T. 58; 30 T. L. R. 651—C.A.

B. was employed as a cook on board a steam trawler and met with an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. He was taken on as cook at wages of 24*s.* a week, but at the time of his engagement the skipper offered him a share of "stocker" and "liver money," if he worked on deck with the deck hands. "Stocker" is money received from the sale of tails of a fish called the monk, roes, shell fish, and other things taken in the ship's trawl. Liver money is the proceeds of the livers cleaned from fish caught in the trawl. The proceeds were substantial :—Held, that B. received the stocker and liver money as part of his remuneration, and therefore that he was remunerated by a share in the earnings of the working of the ship within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 2 of the Act, with the result that he was excluded from the Act and not entitled to compensation. In two other cases the applicants were employed as deck hands on steam trawlers and met with accidents arising out of and in the course of their employment. The applicants in each case occasionally received stocker and liver money in addition to their ordinary wages. The ships were, however, sole-catching vessels, and on such vessels the stocker and liver money were very small in amount. There was evidence that the wages of the crew were increased because of this, and that the crew were free either to keep the livers or throw them overboard. On a voyage of about ten days one of the applicants received 3*s.* as his share of liver money. The applicant in the other case on several voyages received no stocker or liver money. On another voyage he received 6*d.* for stocker, and on another voyage 1*s.* for liver money :—Held, that there was evidence on which the County Court Judge could find that the stocker and liver money were treated as matters of no importance and not as part of the earnings of the working of the vessel, and that there was no agreement by which the applicants were to be remunerated by a share of the earnings so as to disentitle them to compensation under the Act. Ib.

b. Dependants.

See also Vol. IX. 2154.

Wife Separated from her Husband.]—The respondent was married to a collier in 1881. She left him in 1888 and lived with her parents, with whom her children remained until they grew up. She kept herself in various capacities and never received anything for her support from her husband, who in 1910 met with a fatal accident :—Held, that she was neither wholly nor partially dependent upon her husband and was not entitled to compensation. New Monckton Collieries v. Keeling, 80 L. J. K.B. 1205; [1911] A.C. 648; 105 L. T. 337; 55 S. J. 687; 27 T. L. R. 551—H.L. (E.)

Wife and Infant Children Deserted by Husband.] — In 1909 the ship Bessie went down with all hands, and in 1911 the respondent, who was the widow of a mate on the ship, took proceedings against the owners of the ship to recover compensation for her two infant children as dependants of their father. The mate had deserted his wife in 1903, and since then she had supported the children without assistance from him. The County Court Judge held that there was a legal presumption that the children were dependants of the father, and awarded them compensation. There was no evidence at the hearing that they were in fact dependants, but the decision of the House of Lords in New Monckton Collieries, Lim. v. Keeling (80 L. J. K.B. 1205; [1911] A.C. 648) had not then been pronounced :—Held, applying the decision in that case, that the dependency was a question of fact, and that there was no legal presumption of dependency in the case of infant children. And held (Fletcher Moulton, L.J., dissenting), that in the absence of evidence to support a finding that the children were "wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the workman at the time of his death," the appeal against the award must be allowed. Per Fletcher Moulton, L.J. : The proper course was to remit the case to the County Court Judge to be re-heard. Lee v. "Bessie" (Owners), 81 L. J. K.B. 114; [1912] 1 K.B. 83; 105 L. T. 659; 12 Asp. M.C. 89; [1912] W.C. Rep. 57—C.A.

Decree for Aliment—Evidence.]—The question whether the members of the family of a deceased workman are dependent upon him, so as to be entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is primarily one of fact, and the point for the consideration of the arbitrator is whether the right of support possessed by the applicants is of any actual or practical value. Therefore, where a workman had deserted his wife and infant children, and the wife had obtained a decree for aliment in the Sheriff Court, and had arrested his wages under the decree, and he had subsequently removed in order to avoid further proceedings, and his wife had been unable to trace him, though she had endeavoured to do so,—Held, that there was evidence that the children were dependants within the meaning of section 13 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. New Monckton Collieries, Lim. v. Keeling (80 L. J. K.B. 1205; [1911] A.C. 684) distinguished. Potts (or Young) v. Niddrie and Benhar Coal Co., 82 L. J. P.C. 147; [1913] A.C. 531; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 547; 109 L. T. 568; 57 S. J. 685; 29 T. L. R. 626—H.L. (Sc.)

Decision of the Court of Session ([1912] S. C. 644; [1912] W.C. Rep. 177) reversed. Ib.

Children Deserted by Father—Prospects of Future Support.]—Dependency is always a question of fact: and, even where children have been deserted by their father for three years before his death and have received no support from him during that time, they may still be held to be partially dependent upon him if there was a reasonable probability that had he lived he would in the future have contributed to their support. Dobbie v. Egypt and Levant Steamship Co., [1913] S. C. 364; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 75—Ct. of Sess.

Brothers and Sisters Living in Family.]—Quære, whether when a family live together and some of the children work and some do not, and the workers contribute to the family purse, the result in law is that the children who do not work are dependants of those who do. M'Ginty v. Kyle, [1911] S. C. 589—Ct. of Sess.

Illegitimate Child—Dependency on Mother—Child Maintained Gratuitously by Stranger.]—The mother of an illegitimate child gave it, on its birth, to a woman who had agreed to adopt it without payment. In handing over the child to the woman, the mother stated that she would contribute something to its support, and she subsequently contributed 3*s.* 6*d.* and the materials for a shawl for the child. Apart from this contribution the child was maintained by the woman who had adopted it. Two months after the child's birth the mother was killed through an accident in the course of her employment:—Held, that the mother's legal liability to support the child was not in itself sufficient to establish the child's dependency on her, and that, in the circumstances, the child was not wholly or in part dependent upon the earnings of the mother at the date of her death, and was therefore not entitled to compensation. Briggs v. Mitchell, [1911] S. C. 705—Ct. of Sess.

Illegitimate Posthumous Child—Statements by Deceased Workman—Admissibility.]—The applicant claimed compensation as the posthumous illegitimate child of a workman who was killed by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment:—Held, that statements made by the deceased that he intended to marry the mother of the child before its birth were admissible on the issues of paternity and dependency, and that therefore the applicant was entitled to compensation. Lloyd v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1054; [1914] A.C. 733; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 450; 111 L. T. 338; 58 S. J. 514; 30 T. L. R. 456—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal (82 L. J. K.B. 533; [1913] 2 K.B. 130) reversed. Ib.

Partial Dependency — Earnings of Child Killed—Cost of Maintenance—Value of Child's Services Rendered to Parent.]—The question of entire dependency of an applicant for compensation on the earnings of a deceased or disabled workman is wholly a matter of fact to be determined by the arbitrator on consideration of all the circumstances of the case. Main Colliery Co. v. Davies (69 L. J. Q.B. 755; [1900] A.C. 229) explained and applied. Tamworth Colliery Co. v. Hall, 81 L. J. K.B. 159; [1911] A.C. 665; 105 L. T. 449; 55 S. J. 615; [1912] W.C. Rep. 79—H.L. (E.)

On an application for compensation by the father of a son who was killed by an accident, the County Court Judge is not precluded from taking into account the cost of the son's maintenance; and secondly, the pecuniary value of the services rendered by the son in the father's business. Ib.

IV. PERSONS LIABLE TO PAY COMPENSATION.

Whether Relationship of Master and Servant Existed—Owner and Master of Ship—Crew.]—The owners of a small coasting schooner, by written agreement, gave command thereof to K. on the following conditions: K. was to work the vessel on the best paying trade for the benefit of all concerned, receiving for his services two-thirds of all freights carried, out of which he was to pay all crew's wages, victuals of crew, port charges, towages, and all other expenses connected with the working of the vessel; the remaining one-third K. thereby agreed to remit to the owners as "owners' share." If K. had cause to give up command, and so advised the owners, and if requested, K. was to bring the vessel to A. free of charge. While K. was working the vessel under this agreement one of the crew whom he had engaged met with an accident for which he claimed compensation against the owners under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906:—Held, that, on the true construction of the agreement K. was acting merely as agent for the owners in hiring the crew, and that the relation of master and servant, within the meaning of the Act, existed between the applicant and the owners. Kelly v. "Miss Evans" (Owners), [1913] 2 Ir. R. 385; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 418—C.A.

A stevedore's labourer, who had been engaged in discharging a vessel, sued the managing owners of the vessel to recover damages for injuries sustained by him through stepping into an open scuttle, which, as he alleged, had been negligently left uncovered through the fault of the defenders or of those for whom they were responsible :—Held, that the defenders, as managing owners, were merely the agents of the registered owners of the vessel, and (there being no averment of personal fault) were not responsible for the accident. M'Lauchlan v. Hogarth, [1911] S. C. 522—Ct. of Sess.

Principal and Contractor — Obligation on Applicant to Elect which is Sought to be made Liable for Compensation—Award against one, though Partly Fruitless, a Bar to Proceedings against other.]—An applicant who seeks to avail himself of the provisions of section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, must elect whether he will proceed against the contractor or the principal, their statutory liability for compensation in cases of accident being alternative, and neither joint nor joint and several. Accordingly, where a workman obtained an award against the contractor who employed him, but in consequence of the bankruptcy of the contractor and liquidation of the insuring company was unable to realise more than a small portion of the amount awarded,—Held, that he could not subsequently recover the balance of the award from the principal. Herd v. Summers (7 Fraser, 870) followed. Meier v. Dublin Corporation, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 129—C.A.

—— Sub-contracting—Execution of Work "in the course of or for the purposes of" Principal's "trade or business."]—Where the owners of a steamship entered into a contract with a contractor to scale the boilers of the vessel, and he engaged certain workmen to do the work, the principals not exercising any control over the workmen, it not being their practice to undertake the scaling of the boilers of their steamships themselves, they always employing an independent contractor to do it, the operation that the contractor had contracted to perform for the principals was held not to be work executed "in the course of or for the purposes of" the principal's "trade or business" within the meaning of section 4, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, so that the principals were not liable to pay compensation to one of the workmen who was injured by "accident arising out of and in the course of" his employment. Spiers v. Elderslie Steamship Co. ([1909] S. C. 1259; 46 Sc. L. R. 893), the reasoning of which was adopted by the Court of Appeal in England in Skates v. Jones & Co. (79 L. J. K.B. 1168; [1910] 2 K.B. 903), applied. Luckwill v. Auchen Steamship Co., [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 167; 108 L. T. 52; 12 Asp. M.C. 286—C.A.

—— Accident to Member of Gang — Work Undertaken by Principal.]—A company occasionally had goods brought in bulk to their wharf, and in such cases they always employed outside labour to unload the cargo. On September 5, 1914, they were expecting a cargo of sulphur, and employed a riverside labourer, W., to supply a gang to unload it and put it in their warehouse at 1*s.* 6*d.* a ton. On September 7, 1914, the gang came to do the work, and B., a member of the gang, met with an accident in the course of the unloading and broke his leg. It was a common thing among the riverside labourers that one of their number should be employed to collect a gang of men for a job, and the custom was that the gang and ganger should divide what was paid for the job equally, though generally the members of the gang each gave 2*d.* to the ganger. In this case W. had to supply the necessary ladders and tools, and the company provided bags for the sulphur. The company's managing director was present during the unloading to see that no sulphur was spilt and no space wasted in the warehouse in storing it. He gave his orders to W. On an application by B. to recover compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, from the company,—Held, that there was no evidence of any contract of service between B. and the company, and also that the company were not liable to pay compensation to B. as principals within section 4, sub-section 1 of the Act, because the contract between the company and W. did not relate to any part of any work undertaken by the company. Hockley v. West London Timber and Joinery Co. (83 L. J. K.B. 1520; [1914] 3 K.B. 1013; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 504) followed. Bobbey v. Crosbie & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 856; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 258; 112 L. T. 900—C.A.

—— Contractor Employed on Work not Ordinarily Done by Principal—Work Undertaken by Principal—Work Incidental to Principal's Trade—Accident to Contractor's Workman.]—Work executed by a contractor is not "part of any work undertaken by the principal" within the meaning of section 4, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, merely because it is work incidental to, or reasonably necessary for the purposes of, the principal's trade or business. Hockley v. West London Timber and Joinery Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1520; [1914] 3 K.B. 1013; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 504; 112 L. T. 1; 58 S. J. 705—C.A.

A company, which carried on business as moulding manufacturers, imported timber for the purpose of their trade, and employed a contractor to load the timber on to carts at their wharves and to unload and stack it on its arrival at their yards. It was necessary to stack the wood for it to become seasoned. The evidence shewed that the company never undertook this work themselves, that it was work requiring strong men with skill and nerve, and that it was the practice in the company's trade to employ contractors to do the work. A workman in the employment of the contractor met with an accident while stacking the company's timber in their yard, and was incapacitated :—Held, that the contractor was not employed for the execution of "any part of any work undertaken" by the company within the meaning of section 4, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and therefore that the company were not liable to pay compensation to the workman under the Act. Ib.

No Service of Notice on Principal within Prescribed Time.] — See Meier v. Dublin Corporation, post, col. 1965.

Industrial Disease — Contributions towards Compensation—Calculation thereof—Periods of Time—Working Conditions.]—In determining the contributions to be made by several employers towards compensation paid in respect of an industrial disease under section 8, subsection 1 (c) (iii) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator must take into consideration not only the respective periods of time in each employment, but also the working conditions in the several employments. Barron v. Seaton Burn Coal Co.: East Walbottle Coal Co., Ex parte, 84 L. V. CONTRACTING OUT.

See also Vol. IX. 2207.

Scheme of Compensation Duly Certified—Jurisdiction of County Court Judge Ousted.]—A workman who has agreed to come under a scheme of compensation which has been certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies as complying with the conditions required by section 3, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is outside the provisions of the Act altogether. Horn v. Admiralty Commissioners, 80 L. J. K.B. 278; [1911] 1 K.B. 24; 103 L. T. 614; 27 T. L. R. 84—C.A.

A tinsmith employed in a Government dockyard signed a contract by which he agreed to accept the provisions of a duly certified scheme of compensation in substitution for the provisions of the Act. The scheme provided that when it was established to the satisfaction of the Treasury that the death of a workman had resulted from an injury within the provisions of the Act, remuneration according to the scale therein mentioned should be payable to his dependants. The tinsmith died from lead poisoning and his widow claimed compensation from the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty. They at first denied liability, but on the hearing of an application by her for arbitration under the Act they admitted liability to pay compensation under the scheme. The County Court Judge made an award in favour of the applicant for the amount admitted to be due:—Held, that the deceased had contracted himself out of the Act, that the liability of the employers was to be determined by the scheme solely, and that consequently the jurisdiction of the County Court Judge was entirely ousted. Ib.

—— Re-certification.]—The object of re-certifying under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, a scheme by which a workman contracts out of the benefit of that Act is to shew that the Registrar of Friendly Societies has looked into the matter, and is satisfied that the scheme conforms with the provisions of the Act which prescribe what it is to contain or is not to contain, and the words of section 15, sub-section 3, are not to be read as referring to the provisions in section 3 as to a ballot of the workmen, which is a condition precedent to a scheme under the Act of 1906 coming into operation, but not to the re-certifying of a pre-existing scheme. Godwin v. Admiralty Commissioners, 82 L. J. K.B. 1126; [1913] A.C. 638; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 680; 109 L. T. 428; 29 T. L. R. 774—H.L. (E.)

It is not an objection to such a scheme that it purports to oust the jurisdiction of the County Court. Horn v. Admiralty Commissioners (80 L. J. K.B. 278; [1911] 1 K.B. 24) approved. Ib.

Judgment of the Court of Appeal (81 L. J. K.B. 532; [1912] 2 K.B. 26; [1912] W.C. Rep. 49) affirmed. Ib.

Certified Scheme—Accident during Continuance of Scheme—Termination of Scheme by Revocation of Certificate — Subsequent Claim against Employer — Limit of Employers' Liability.]—A workman can make no claim against his employer under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in respect of an accident which happened to him during the continuance of a duly certified scheme under section 3 of that Act, of which scheme he was a member, after the scheme has been terminated and its funds exhausted. Howarth v. Knowles, 82 L. J. K.B. 1325; [1913] 3 K.B. 675; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 746; 109 L. T. 278; 57 S. J. 728; 29 T. L. R. 667—C.A.

—— "Accident"—Industrial Disease—Provisions of Act Incorporated in Scheme.] — The rules of a contracting-out scheme which had been duly certified by the Registrar of Friendly Societies provided that it was intended to be in substitution for the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and common law liability, and was intended to provide a fund for the payment of compensation to any member of the scheme in respect of personal injury caused by accident arising out of or in the course of such member's employment:—Held, that the word "accident" must be read in the sense in which it is used in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and as therefore including disablement owing to industrial disease, and that the sections of the Act of 1906 dealing with the recovery of compensation for industrial disease must be read into the scheme. Horn v. Admiralty Commissioners (80 L. J. K.B. 278; [1911] 1 K.B. 24) distinguished. Leaf v. Furze, 83 L. J. K.B. 1822; [1914] 3 K.B. 1068; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 601; 111 L. T. 1100—D.

—— Determination of Claims for Compensation by Committee of Management — Ouster of Jurisdiction of Court.]—A scheme made by the defendant company pursuant to section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, provided that any question with regard to what was an injury within the meaning of that term as used in the scheme should be determined by the committee of management, and that any other question with respect to the scheme should be settled by the committee, whose decision should be final and conclusive. The widow of a workman who met with a fatal accident claimed compensation, but the committee refused to admit the claim, giving no reasons for their decision :—Held, that the decision of the committee was final and ousted the jurisdiction of the Courts, that the only liability of the employer was to pay such sum as under the scheme the committee should find to be payable, and that as the committee had not determined in the plaintiff's favour, she had no cause of action. Haworth v. Knowles (19 T. L. R. 658) distinguished. Allen v. Great Eastern Railway, 83 L. J. K.B. 898; [1914] 2 K.B. 243; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 388; 110 L. T. 498—C.A.

VI. PROCEEDINGS TO OBTAIN COMPENSATION.

1. Notice of Accident.

See also Vol. IX. 2244.

Verbal Notice — Prejudice.] — A workman met with an accident on a date which was in dispute, but was, according to the workman himself, December 28, 1911. He continued working till January 22, 1912, when he saw the employers' ambulance man and arranged to see a doctor. He said he gave verbal notice of the accident to this man, but this was denied. On February 5, 1912, the workman's mother gave verbal notice of the accident to the employers' cashier. No proceedings to recover compensation were commenced until January 23, 1913. The County Court Judge made his award in favour of the workman :—Held, that the verbal notice was not a sufficient notice within the meaning of section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that, as the employers were clearly prejudiced by the delay in giving notice, the award must be set aside. Coltman v. Morrison & Mason, Lim., [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 43—C.A.

Verbal Notice to Sub-contractor—No Notice to Principal for Four Months — Expectation that Sub-contractor would Give Notice—Claim against Principal — Prejudice — Mistake.] — A was building some houses and entered into a contract with B under which B was to do a certain part of the work. A workman employed by B met with an accident. The workman gave verbal notice to B expecting that he would inform A, but he did not do so, and A received no notice of the accident until more than four months after it happened, when the workman served him with a formal notice of it. The County Court Judge held that the claim was prejudiced by want of notice at an earlier date :—Held, that the expectation of the workman that B would inform A of the accident did not amount to a "mistake" within section 2, sub-section 1 (b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and the workman could make no claim against A. Griffiths v. Atkinson, 106 L. T. 852; [1912] W.C. Rep. 277—C.A.

Particulars Written Down in Workman's Presence by Mine Official.]—A boy met with an accident while working with his father in a colliery and was unable to resume work for thirteen days. Before leaving the mine on the day of the accident, he and his father gave full particulars of the accident to the manager of the level, who wrote down particulars of it in their presence, in a diary kept by the company on the level for the purpose. Written notice of the accident was not served on the colliery company until the day after the boy resumed work, and there was evidence that, in accordance with the usual practice of the mine, the entry in the diary was not brought to the attention of the officials in charge of compensation claims, so that no doctor was sent to examine the boy's injuries. The County Court Judge found on this evidence that the colliery company had been prejudiced by the delay in giving formal notice of the accident, and refused the boy's application for compensation :—Held, that the entry made in the company's book in the presence of the boy and his father constituted a written notice of the accident sufficient to satisfy section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and also held, that, in any case, the company had not been prejudiced by the delay in delivering the formal notice. Stevens v. Insoles, Lim., 81 L. J. K.B. 47; [1912] 1 K.B. 36; 105 L. T. 67; [1912] W.C. Rep. 111—C.A.

Notice Not Given as Soon as Possible.]—The respondent, who was a barber's assistant in the employment of the appellant, began on January 17 to suffer from smarting of the hands, and in February a doctor diagnosed his malady as dermatitis. The respondent continued to work till March 28, when he left. In April the respondent's solicitor wrote to the appellant, claiming damages for injury caused by the use of dangerous dry shampoo. The Judge awarded compensation to the respondent :—Held, that there was no evidence of an accident at a definite time and place, and there was no notice as soon as possible after the accident, and the respondent was not entitled to compensation. Petschett v. Preis, [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 11; 31 T. L. R. 156—C.A.

—— Delay in Giving Notice — Prejudice — "Mistake . . . or other reasonable cause."]—Where a workman fails to give notice of an accident as soon as practicable merely because he does not realise the extent of the injury he has sustained, the delay in giving notice is not due to "mistake . . . or other reasonable cause" within the meaning of section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Dicta of Lord Adam in Rankine v. Alloa Coal Co. (6 Fraser, 375; 41 Sc. L. R. 306) not followed. Edgerton v. Moore, 81 L. J. K.B. 696; [1912] 2 K.B. 308; 106 L. T. 663; [1912] W.C. Rep. 250—C.A.

A workman met with an accident which caused a swelling of his breast. He resumed work with another employer a few days later. About seven or eight months afterwards his breast began to pain him again, and he realised that the trouble was due to the accident. A few months afterwards his breast had to be operated on for a tubercular abscess. No written notice of the accident was given until about a year from the date of the accident :—Held, that the employer must necessarily be prejudiced by the failure to give notice of the accident for so long a period and that the delay in giving such notice was not due to "mistake . . . or other reasonable cause," within the meaning of section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and therefore that the workman was debarred from recovering compensation. Ib.

On May 9, 1910, a collector for an insurance company fell on a stair which he had occasion to use in the course of his employment, and sustained injuries. A day or two after the accident, and again on June 8, while he still believed that his injuries were merely of a temporary nature, he gave verbal notice of the accident to the manager of his company, but made no claim for compensation. On June 29 he left the service of the company, and from that date onwards he was incapacitated for work. On September 12, when he had ascertained from medical advice that his condition was much more serious than he had at first supposed, he gave formal notice of the accident to his employers:—Held, in the circumstances, that the delay in giving notice was due to "mistake or other reasonable cause" within section 2, sub-section 1 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and so was not a bar to the maintenance of proceedings for compensation. Millar v. Refuge Assurance Co., [1912] S. C. 37—Ct. of Sess.

The applicant, a salesman in the employment of the respondents, was injured on April 3, 1912, by falling from steps while engaged in window-dressing. He continued at work for about two months after the accident, although in continuous pain throughout that time. Ultimately he was incapacitated for work as a result of the accident, and he commenced proceedings claiming compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Written notice of the accident, as required by section 2 of the Act, was not given till June 3, 1912, but the County Court Judge held that the delay in giving notice was due to a reasonable cause, in that the applicant was able to continue to do his work and did not believe that the injury would result in his having to make a claim for compensation. The County Court judge accordingly made an award in favour of the applicant. The employers appealed:—Held, allowing the appeal, that as this was not a case where the injury was not apparent, or a case where the injury was so trivial that it would be absurd to expect a workman to give notice of the accident, but was a case where the applicant was in daily, constant, serious pain, the County Court Judge was wrong in holding that the delay in giving notice of the accident was due to a reasonable cause. Webster v. Cohen, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 268; 108 L. T. 197; 57 S. J. 244; 29 T. L. R. 217—C.A.

In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator found that the claimant alleged that he was injured by an accident on June 1, 1911; that thereafter he suffered from pain in his neck and shoulders, which he attributed to the accident; that on August 5 he consulted a doctor, who diagnosed his trouble as, and treated him for, muscular rheumatism; that on November 11 the claimant left his employment and thereafter was treated for severe strain of the neck; that on December 13 he consulted another doctor, who told him that he was suffering from partial dislocation of the head from the spine, and advised him that his case was dangerous and required treatment in a hospital; that in January, 1912 (that is, after he had left his employment and more than six months after the accident), he for the first time gave notice of the accident to his employers and claimed compensation from them:—Held, that as the delay in giving notice and claiming compensation was due to the workman's ignorance of the serious nature of his injury it was occasioned by "mistake or other reasonable cause" within section 2, sub-section 1 of the Act, and so was not a bar to the maintenance of proceedings for compensation. Ellis v. Fairfield Shipbuilding and Engineering Co., [1913] S. C. 217; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 88—Ct. of Sess.

A workman fell from a stable loft on to his head, and for three days afterwards was unable to work. Upon return to work he suffered continuously from headache, and after some months became incapacitated and seriously ill. No written notice, however, was given until a year after the accident. The County Court Judge found that the failure to give notice was occasioned by mistake or other reasonable cause—namely, the belief that he would soon recover, which lasted until he was too ill to give notice:—Held (following Webster v. Cohen, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 268; 108 L. T. 197), that this was a misdirection, and that the want of notice was not occasioned by mistake. Clapp v. Carter, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 80; 110 L. T. 491; 58 S. J. 232—C.A.

Where a workman sustained an "injury by accident arising out of and in the course of" his employment within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, which injury fell within the term "latent," it is a "reasonable cause" for his not giving notice of the accident as soon as practicable after the happening thereof, as required by section 2 of that Act, where he was unaware that the illness from which he was suffering was attributable to and due to the accident. Webster v. Cohen ([1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 268; 108 L. T. 197) distinguished. Thompson v. North-Eastern Marine Engineering Co., [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 13; 110 L. T. 441—C.A.

—— "Reasonable cause" for Failure—Injury neither Latent nor Trivial.]—An action under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, is an action brought to recover damages "for injury caused by an accident" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Potter v. Welsh & Sons, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 1852; [1914] 3 K.B. 1020; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 607; 112 L. T. 7; 30 T. L. R. 644—C.A.

A workman whilst employed in moving a trolley through a doorway received a severe blow on the head and also a jagged wound on his tongue by reason of a tooth being forced through it. He did not consider the injury serious at the time. He mentioned it to his foreman, but no written notice of the accident was given, and he continued at work. Cancer of the tongue supervened, but his doctor did not inform him of the nature of the trouble. He remained at work until a week before his death, which took place in July, 1913, the accident having happened the previous January. His widow brought an action under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, against his employers, but the jury gave a verdict for the defendants on the ground of contributory negligence. The plaintiff then applied to Channell, J., before whom the action was tried, to assess compensation under section 1, sub-section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. His Lordship did so, holding that the action was within sub-section 4 of section 1 of the Act, and that the deceased had acted reasonably in not giving notice of the accident to the employers. The Court of Appeal affirmed Channell, J., on the first point, but reversed him on the second point on the ground that, as the injury was neither latent nor trivial, no "reasonable cause" was shewn within section 2 of the Act for the failure to give notice of the accident, and that, therefore, the claim to compensation failed. Ib.

Webster v. Cohen ([1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 268; 29 T. L. R. 217) and Clapp v. Carter ([1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 80) applied. Ib.

A workman, who could not read or write, sustained an apparently trifling injury to his finger on December 2, 1913. His doctor treated the case as one of septic poisoning, but disapproved of his returning to work. The workman, however, continued to work until February 22, 1914, when he became disabled. In March he consulted another doctor, upon whose advice he went into a hospital, and remained there from March 24 till April 22. He was found to be suffering from an obscure constitutional disease, which might be awakened into activity by such an injury as he had sustained. It was not until he consulted the second doctor in March that he began to regard his injury as serious, and not until he was in hospital that he began to consider the question of compensation. Formal notice was first given to the employers on his behalf on April 22:—Held, that on these facts the arbitrator was entitled to find that the workman's failure to give notice as soon as practicable was due to a "reasonable cause." Flood v. Smith & Leishman, [1915] S. C. 726; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 212—Ct. of Sess. And see Eke v. Hart-Dyke, ante, col. 1892.

—— Employers "prejudiced in their defence."]—If a workman who has been injured by "accident arising out of and in the course of" his employment, within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, has reason to believe that, although he is apparently well, the accident may be attended with serious consequences, then he must give notice to his employer "as soon as practicable after the happening thereof," as required by section 2, sub-section 1 of the Act. But it is not necessary for such notice to be given by every workman who has suffered some slight injury such as a scratch on his finger. Where, however, a workman sustained what was apparently only an abrasion on the palm of his hand, but, although his hand gradually got worse, he continued working at his employment for some days after the happening of the accident and he delayed in giving notice thereof to his employers until he was found to be suffering from septic poisoning, it was held that in the circumstances of the case the learned County Court Judge had come to a perfectly right conclusion in deciding that the delay was not brought within the exception "mistake or other reasonable cause," and that the employers were thereby "prejudiced in their defence." Snelling v. Norton Hill Colliery Co., [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 497; 109 L. T. 81—C.A.

The applicant was employed by the respondent in a hop garden. On February 18, 1913, he was using a heavy beadle for driving piles into the ground, but he had to drop it as he felt that he had injured himself. He suffered pain in his left side, but he continued to work till March 14. He made no communication at all to the respondent relating to his injury, and although there was a change of his work, and it was of a lighter description, the change was not due in any respect to what had happened on February 18. In March the applicant consulted his doctor, who advised him to go to a hospital. On May 23 he was discharged from the hospital, and it was not until June 23 that he gave any notice of the accident which was alleged to have taken place on February 18. The ailment from which the applicant was found to be suffering was weakness of heart consequent upon strain continuing for some time thereon. It was a strain, however, which without the applicant being conscious of it might certainly have been due not to any one single occurrence which could be called an "accident" within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, but to a course of hard labour done by a workman extending over months or years:—Held, that the applicant not having given the respondent notice of the alleged accident "as soon as practicable after the happening thereof," within the meaning of section 2 of the Act, had cast upon him the burden of satisfying the Court affirmatively that the respondent was not "prejudiced in his defence" by such want of notice: and that that burden the applicant had not discharged, the circumstances of the alleged accident being such that it was of the utmost importance that the respondent should have known at once that the fall of the beadle, which did not cause any apparent injury, was an "accident" involving liability on his part to pay compensation to the applicant. Hughes v. Coed Talon Colliery Co. (78 L. J. K.B. 539; [1909] 1 K.B. 957) considered and applied. Ing v. Higgs, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 84; 110 L. T. 442—C.A. And see Stevens v. Insoles, Lim., ante, col. 1958.

—— Onus of Proof.]—A charwoman broke her kneecap. She alleged that she broke it on July 8, 1913, while working for the respondents. They alleged that she broke it on the following day in her own house. She claimed compensation. She gave no written notice of the accident until July 29, 1913. She said she told a caretaker of her employers of the accident. Want of notice was not shewn to be due to mistake or other reasonable cause:—Held, that the woman had not discharged the onus of proving that her employers had not been prejudiced in their defence by the want of notice, and that the proceedings were therefore barred. Hodgson v. Robins, Hay, Waters & Hay, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 65—C.A. S. P. Lacey v. Mowlem & Co., [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 63—C.A.

On Wednesday, September 24, 1913, a workman slightly injured a finger while working in his employment. He got it bound up with a rag, but went on working for that and the two following days. On Saturday, September 27, he went to work as usual in the morning, but at 10 A.M. had to cease working, because he could not hold his hammer. He first saw a doctor on Monday morning, September 29, who found that the finger was then in a septic condition, and had been so for "some time" before. He gave no notice till the Monday morning:—Held, that as from 10 A.M. on Saturday, September 27, there was no reasonable cause for the want of notice, and that the employers had been prejudiced thereby, and that the proceedings were therefore barred under section 2, sub-section 1 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Wassall v. Russell & Sons, Lim., 84 L. J. K.B. 1606; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 88; 112 L. T. 902—C.A.

On Thursday, August 20, 1914, a miner, while working in his employment, was struck in the eye by a piece of coal. It caused a certain amount of pain and pricking. He stopped work, washed his eye, and did no more work that day, except that he assisted a fellow employee to push tubs. He did not go to work next day, Friday, because of his injury. From the Saturday following the colliery was closed for a five days' holiday. He first saw a doctor on Monday, August 24. Before seeing the doctor he had treated his eye with a lotion himself. The eye ultimately became septic, and he lost the sight of it. He gave no notice of the accident until August 27. Upon a claim for compensation the original triviality of the injury was alleged as "reasonable cause" for want of notice; it was not contended that the employers were not prejudiced:—Held, that there was no "reasonable cause" for the want of notice within section 2, sub-section 1 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that the claim was therefore barred. Fox v. Barrow Hematite Steel Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1327; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 321; 113 L. T. 528—C.A.

On Friday, June 26, 1914, a carter, while working in his employment, was struck in the eye by something which caused pain and bleeding. He immediately left off work and went and saw his doctor. He went back to work next day, Saturday, which was the last day he worked. The following week was a holiday. He gave no notice to his employer until Monday, July 6, and then only verbal notice. No written notice of any kind was given until August or September. Upon a claim for compensation the arbitrator found that there was no reasonable cause for the want of notice, within section 2, sub-section 1 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and also that there was no evidence from which he could find that the employer was not prejudiced in his defence, and that he might have been prejudiced, and that the claim was therefore barred. On appeal on the question of "no prejudice,"—Held, that the arbitrator having declined to find that the employer was not prejudiced in his defence, upon evidence which justified his finding, his decision could not be interfered with. Hayward v. West Leigh Colliery (84 L. J. K.B. 661; [1915] A.C. 540; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 233) discussed and explained. Miller v. Richardson, 84 L. J. K.B. 1366; [1915] 3 K.B. 76; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 381; 113 L. T. 609—C.A.

—— Employers not "prejudiced in their defence."]—Where an accident to a workman "arising out of and in the course of" his employment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, produced injuries to him which he thought, and had reason for thinking, were trivial in the first instance, the exact nature of the injuries not being ascertained until some months after the occurrence of the accident, it was held that want of notice thereof was occasioned by "reasonable cause" within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (a) of the Act; and that the employers were not thereby "prejudiced in their defence." Haward v. Rowsell, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 314; 111 L. T. 771—C.A.

By section 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, notice of an accident is to be given to the employer "as soon as practicable after the happening thereof . . . Provided always that—(a) the want of . . . such notice shall not be a bar to the maintenance of such proceedings if it is found in the proceedings for settling the claim that the employer is not . . . prejudiced in his defence by the want" of such notice. A workman injured his leg on a Tuesday by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. At first the injury did not appear to be serious, and he continued at work for a day or two, but blood poisoning set in, and he died on the Thursday week after the accident. Verbal notice of the accident was given to the employers on the Tuesday after the accident. At the hearing of a claim for compensation by his dependants before a County Court Judge, the applicant proved these facts, and the employers called no evidence to shew that they had been in any way prejudiced in their defence by want of proper notice of the accident:—Held, that there was evidence upon which the County Court Judge could hold that they had not in fact been prejudiced. Hayward v. West Leigh Colliery, 84 L. J. K.B. 661; [1915] A.C. 540; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 233; 112 L. T. 1001; 59 S. J. 269; 31 T. L. R. 215—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 21) reversed. Ib.

—— Suicide—"Novus actus interveniens"—Insanity—Evidence—Notice.]—On December 4, 1913, a workman injured his right eye while working in his employment. On December 5 he saw his own doctor. On December 19 he consulted an eye specialist. On December 20 he committed suicide. He had continued doing his ordinary work with one small exception from the time of the accident until his death. He became depressed, and suffered pain before December 19, and on that day was terribly depressed and suffered great pain. He was in fear of losing his sight or his work. He had been a cheerful man, and was of excellent character. There was medical opinion that he was insane when he committed suicide. He had given no notice of the accident, but three days after his death notice was given by his widow's solicitors :—Held, that there was no evidence to justify the Court in arriving at the conclusion that the man was insane when he committed suicide, and that his death did not therefore arise "out of" the employment within section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that there was no reasonable excuse for the want of notice by the man himself, and no evidence that the employer was not prejudiced thereby, and that the want of such notice was not affected by the notice given after the man's death, and was consequently a bar to proceedings by his dependants under section 2, sub-section 1 of the Act. Grime v. Fletcher, 84 L. J. K.B. 847; [1915] 1 K.B. 734; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 250; 112 L. T. 840; 59 S. J. 233; 31 T. L. R. 158—C.A.

Principal or Contractor.] —The failure to serve notice of accident and claim on the principal within the prescribed time is an answer to any claim against the principal. Meier v. Dublin Corporation, [1912] 2 Ir. R. 129—C.A.

2. Claim for Compensation.

See also Vol. IX. 2243.

Claim — Sufficiency of.] —The applicant, having been injured by accident while in the defendant's service, claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. He did not suggest that he had himself given notice of any claim for compensation under the Act, but his wife gave evidence to the effect that she had written to the respondent each week for her husband's wages, and that the respondent had paid five weeks immediately after the accident and then stopped payment. During the sixth week she saw the respondent at his house and asked him, if he would not compensate the applicant, whether he would compensate her and the children. He replied she was nothing to him or he to her, but he was sorry for them :—Held, that there had been no notice of a claim for compensation under the Act, and that the applicant was therefore not entitled to an award of compensation. Johnson v. Wootton, 27 T. L. R. 487—C.A.

Claim not made within Six Months — "Reasonable cause."]—A workman, who had been injured, was offered compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act. He resolved not to accept it, and instructed a solicitor to recover damages. The solicitor threatened on his behalf to raise an action at common law against the employers, and had several meetings with the solicitor of the insurance company which insured the employers, who was anxious to avoid litigation and to get the workman to accept compensation. Nothing, however, had been arranged, and no action had been raised by the workman when the period of six months from the accident expired. On the workman subsequently initiating proceedings under the Act, the arbitrator found that he had failed to make a claim timeously in terms of the Act, and that there was no reasonable cause for this failure, and dismissed the application. On appeal, the workman contended that there had been what was equivalent to a claim, or, alternatively, that the employers were, in the circumstances, barred from founding on the absence of a claim :—Held, that there was no ground for disturbing the arbitrator's findings. Devons v. Anderson, [1911] S. C. 181—Ct. of Sess.

—— Industrial Disease — Certificate Fixing of Disablement more than Six Months Previously — Claim for Compensation.] — Where the certifying surgeon in his certificate under section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, fixes the date of the disablement caused by an industrial disease (which by section 8, sub-section 1 (a), is to be treated as the happening of the accident) more than six months before the date of the certificate, that circumstance amounts to "reasonable cause" within section 2, sub-section 1 (b), for the failure by the workman to make a claim for compensation within six months from the occurrence of the accident, unless the workman's visit to the certifying surgeon was unduly delayed. Moore v. Naval Colliery Co., 81 L. J. K.B. 149; [1912] 1 K.B. 28; 105 L. T. 838; [1912] W.C. Rep. 81—C.A.

—— Reasonable Cause — Workman not Disabled from Working within the Six Months.]— A miner met with an accident while at work on November 21, 1911, which caused a swelling in his groin. After resting for an hour he was able to resume work and the swelling went down by the next day and he was able to go to work as usual. Four months later, and again nine months after that, the swelling reappeared while he was at work, but subsided, and he was able to go on working. Ultimately, in February, 1914, the swelling reappeared, and he was incapacitated by a small hernia. Upon an application by the workman for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the employers admitted that the injury was due to accident arising out of and in the course of the man's employment, and waived any question as to notice :—Held, that the failure to make a claim for compensation within six months from the accident was occasioned by reasonable cause within section 2, sub-section 1 (b) of the Act. Coulson v. South Moor Colliery Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 508; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 161; 112 L. T. 901; 31 T. L. R. 207—C.A.

—— Payment of Wages during Incapacity— "Reasonable cause."]—On October 31, 1913, the applicant, a horse keeper, severely injured the fingers of his left hand while in the employ of the respondent. Next day he told the respondent, who said, "You can potter about the factory until you are better," and continued to pay him his full wages until June 13, 1914, when he was dismissed for misconduct not connected with the accident. At this time he was nearly doing his old work again. The applicant said that he told the respondent's foreman that his doctor had told him to claim compensation, and that the foreman replied that he should have his wages. The applicant had been seventeen years in the respondent's employment. The applicant made no claim for compensation within the six months prescribed by section 2, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and the respondent denied liability on this ground when proceedings were commenced on December 21, 1914 :—Held, without deciding that in all cases payment of wages is "reasonable cause" for not making a claim within the prescribed period, that the payment of wages, coupled with the other circumstances of this case, was "reasonable cause" for not making the claim within section 2, subsection 1 (b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that the employer was therefore liable to pay compensation. Healy v. Galloway (41 Ir. L. T. 5) did not decide the proposition that payment of wages is not a "reasonable cause" for not making a claim; and Lynch v. Lansdowne (Marquis) ([1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 244; 48 Ir. L. T. 89), so far as it rests upon the assumption that Healy v. Galloway (41 Ir. L. T. 5) laid down that proposition is not an authority. Luckie v. Merry, 84 L. J. K.B. 1388; [1915] 3 K.B. 83; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 395; 113 L. T. 667; 59 S. J. 544; 31 T. L. R. 466—C.A.

Ignorance of Existence of Act.]—Ignorance of the existence of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is not, within section 2, subsection 1 (b), a "mistake . . . or other reasonable cause" for the workman's failure to make his claim for compensation within six months from the occurrence of the accident. Roles v. Pascall, 80 L. J. K.B. 728; [1911] 1 K.B. 982; 104 L. T. 298—C.A.

Delay "occasioned by . . . absence from the United Kingdom."]—A workman's failure to claim compensation against his employers under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, within six months of the occurrence of the accident in respect of which he is seeking to recover compensation, may be "occasioned by . . . absence from the United Kingdom" within the meaning of section 2, subsection 1 (b) of the Act, although he might, if he had wished, have returned to the United Kingdom in time to make a claim within that period. The question whether the failure of a workman to make a claim under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, within six months of the accident is occasioned by his absence from the United Kingdom is in every case a question of fact for the arbitrator. Dight v. "Craster Hall" (Owners), 82 L. J. K.B. 1307; [1913] 3 K.B. 700; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 714; 109 L. T. 200; 29 T. L. R. 676—C.A.

Assessment of Compensation where Action of Damages has Failed—Parties Entitled to such Assessment—Claim not made within Six Months.]—The privilege of having compensation assessed given by section 1, sub-section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is a privilege personal to the pursuer in the action for damages, and other persons who have not claimed compensation within six months are not entitled to be made parties to the compensation proceedings. M'Ginty v. Kyle, [1911] S. C. 589—Ct. of Sess.

Acquiescence by Workman in Discontinuance of Compensation.]—A workman who in April, 1910, sustained injuries to his back through an accident received compensation, under agreement with his employers, at the full rate till February, 1911, when he was certified to be fit for light work. Thereafter compensation at a reduced rate was paid till August, 1912, when the employers ceased to make further payments. No memorandum was ever recorded. In October, 1912, the workman threatened proceedings for the recovery of compensation, and the employers then denied liability. No further steps, however, were taken by the workman until February, 1914, when, having become totally incapacitated through spinal sclerosis resulting from his injury, he intimated that fact to his employers, and subsequently applied for an award of partial compensation from August, 1912, till February, 1914, and for full compensation thereafter. It was proved that he had never fully recovered from the results of the accident and had never returned to work, but that the sclerosis was not diagnosed till December, 1913. There was no evidence that the employers had been prejudiced by his delay in taking proceedings. The arbitrator having awarded compensation as claimed, the employers appealed on the ground that the workman's claim for compensation for the period from August, 1912, to February, 1914, was excluded by his acquiescence in the non-payment of it throughout that period :—Held, that in the circumstances the arbitrator was entitled to make the award. Rankine v. Fife Coal Co., [1915] S. Discharge by Workman of Future Claims to Compensation — Validity.] — Circumstances in which a receipt by a workman for payments of compensation, containing, as his employer contended, a final discharge of all future claims, held, not to bar the workman from making further claims, in respect that it had been granted by the workman gratuitously and under essential error as to its effect. Macandrew v. Gilhooley, [1911] S. C. 448—Ct. of Sess.

Release of "all claims" under Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 — Subsequent Incapacity for Work Resulting from Accident on Voyage.] —The release signed by a seaman, on his discharge, of "all claims in respect of the past voyage" under section 136 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, without excepting from such release any specified claim or demand as provided by section 60 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1906, is not a bar to a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in respect of an injury by an accident which happened during the voyage, but from the effects of which the seaman does not become incapacitated for work until after he has been discharged. Buls v. "Teutonic" (Owners), 82 L. J. K.B. 1331; [1913] 3 K.B. 695; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 752; 109 L. T. 127; 29 T. L. R. 675—C.A.

Effect of Imprisonment of Workman—Continuance of Incapacity Caused by Accident.]—A workman who had met with an accident in the course of his employment, and was in receipt of 1*l.* a week compensation from his employers, was convicted of stealing and sentenced to eighteen months' imprisonment with hard labour. The employers stopped payment. The workman claimed compensation. He was still suffering from partial incapacity for work as the result of his accident:—Held, that, as the incapacity caused by the accident still continued, the workman, notwithstanding his imprisonment, was entitled to compensation under section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. McNally v. Furness, Withy & Co., 82 L. 3. Proceedings in Name of Workman.

Approved Society—Retainer by Workman.]—The appellant, who was a carter in the employment of the respondent and was a member of an approved society, was incapacitated by an accident, and the society informed him that their solicitors would act for him, free of charge, in making a claim for compensation. The appellant then signed a retainer authorising these solicitors to act on his behalf, and proceedings in the appellant's name were begun against the respondent. The County Court Judge dismissed the application on the ground that counsel for the appellant declined to state for whom he appeared:—Held, that, although the society could not use the name of the appellant except in the events and upon the terms mentioned in section 11, sub-section 2 of the National Insurance Act, 1911, the retainer was prima facie evidence (although not conclusive) that the appellant was acting in his own interest, and that therefore the Judge ought to have heard the evidence before arriving at a conclusion. Allen v. Francis, 83 L. J. K.B. 1814; [1914] 3 K.B. 1065; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 599; 112 L. T. 62; 58 S. J. 753; 30 T. L. R. 695—C.A.

—— No Refusal on Part on Workman to take Proceedings—Reasonable Inference that Workman Insured Member of Approved Society—Surprise.]—A workman having met with an accident, two letters, dated April 23, 1914, and May 2, 1914, were written on behalf of an approved society stating that it was purposing to take proceedings for the workman against the employer to obtain compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Proceedings were then brought, and at the hearing the secretary of the local branch of the approved society, who was called to give expert evidence, said, in answer to questions put in cross-examination, that his society was an approved society and had taken these proceedings in the name of the workman. He also said that the workman had not refused to take proceedings, but, though anxious to do so, had not the necessary money. The County Court Judge thereupon dismissed the application on the ground that under the National Insurance Act, 1911, s. 11, sub-s. 2, an approved society was not entitled to bring proceedings in a workman's name unless he had unreasonably neglected or refused to take them himself. On appeal it was alleged on the workman's behalf that he was not an insured member of the approved society, but was merely a member of it as a trade union, and it was contended that in these circumstances the National Insurance Act, 1911, s. 11, sub-s. 2, had no application, and that the proceedings were maintainable:—Held, that, on the evidence as it stood, the County Court Judge was entitled to draw the inference that the workman was insured in the society under the National Insurance Act, 1911, and that, as no case of surprise had been made, the County Court Judge's decision must stand. Burnham v. Hardy, 84 L. J. K.B. 714; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 146; 112 L. T. 837—C.A.

—— Rules of Court—Ultra Vires.]—The provision in rule 44 (3) of the Consolidated Workmen's Compensation Rules, July, 1913, that such an approved society shall for this purpose "be deemed to be parties interested," is ultra vires. Bonney v. Hoyle & Sons, Lim., 83 L. Assistance by Trade Union.]—Per Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R., and Swinfen Eady, L.J.: A workmen's trade union is entitled to assist him in taking proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, but it may not take proceedings in his name. Bobbey v. Crosbie & Co., 84 L. Maintenance — Whether a Defence.]—If an application under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, by an employee against his employer has been "maintained" by a third person, proof of such maintenance would be no defence to the proceedings. Skelton v. Baxter, 85 L. J. K.B. 181; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 583; 60 S. J. 120; 32 T. L. R. 130—C.A.

4. Jurisdiction of County Court Judge.

Question as to Liability to Pay Compensation or as to Amount or Duration of Compensation.]—A workman met with an accident in the course of his employment which for the time being totally incapacitated him, and his employers paid him compensation in respect of the accident at the maximum rate of 50 per cent. of his average weekly earnings. The workman applied to have a memorandum registered of an agreement by the employers to pay him this weekly compensation in accordance with the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The employers resisted the application on the ground that they had only agreed to pay this weekly sum so long as their own doctor certified that the workman was unable to follow his occupation. Thereupon the County Court Judge held that the compensation had not been settled by agreement. The workman then commenced arbitration proceedings to have the compensation settled by the Court:—Held, that no question had arisen as to the liability to pay compensation or the amount or duration of the compensation to give the Court jurisdiction to arbitrate under section 1, sub-section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Payne v. Fortescue, 81 L. J. K.B. 1191; [1912] 3 K.B. 346; 107 L. T. 136; 57 S. J. 80; [1912] W.C. Rep. 386—C.A.

A workman who was receiving full compensation for total incapacity under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, applied for the registration of a memorandum of agreement for payment of compensation at that rate until ended, diminished, &c., in terms of the Act. The genuineness of this memorandum was objected to by the employers, on the ground that the workman had signed a receipt bearing that he had agreed that compensation should be paid only while his employers were of opinion that his incapacity continued. The workman accordingly abandoned the application. He then applied for arbitration to fix the amount of compensation, to the competency of which the employers objected on the ground that, as full compensation was being paid, there was no "question" arising in any proceedings under the Act within section 1, sub-section 3 thereof:—Held, that there was a "question" in the sense of the Act, and that the workman was entitled to apply for and obtain an award of compensation. Hunter v. Brown & Co., [1912] S. C. 996; [1912] W.C. Rep. 318—Ct. of Sess.

The respondent having sustained injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, resulting in total incapacity, the appellants, his employers, admitted liability to pay compensation and tendered the amount due (as to which there was no dispute) subject to the appellant signing a receipt therefor which contained the following term: "At the first or any subsequent payment liability is admitted only for the compensation to date of payment. Further liability, if any, will be determined week by week, when application for payment is made." The respondent refused to sign the receipt upon the ground that he was entitled to have from the appellants a simple and unqualified admission such as could be recorded in a memorandum of agreement, or that he was entitled to have the compensation fixed by arbitration on the ground that a question had arisen as to the duration of the compensation within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906:—Held, that a question as to the duration of compensation had arisen between the respondent and the appellants which the respondent was entitled to have settled by arbitration. Summerlee Iron Co. v. Freeland, 82 L. Decision of Court of Session ([1912] S. C. 1145; [1912] W.C. Rep. 325) affirmed. Ib.

A workman met with an accident, and his solicitors wrote to his employers on his behalf, enquiring whether they would admit liability to pay compensation during incapacity in accordance with the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The employers' insurance company replied that they had instructed the employers to pay compensation during total incapacity, and subsequently expressed their willingness that an agreement to pay compensation during total incapacity only should be recorded. The workman claimed an admission of liability not limited to total incapacity, and, without accepting any weekly payments of compensation, commenced proceedings for an award of compensation:—Held, that a question had arisen for arbitration within section 1, sub-section 3 of the Act, and that there was therefore jurisdiction to make an award of compensation in favour of the workman. Payne v. Fortescue & Sons, Lim. (81 L. J. K.B. 1191; [1912] 3 K.B. 346; [1912] W.C. Rep. 386), distinguished. Summerlee Iron Co. v. Freeland (82 L. J. P.C. 102; [1913] A.C. 221; [1913] W.C. & I. Question of Law — Question of Fact.] — A County Court Judge sitting as arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is as absolute, or a more absolute judge of fact than a jury at Nisi Prius, and his decision can only be reviewed on questions of law—per Lord Atkinson. The appellant was a taxicab driver who, in driving a cab of the respondents, met with an accident. The County Court Judge found that the relation between the respondents and the appellant was that of bailor and bailee, and not that of master and servant, and dismissed the application:—Held, that the finding of the County Court Judge could not be disturbed. Smith v. General Motor Cab Co., 80 L. 5. Medical Examination of Workman.

See also Vol. IX. 2251.

Examination by Employers' Doctor—Claim by Workman to have his Own Doctor Present.] —There is no absolute legal right under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to require that the medical examination by the employer's medical man should take place in the presence of the workman's medical man. The burden of proving that the workman's request for the attendance of his own doctor at the examination is reasonable lies with the workman.

Morgan v. Dixon, Lim., 81 L. J. P.C. 57; [1912] A.C. 74; 105 L. T. 678; 56 S. J. 88; 28 T. L. R. 64; [1912] W.C. Rep. 43—H.L. (Sc.)

Per Lord Atkinson: The question whether there has been a refusal or not, under the Act of 1906, by a workman to submit to medical examination is a question of fact, and any reasonable requirement by a workman—such as having his own medical man present—ought not and should not by any reasonable arbitrator be held to amount to a refusal to submit to examination. Ib.

Refusal by Workman — Suspension of Proceedings.]—A workman was severely injured by an accident arising in the course of his employment. His employers admitted liability and paid him the weekly compensation to which he would have been entitled under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, but by arrangement with him, and not under the Act. He was attended by the employers' doctors. At the end of three years upon their doctors' advice the employers stopped payment of the compensation. The workman then commenced proceedings under the Act claiming compensation from the time when the payment was stopped. Thereupon the employers required the workman to submit himself to medical examination at their expense, but the workman refused:—Held, that the proceedings must be suspended until the examination had taken place as provided by Schedule I. clause (4) of the Act. Major v. South Kirkby, Featherstone, and Hemsworth Collieries, 82 L. J. K.B. 452; [1913] 2 K.B. 145; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 305; 108 L. T. 534; 57 S. J. 244; 29 T. L. R. 223—C.A.

Under Schedule I. clause (4), which provides for medical examinations between the accident and the award, the employer is not restricted to one examination only, immediately after notice. Ib.

Schedule I. clause (14) applies to medical examinations of workmen, whether they are receiving or entitled to receive weekly payments under the Act. Ib.

The regulations of the Secretary of State dated June 28, 1907, as to times and intervals at which examinations may be required are made applicable by Schedule I. clause (15) to both clauses (4) and (14) of Schedule I. Ib.

Paragraph 4 of Schedule I. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, which provides that where a workman has given notice of an accident he shall, if so required by the employer, submit himself for examination by a duly qualified medical practitioner, and, if he refuses to submit to such examination, that his right to take or prosecute any proceeding under the Act in relation to compensation shall be suspended until such examination has taken place, does not contemplate only one such examination, and after the workman has been examined once the County Court Judge has power to suspend the proceedings if he refuses to submit to a further medical examination when such examination appears to be reasonable. Paragraph 14 of the schedule applies only to the case of a workman who is actually at the time receiving weekly payments under the Act. Smith v. Davis & Sons, Lim., 84 L. J. K.B. 1125; [1915] A.C. 528; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 299; 113 L. T. 250; 59 S. J. 397; 31 T. L. R. 356—H.L. (E.)

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 71) affirmed. Ib.

Award of Compensation—Workman Enlists and Sent Abroad—Application to Suspend Comsation—Obstructing Medical Examination.]—A workman, who had met with an accident in the course of his employment and was in receipt of compensation for partial incapacity under an award, enlisted in a Territorial regiment. The employers subsequently applied for a review and termination of the compensation, but, on their writing to the workman's solicitors requiring him to be medically examined, they were told that he was in India with his regiment. Thereupon they applied to suspend the payments of compensation, on the grounds—first, that by going abroad the workman had obstructed his being medically examined; and secondly, that he had ceased to reside in the United Kingdom:—Held, that the workman had in no way obstructed the medical examination so as to entitle the employers to a suspension of the compensation under Schedule I. clause 14 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that he had not ceased to reside in the United Kingdom within the meaning of Schedule I. clause 18 of the Act. Harrison, Lim. v. Dowling, 84 L. J. K.B. 1412; [1915] 3 K.B. 218; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 351; 113 L. T. 622; 59 S. J. 612; 31 T. L. R. 486—C.A.

6. Medical Assessor.

Appointment of Medical Referee as Medical Assessor.]—A medical referee appointed under the Act having given a certificate that a workman was suffering from a scheduled industrial disease at a certain date, with the addition that he had completely recovered at the date of the certificate, the workman commenced proceedings which raised the same issue as that on which the opinion had been given:—Held, that the County Court Judge was not entitled to appoint as his assessor the same doctor who had already given his opinion on the question. Wallis v. Soutter & Co., [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 113; 59 S. J. 285—C.A.

Medical Witnesses.]—When an arbitrator is sitting with a medical assessor, he has a right to act upon the advice of the assessor on matters of medical opinion and medical inference, even if there is not any corresponding opinion on the part of the medical witnesses. Woods v. Wilson, Sons & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1067; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 285; 113 L. T. 243; 59 S. J. 348; 31 T. L. R. 273—H.L. (E.)

7. Evidence.

Duty of Judge to Take Notes of Evidence.]—It is the duty of a County Court Judge, under rule 36 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, to make a proper note of the evidence given at the hearing of any arbitration proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Wright v. Sneyd Collieries, 84 L. J. K.B. 1332; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 354; 113 L. T. 633—C.A.

—— Personal Knowledge of Arbitrator.] — Employers, who had been paying compensation to an injured workman, discontinued the compensation on the ground that the workman's total incapacity had ceased. The question of his capacity was thereupon referred to a medical referee, who reported that the workman was fit to do light work, and specified certain kinds of such work. Thereafter the workman presented an application for an award of compensation as for total incapacity, and in support thereof averred that he had applied in the district for, and had been unable to obtain, such work as was indicated by the medical referee, and he enumerated the various places at which he had applied for that work. The arbitrator, without allowing a proof, dismissed the application as irrelevant, holding upon his knowledge of the district that there was a market for such work as was indicated by the referee, and that the workman's efforts to obtain work had not been sufficient to test the market:—Held, that the arbitrator was not entitled to dismiss the application as irrelevant, but ought to have allowed the workman a proof of his averments, although he would be allowed to use his own knowledge of the district in considering the evidence adduced. Dyer v. Wilsons & Clyde Coal Co., [1915] S. C. 199; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 433—Ct. of Sess.

—— Balancing Probabilities.] — Although when acting as arbitrator in cases arising under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, a County Court Judge may, and in many cases ought, to proceed without any direct evidence, and although he may, and in many cases ought, to proceed upon indirect evidence which justifies his drawing an inference, yet there is nothing to justify him in doing that which is merely a balancing of probabilities. Parry (or Perry) v. Ocean Coal Co., 106 L. T. 713; [1912] W.C. Rep. 212—C.A.

Evidence on Commission.]—In an arbitration for determining the compensation payable to a workman for an accident under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the County Court Judge has no power to order the evidence of the applicant to be taken on commission before an examiner or to delegate the taking of evidence to any person other than the arbitrator. Principle of Sutton v. Great Northern Railway (79 L. J. K.B. 81; [1909] 2 K.B. 791) applied. Taylor v. Cripps, 83 L. J. K.B. 1538; [1914] 3 K.B. 989; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 515; 111 L. T. 780; 30 T. L. R. 616—C.A.

—— Appeal.]—An appeal from an order of a County Court Judge that evidence should be taken on commission lies to the Court of Appeal and not to a Divisional Court. Ib.

Statements as to Cause of Accident—Statement by Deceased Workman to Doctor—Admissibility.]—A doctor may not give in evidence statements made to him by a deceased workman as to the cause of his injuries some days after an accident. Wright v. Kerrigan ([1911] 2 Ir. R. 301) discussed. Amys v. Barton, 81 L. J. K.B. 65; [1912] 1 K.B. 40; 105 L. T. 619; 28 T. L. R. 29; [1912] W.C. Rep. 22—C.A.

The deceased man's wife said that the deceased returned home and stated that he had been out that evening and collapsed while out and got wet through:—Held, that this statement was not admissible in evidence. Beare v. Garrod, [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 438—C.A.

Statement by Deceased as to Cause of Injury — Admission — Statement against Pecuniary Interest.]—In proceedings by the dependants of a deceased workman to recover compensation in respect of an accident alleged to have caused his death, statements by the workman to an officer of his employers as to the cause of his injury are not admissible in evidence either as an admission or as statements made against pecuniary interest. Tucker v. Oldbury Urban Council, 81 L. J. K.B. 668; [1912] 2 K.B. 317; 106 L. T. 669; [1912] W.C. Rep. 238—C.A.

A workman in the employment of an undertaker and funeral contractor had in the course of his ordinary duty to lift coffins in and out of vans. One morning he went to his work without any marks of physical injury, and he returned suffering from hurts to his chest, side, and leg, the marks of which were visible, and seen by his wife and medical attendant. They were caused by abrasions as if something had knocked against him. He told the doctor that they were the result of an accident, and the doctor stated to the employer that the injured man said that he met with an accident by the moving of a coffin, that he was very bad, and would probably die of his injuries. The employer's reply (according to the doctor's evidence) was merely that he was insured. The injured man died of pneumonia supervening on traumatic pleurisy caused by these hurts, and the arbitrator having so found, and also found that the accident arose out of and in the course of the employment,—Held, that the statements of the deceased workman were properly admitted in evidence, and, following Mitchell v. Glamorgan (23 T. L. R. 588), that there was sufficient evidence to justify the findings of the arbitrator. Wright v. Kerrigan, [1911] 2 Ir. R. 301—C.A.

Award Based on Medical Referee's Report—Defective Vision.]—A workman who was employed as a ship's painter and scaler sustained injury to his left eye, caused by a blow from a rivet. Accordingly he claimed compensation from his employers under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The County Court Judge having heard medical evidence on both sides as to the workman's physical state was not satisfied therewith, and sent the case to the medical referee to report whether the workman was or was not still incapacitated by reason of the condition of his left eye from doing the work of a ship's painter. The report of the medical referee was that there was nothing abnormal in the eye to account for the great defect of vision complained of; that he was inclined to think that the workman had better vision than he would own to; that if the workman's statements were true, the case must be regarded as one of hysterical blindness or his left eye must always have been a defective one; but that if his sight was as he said it was, he was not fit to do his work as a ship's painter, but he could do ordinary painting when he had not to stand on a scaffolding. On this report the County Court Judge found as a fact that the workman was by reason of the accident incapacitated from doing the work of a ship's painter, and that he would have great difficulty in obtaining any employment, and gave the workman compensation for total incapacity for work on the footing of his average weekly earnings being 45*s*. The employers appealed:—Held, that there was sufficient evidence upon which the County Court Judge might arrive at the view at which he did; that, assuming that the defective vision in the workman's left eye was due to the accident thereto and he was not able to do work involving painting on a scaffolding or on a ladder, it was a case in which the workman was an "odd lot man"; and that therefore the decision in Proctor v. Robinson (80 L. J. K.B. 641; [1911] 1 K.B. 1004) applied, and not that in Cardiff Corporation v. Hall (80 L. J. K.B. 644; [1911] 1 K.B. 1009). James v. Mordey, Carney & Co., [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 670; 109 L. Refusal to Undergo Operation — Unreasonable Refusal—Medical Evidence—Probability of Cure.]—A workman applied for compensation on the ground of incapacity resulting from an accident in respect of which he was admittedly entitled to compensation, which had been paid for nine months. The employer then alleged that the incapacity was the result, not of the accident, but of the workman's refusal to undergo an operation which was such as a reasonable man would submit to. The medical evidence was to the effect that the operation would not be attended with excessive pain or risk, and would in all probability restore the workman's capacity to work at his trade. The workman refused on the ground that he might risk his capacity to do other work. The County Court Judge held that his refusal was reasonable, and awarded compensation:—Held, that there was no evidence to support the finding of the County Court Judge, and that the workman was not entitled to further compensation. Warncken v. Moreland (78 L. J. K.B. 332; [1909] 1 K.B. 184) followed. Walsh v. Lock & Co., [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 95; 110 L. T. 452—C.A.

—— Whether Incapacity Results from Injury.]—Circumstances in which held that a workwoman's present incapacity was due to an accident to her hand, and could not be attributed to unreasonable conduct on her part in refusing to undergo an operation, which might have restored or improved the capacity of the hand, but which her own doctor advised her not to undergo. Gracie v. Clyde Spinning Co., [1915] S. C. 906—Ct. of Sess.

Per the Lord President: Save in very special circumstances the proximate cause of incapacity never can be the unreasonable refusal of a workman to undergo an operation if his own medical adviser advises him against undergoing that operation. Ib.

Costs of Expert Witness — Doctor's Fee — Qualifying to Give Evidence—Examination of Workman before Application for Arbitration.]—A workman injured in his employment in April, 1913, received compensation from his employers until September, 1913, when it was stopped. On October 20, 1913, the workman's solicitors wrote asking the employers for suitable work and compensation. On October 25, 1913, the workman was examined by a doctor for the employers. On December 13, 1913, the workman requested arbitration. The County Court Judge made his award in favour of the employers, and ordered them to be paid a qualifying fee for the doctor who examined the workman, who also gave evidence at the hearing:—Held, that the County Court Judge, having decided that the examination was made for the purpose of qualifying to give evidence, had jurisdiction to allow the qualifying fee, although the examination took place before the request for arbitration was made. Jones v. Davies & Sons, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 1531; [1914] 3 K.B. 549; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 509; 111 L. T. 769—C.A.

—— Medical Witnesses Called by Employers —Costs—Disallowance—Judicial Discretion.]—Where medical witnesses in a case arising under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, gave evidence which was directly material and was believed, it was held that, having regard to the reasons assigned by the County Court Judge, he did not exercise his discretion judicially in disallowing the costs of those witnesses. Finlayson v. 8. Medical Referee.

Ambiguous Report from Medical Referee.]—The report of a medical referee, to whom a remit has been made under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, Sched. I. clause 15, may competently be sent back to him by the arbitrator for explanation if it is ambiguous or unintelligible. Kennedy v. Dixon, [1913] S. C. 659; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 333—Ct. of Sess.

Conclusiveness of Medical Referee's Report.]—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator, in consequence of a conflict of medical evidence, remitted to a medical referee under paragraph 15 of Schedule II. to examine the evidence and to report whether a deceased workman was injured by rupture of the heart caused by the work and died therefrom, or whether he died from heart disease. The medical referee reported that the workman "died from disease of the heart." The arbitrator thereafter found that the workman had died from a rupture of the heart caused by the strain resulting from the work in which he was engaged, and awarded compensation:—Held, first, that the arbitrator was not bound to accept the medical referee's report as conclusive of the question which he, as arbitrator, had to decide; and secondly, that as there was some evidence to support his decision it could not be interfered with. Jackson v. Scotstoun Estate Co., [1911] S. C. 564—Ct. of Sess.

In an application for review of compensation paid to a miner who had received an injury resulting in the loss of an eye, a remit was made to a medical referee under paragraph 15 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The referee reported that the miner was "as fit as any other one-eyed man to resume his work under ground." The miner applied to have the question of his earning capacity tried, but the arbitrator refused the application and ended the compensation, on the ground that the referee's report was final, and that it meant that the miner's incapacity had ceased:—Held, that the report, though final as to the miner's physical condition, was not final as to his earning capacity, and the case was remitted to the arbitrator to hear evidence on this point. Arnott v. Fife Coal Co., [1911] S. C. 1029—Ct. of Sess.

By agreement between a coal miner, who had received an injury to his thumb and was receiving compensation, and his employers, the question of the workman's capacity to resume his former employment was referred to a medical referee under paragraph 15 of Schedule I. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The medical referee reported that the workman was "quite fit to resume his ordinary employment as a coal miner, having recovered from" the injury. The employers thereupon applied to have the compensation ended, when the workman lodged answers in which he averred that having returned to work he had ascertained "that his earning ability has been considerably reduced from the effects of his injury" and maintained that he was still entitled to partial compensation. The arbitrator having ended the compensation the workman appealed and asked leave to lead evidence in support of his averments:—Held, dismissing the appeal, that as the medical referee's report was final and was from its terms conclusive as to the question raised by the workman's averments, proof of these averments was inadmissible. Ball v. Hunt (81 L. J. K.B. 782; [1912] A.C. 496) and Macdonald (or Duris) v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co. (81 L. J. P.C. 188; [1912] A.C. 513) distinguished; and observed that where a medical referee's report is not from its terms conclusive a proof may be admissible. Gray v. Shotts Iron Co., [1912] S. C. 1267; [1912] W.C. Rep. 359—Ct. of Sess.

Whether a proof might not have been admissible if the workman had averred that owing to the consequences of the accident he had been unable to obtain employment, quære. Ib.

—— Proof as to Wage-earning Capacity.]—In an application to end the compensation payable to a miner who had received an injury to his eye, the question of his condition and his fitness for employment was referred to a medical referee under paragraph 15 of Schedule I. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The medical referee reported that "his condition is such that I consider he ought now to be fit to resume his ordinary work as a miner below ground." The miner having lodged answers in which he averred that he had not yet recovered from the effects of the accident and that his earning capacity was not restored, the Court allowed a proof as to the miner's wage-earning capacity, but excluded all evidence with regard to his physical condition and physical fitness for his ordinary work as a miner below ground, as on those points the medical referee's certificate was final. Cruden v. Wemyss Coal Co., [1913] S. C. 534; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 188—Ct. of Sess.

Competency of Remit to Medical Referee—Finding by Referee Outside Matter Remitted to him.]—A woman was incapacitated by an accident which caused injuries to her hand, and she refused, on the advice of her own doctor, to undergo a minor operation involving the use of anæsthetics, which was likely to diminish the incapacity of her hand. After evidence, an arbitrator remitted to a medical referee for a report as to whether the woman would be exposed to any exceptional risk in the use of anæsthetics, as this was a matter which had not been established by the evidence. The referee reported that the risk was not more than ordinary; but he added that he considered that the operation would be of little benefit, and that the injury to the hand was permanent. The arbitrator refused to take the latter opinion into consideration, as it went beyond the terms of the remit to the referee. On appeal it was maintained that a remit to a medical referee on a matter as to which no evidence had been given was incompetent, but that if the arbitrator regarded any part of the referee's report he must regard the whole of it:—Held, first, that the remit to the medical referee had been competently made; and secondly, that the arbitrator was not entitled to disregard any part of the referee's report. Gracie v. Clyde Spinning Co., [1915] S. C. 906—Ct. of Sess.

Report of Medical Referee—Recovery of Wage-earning Capacity—Termination of Compensation—Suspensory Award.]—A workman lost the sight of one eye by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and received compensation from his employers. Upon a remit by consent to a medical referee, the referee reported that the workman had recovered from his incapacity, and was fit for work; and it was also in evidence that he had been in fact employed at his former work at his old rate of wages:—Held, that there was evidence on which the arbitrator was entitled to terminate the compensation without making a suspensory award. Jones v. Anderson, 84 L. J. P.C. 47; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 151; 112 L. T. 225; 59 S. J. 159; 31 T. L. R. 76—H.L. (Sc.)

Industrial Disease—Certificates of Certifying Surgeon and Medical Referee—Claimant Certified to be Suffering from Scheduled Disease—Finding that Disease not Due to Employment—Claimant's Right to Prove Contrary.]—A miner claiming compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in respect of an industrial disease, obtained from a certifying surgeon a certificate that he was suffering from, and disabled by, "nystagmus," one of the scheduled diseases applicable to the employment of "mining." A medical referee, to whom the matter was referred on the application of the employers, found that the claimant suffered from nystagmus, but that it was not miner's nystagmus, but one of the other forms of that disease. The arbitrator dismissed the claim on the ground that, in view of the referee's finding, the claimant had not obtained the certificate, required by section 8 of the Act, that he was suffering from a scheduled disease: —Held, first, that the claimant had obtained the necessary certificate that he was suffering from a scheduled disease; secondly, that the decision of the medical referee was not final as to whether that disease was or was not due to the claimant's employment; and thirdly, that the effect of the finding that it was not due to his employment was to displace the presumption in his favour, and to throw upon him the onus of proving affirmatively that it was. Held, therefore, that the case should accordingly be remitted to the arbitrator to take evidence upon this. M'Ginn v. Udston Coal Co., [1912] S. C. 668; [1912] W.C. Rep. 134—Ct. of Sess.

It is competent for a medical referee, while affirming the certificate of a certifying surgeon that a claimant is suffering from a scheduled disease, to vary that certificate by finding that the disease is or is not due to his employment. Ib.

—— Date of Disablement Rendering Certificate Useless to Workman — Workman "aggrieved" — Right to Appeal to Medical Referee.]—A miner left his employment with a coal company on September 1, 1911, since which date he had done no work, and went into hospital for colitis. At this time and for two years previously he had been suffering from his eyes. On November 27, 1912, having left the hospital, he went to a certifying surgeon, who gave him a certificate that he was suffering from miner's nystagmus, but did not fix the date of the commencement of the disablement. The surgeon subsequently gave an amended certificate fixing the date as November 27, 1912. This certificate was useless to the workman as it fixed the date more than twelve months after his leaving the employment of the company. He appealed from the certifying surgeon to the medical referee, who fixed the date as September 1, 1911. The company contended there could be no appeal by a workman from the certifying surgeon to the medical referee except from a refusal to give a certificate, and that even if he could appeal from a given certificate the medical referee could not fix the date:—Held, that an appeal lay from the certifying surgeon to the medical referee under section 8, sub-section 1 (i.), (f), and that the medical referee could fix the date of disablement under section 8, sub-section 4 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Birks v. Stafford Coal and Iron Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 1334; [1913] 3 K.B. 686; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 755; 109 L. T. 290; 57 S. J. 729—C.A.

—— Certificate by Certifying Surgeon Referred to Medical Referee—Scope of Medical Referee's Decision.]—Under section 8, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, a medical referee can only decide whether a certifying surgeon's certificate was rightly granted. Accordingly, where a medical referee upheld the granting of a certificate of disablement, an addendum by him to the effect that, at the date of his (the medical referee's) examination the workman was again able to work, was incompetent and fell to be treated pro non scripto. Garrett v. Waddell, [1911] S. C. 1168—Ct. of Sess.

When a certificate by a certifying surgeon as to whether a workman is suffering from an industrial disease is objected to, and is referred under section 8, sub-section 1 (f) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to a medical referee, it is the duty of the medical referee to decide categorically whether the certificate has been rightly granted or not. Therefore, where a medical referee pronounced a decision "subject to" a note, the terms of the note being contradictory of what purported to be the effect of the decision, the matter was remitted to him to complete the reference by giving a categorical answer. Winters v. Addie & Sons' Collieries, Lim., [1911] S. C. 1174—Ct. of Sess.

Death Regulations made by the Secretary of State and the Treasury.]—On an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator can, under Schedule II. (15), submit to a medical referee for a report any matter which seems material to any question arising in the arbitration, notwithstanding that the workman is dead and that the regulations on the subject made by the Secretary of State and the Treasury only contemplate the case of a living workman. Carolan v. Harrington, 80 L. 9. Assessing Compensation.

a. By Agreement: Recording of Memorandum.

See also Vol. IX. 2234.

"Party interested"—Approved Society.]—Whether an approved society under the National Insurance Act, 1911, is a "party interested" who, in terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, Schedule II. (9), may apply for registration of a memorandum of an agreement regarding the payment of compensation to one of its members, quære. Baird & Co. v. Ancient Order of Foresters, [1914] S. C. 965; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 534—Ct. of Sess.

Workman Insured in Approved Society — Locus Standi to Object to Registration — "Parties interested."]—Where an agreement is made as to the redemption by a lump sum of a weekly payment to a workman who is an insured person within the meaning of the National Insurance Act, 1911, the approved society concerned in the administration of any benefit to which such insured person is entitled under that Act are not "parties interested" for the purpose of clause 9 of the Second Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and have no locus standi to appear before the County Court Judge and object to the recording of a memorandum of such agreement. Bonney v. Hoyle & Sons, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 541; [1914] 2 K.B. 257; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 565; 110 L. T. 729; 12 L. G. R. 358; 58 S. J. 268; 30 T. L. R. 280—C.A.

Implied Agreement — Registration.] — Employers intimated their intention to pay, and did in fact pay, a weekly sum to an injured workman upon the production by him of a fortnightly certificate from the employers' doctor that the workman was still incapable of returning to work:—Held, that there was no evidence of an implied agreement to pay this sum during incapacity within Schedule II. (9) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Phillips v. Vickers, Son & Maxim, 81 L. J. K.B. 123; [1912] 1 K.B. 16; 105 L. T. 564; [1912] W.C. Rep. 71—C.A.

The mere payment by an employer of a weekly payment by way of compensation to a workman who has been injured by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, does not suffice to establish that an agreement so to do has been come to, a memorandum of which is capable of being recorded pursuant to section 9 of the Second Schedule to the Act. Hartshorne v. Coppice Colliery Co., 106 L. T. 609; [1912] W.C. Rep. 255—C.A.

A workman having been injured by "accident arising out of and in the course of" his employment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, his employers paid a weekly sum representing half his wages to the workman for a time and then discontinued the payment on the advice of their doctor that the workman had recovered from the effects of the accident. The workman subsequently applied to the Registrar of the County Court to record a memorandum of an alleged agreement under section 9 of the second schedule to the Act. The workman sought by recording the memorandum of the alleged agreement to impose upon the employers the burden of shewing that circumstances had been changed so that they would be entitled to claim a review of the agreement, which if recorded would have the effect of an award. The employers, however, contended that no such agreement as was alleged had in fact ever been entered into; that the County Court Judge could not make an agreement between the parties; but that the Court could only record a memorandum of an agreement which had in fact been made:—Held, that an agreement within the Act need not be in writing; that it might be inferred and implied by reason of the conduct of the parties and all the circumstances; but that there was no evidence in the present case to support the view that any such document as was sought to be recorded was in fact entered into; and that the learned County Court Judge had no jurisdiction to order an agreement to be recorded which was not really an agreement entered into between the parties. Phillips v. Vickers, Son & Maxim (81 L. J. K.B. 123; [1912] 1 K.B. 16) and Hartshorne v. Coppice Colliery Co. ([1912] W.C. Rep. 255; 106 L. T. Rep. 609) applied. Godbold v. London County Council, 111 L. T. 691—C.A.

The applicant was a plasterer's labourer in the employment of the respondents, and met with an accident which totally incapacitated him. The respondents paid him compensation from the date of the accident at the rate of half his average weekly earnings, and on each payment he gave a receipt for "compensation to date under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for personal injury by accident sustained" by him. The applicant applied for registration of an agreement by the respondents to pay him compensation at the rate of 50 per cent. of his average weekly earnings until the same was ended, diminished, redeemed, or suspended, in terms of the Act. The only evidence of an agreement consisted in the receipts. The County Court Judge dismissed the application on the ground that he could not infer that an agreement in the form proposed had ever been arrived at:—Held, on appeal, that as the receipts were no evidence of such an agreement, the Judge's decision was right. Madden v. Guest's Executors, [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 589; 32 T. L. R. 74—C.A.

In an application to an arbitrator for an award of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the pursuer averred that "The defenders admitted liability to pursuer in respect of said accident and the said injuries sustained by him under said Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and paid pursuer compensation at the rate of 10*s.* per week up to and including payment for the week ending December 9, 1914, since which date defenders refuse to continue payment." The defenders objected to the competency of the proceedings on the ground that these averments disclosed that the questions between the parties had been settled by agreement:—Held, that the averments did not shew an agreement within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 3 of the Act, and accordingly that the application was competent. Kane v. Stein & Co., Lim., [1915] S. C. 863—Ct. of Sess.

Compensation Agreed—Payment into Court by Agents other than Solicitors.]—Where an amount of compensation has been agreed it can be paid into Court by other agents of the employers than their solicitors, and the præcipe sent with the money may be signed by such agents—for example, the Shipping Federation Thompson & Co. v. Watt-Taylor, 57 S. J. 479—Bailhache, J.

Terms of Memorandum Differing from Terms of Agreement.] — Where an agreement in writing has been entered into between an employer and a workman with regard to compensation, it is the duty of the Sheriff (if objection is taken) to refuse to record a memorandum which is not in the precise terms of the written agreement. It is not part of his duty to construe the written agreement and then to determine whether the memorandum gives effect to it as so construed. M'Lean v. Allan Line Steamship Co., [1912] S. C. 256; [1912] W.C. Rep. 37—Ct. of Sess.

A workman, who had been totally incapacitated by accident, received weekly payments of 10*s.* from his employers, for which he granted receipts bearing that the payments were accepted "as the weekly compensation payable during the period of total incapacity for work as the result of the accident." He subsequently applied for warrant to record a memorandum which bore that the parties had agreed "that compensation be paid by" the employers to the workman "in terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act, at the rate of 10*s.* per week from" the date of the accident:—Held, that the memorandum was not genuine, in respect of the omission of the qualification "during the period of total incapacity." Pryde v. Moore & Co., [1913] S. C. 457; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 100—Ct. of Sess.

An injured workman and his employers verbally agreed that compensation should be paid to the former at the rate of 15*s.* 1*d.* per week. The workman thereafter signed a number of receipts, each of which bore to be for "weekly compensation to date under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, under which I claim for personal injury by accident sustained by me." Thereafter the employers objected to the recording of a memorandum which bore that the agreement was to pay compensation at the foresaid rate "until the same is ended, diminished, redeemed, or suspended in terms of" the Act, on the ground that the memorandum was not genuine because it differed in terms from the agreement, which contained no obligation as to future payments:—Held, the arbitrator who had granted warrant to record the memorandum was right in so doing in respect that the agreement was an agreement to pay compensation in terms of the Act and that this memorandum merely set forth those terms. Pearson v. Babcock & Wilcox, [1913] S. C. 959; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 430—Ct. of Sess.

A workman, who had been incapacitated as the result of an accident, received payments of compensation from his employers for more than a year, and granted receipts for these payments, which bore that they were "accepted as the amounts payable under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906." The payments were all at the rate of 10*s.* per week, which was the rate to which the workman was entitled as for total incapacity. On the employers ceasing to make further payments the workman sought to record a memorandum, which bore that "the liability to pay workmen's compensation during the claimant's incapacity for work at the rate of 10*s.* per week was admitted by the respondents." The employers objected to the recording of this memorandum, on the ground that the agreement, as evidenced by the receipts, was to pay compensation during total incapacity only, and accordingly that the memorandum was not in terms of the agreement:—Held, that the agreement was not limited to the period of total incapacity, and accordingly that the memorandum was in terms of the agreement, and fell to be recorded. Scott v. Sanquhar and Kirkconnel Collieries, [1915] S. C. 520; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 196—Ct. of Sess.

Discretion as to Recording.] — An injured workman, who had entered into an agreement with his employers with regard to payment of compensation, sought to record a memorandum of that agreement. The employers objected to the recording of the agreement on the ground (which was admitted) that the workman had returned to work and was earning the same wages as before the accident, and the Sheriff refused to record:—Held, that the memorandum being a genuine record of the agreement, the Sheriff had no discretion to refuse to record it, but should have recorded it, attaching such conditions as he considered just in the circumstances. Scott v. Sanquhar and Kirkconnel Collieries, [1915] S. C. 520; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 196—Ct. of Sess.

The Second Schedule, clause 9 (d) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, provides that a Sheriff-Clerk [Registrar] to whom a memorandum of agreement for the redemption of a claim for compensation by payment of a lump sum is brought, may refuse to record it if, "on any information which he considers sufficient," it appears to him that by reason of the inadequacy of the sum or the means by which the agreement was obtained, the agreement should not be recorded:—Held, that the Sheriff-Clerk is not bound in every case ex proprio motu to enquire into these matters before proceeding to record. M'Guire v. Paterson & Co., [1913] S. C. 400; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 107—Ct. of Sess.

—— Objection not a "workman"—Estoppel.] —The master of a sailing barge was injured by accident in his employment. He applied under Schedule II. paragraph 9 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to record a memorandum of an agreement made between himself as a "workman" and the barge owners, under which he was to receive 1*l.* a week during total incapacity. The barge owners objected to the recording of the agreement solely on the ground that the master was not a "workman" within the Act. They did not dispute the agreement itself or the continuance of total disability, or allege fraud or mutual mistake. The County Court Judge found that the master was not a "workman," and refused to record the memorandum. On appeal,—Held, that, as it had been settled by the agreement that the master was a "workman" within the Act, the County Court Judge had no jurisdiction, by reason of section 1, sub-section 3 of the Act, to consider that question, and that the agreement must be recorded. Goodsell v. "Lloyds" (Owners), 83 L. J. K.B. 1733; [1914] 3 K.B. 1001; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 585; 111 L. T. 784; 30 T. L. R. 622—C.A.

Genuineness of Agreement — Adequacy of Amount.]—Schedule II. clause 9 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, provides that when the amount of compensation under the Act has been ascertained or any other matter decided under the Act by agreement, a memorandum thereof shall be sent by any person interested to the Registrar of the County Court, who shall, subject to Rules of Court, on being satisfied as to its genuineness, record such memorandum in a special register without fee, and thereupon the memorandum shall for all purposes be enforceable as a County Court judgment. Provided that (d) where it appears to the Registrar, on any information which he considers sufficient, that an agreement as to the redemption of a weekly payment by a lump sum ought not to be registered by reason of the inadequacy of the sum, he may refuse to record the memorandum of the agreement, and refer the matter to the Judge, who shall, in accordance with Rules of Court, make such order as under the circumstances he may think just. When an agreement for redemption of a weekly payment by a lump sum has been entered into between employer and workman and a memorandum thereof sent by the employer to the Registrar of the County Court, it is prima facie his duty to record it on being satisfied as to its genuineness; but if the adequacy of the amount of redemption is called in question, it is his duty to enquire into the adequacy thereof, notwithstanding that Form 38 in the Appendix to the Consolidated Workmen's Compensation Rules, July, 1913, indicates that he may refer the matter to the County Court Judge on the mere objection of the workman to the registration of the memorandum on the ground of the inadequacy of the sum. Rex v. Bow County Court (Registrar); Scottish Shire Line, Ex parte, 83 L. J. K.B. 1806; [1914] 3 K.B. 266; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 591; 111 L. T. 277—D.

Payment of Lump Sum—Objection to Recording of Agreement—Order for Consignment in Court of Lump Sum Paid to Workman—Validity of Order.] — An injured workman entered into an agreement with his employers that the weekly compensation due to him should be redeemed for a lump sum of 100*l.*, which sum was paid over to him. On the employers presenting a memorandum of this agreement for registration, the Sheriff-Clerk refused to record it on the ground of the inadequacy of the sum, and referred the matter to the Sheriff, who, holding that further enquiry into the question was necessary, ordered the workman to consign in Court the 100*l.* (less the weekly compensation due to date) as a condition precedent to the enquiry being held:—Held, that the Sheriff was not entitled to make such an order. M'Vie v. Taylor & Co., [1914] S. C. 533—Ct. of Sess.

Compromise of Claim before any Weekly Payments Made—Agreement not Registered—Validity of Agreement.] — An agreement entered into between an adult workman and his employer before any weekly payment of compensation has been made by which the workman's claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is compromised by payment of a lump sum, is not an agreement falling within Schedule II. clause 10 of the Act, and is effective although not registered under the Act. Ryan v. Hartley, 81 L. J. K.B. 666; [1912] 2 K.B. 150; [1912] W.C. Rep. 236; 106 L. T. 702—C.A.

Memorandum not Disclosing Agreement as to Costs.]—The solicitor of an employer who was paying weekly compensation to a workman offered the solicitor of the latter 15*l.* and 5*l.* 5*s.* of costs in final settlement of the claim. The workman's solicitor communicated the offer of 15*l.* to his client and urged him to accept it, but did not mention the arrangement about costs. The workman having authorised his solicitor to accept the offer of 15*l.*, the solicitor wrote accepting the offer of 15*l.* in settlement of the compensation "and 5*l.* 5*s.* in full of our [costs] as arranged." Thereafter the employer presented an application to record a memorandum of agreement which narrated that the weekly payments were to be redeemed by payment of 15*l.*, but contained no reference to the costs. The application was opposed by the workman. There was no suggestion that the agreed-on amount of costs was excessive:—Held, first, that, in the circumstances, the settlement between the employer and the workman was not vitiated by the fact that the arrangement as to costs had not been communicated to the workman; and secondly, that the memorandum of agreement was genuine though it contained no reference to the agreement as to costs, that being a subsidiary arrangement. M'Laughlin v. Pumpherston Oil Co., [1915] S. C. 65—Ct. of Sess.

"Spent" Agreement—Application to Record Memorandum of Agreement.]—A County Court Judge is entitled to refuse to record a memorandum of an agreement for compensation under clause 9 of Schedule II. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, even though it be solely upon the ground that the facts upon which the agreement was based are changed, or no longer exist, and that the agreement itself is accordingly "spent." Popple v. Frodingham Iron and Steel Co., 81 L. J. K.B. 769; [1912] 2 K.B. 141; [1912] W.C. Rep. 231; 106 L. T. 703—C.A.

Agreement to Pay Compensation During Total Incapacity—Arrears of Payments—Application for Leave to Issue Execution—Jurisdiction of Registrar.]—Where a memorandum of an agreement has been recorded by the Registrar of a County Court, pursuant to section 9 of the Second Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, whereby compensation to a workman is made payable by his employer so long as his total incapacity for work shall last, it may be right to apply to the Registrar to enforce that agreement as a County Court judgment; but if the employer raises the question whether total incapacity has ceased, that being a question which goes to the root of the matter, the Registrar cannot direct execution to issue. If, on the other hand, it is admitted by the employer that the total incapacity continues, then on that admission there is his duty to pay compensation which will be enforced by execution. Warren v. Roxburgh, [1912] W.C. Rep. 306; 106 L. T. 555—C.A.

Enforceability of Agreement as a County Court Judgment.] — A memorandum of an agreement between a workman and his employer for the redemption, by a lump sum, of a weekly payment awarded as compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in pursuance of which the employer has paid to the workman the agreed amount, is one which the Registrar of the County Court is bound to register under Schedule II. clause 9 of the Act on the application of the employer, having regard to clause 10 of that schedule, although nothing further can be due thereunder to the workman, the provision of clause 9 that the memorandum when so registered shall be enforceable as a County Court judgment applying equally whether the memorandum is sought to be enforced by the workman or the employer. Rex v. Thetford County Court Registrar; Brandon Gas Co., Ex parte, 84 L. J. K.B. 291; [1915] 1 K.B. 224; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 136; 112 L. T. 413—D.

Death of Workman not from Effects of Accident—Death within Seven Days of Sending in Agreement to be Recorded — Agreement not Conditional until Recorded—Time for Objections not Elapsed—Agreement duly Recorded—Right of Legal Personal Representative to Enforce Agreement.] — A workman was in receipt of weekly compensation from his employers for injury by accident. On June 12, 1914, an agreement in writing, duly executed by the parties, by which the employers agreed to pay the workman a lump sum of 85*l.* in redemption of all their liability under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, was sent to the Registrar to be recorded. The Registrar thereupon sent out the proper notices, and on June 22, 1914, no notice of objection having been received, recorded the agreement. Meanwhile, on June 18, 1914, before the seven days allowed for sending in notices of objections had elapsed, the workman died, admittedly from causes altogether outside the accident. Neither the Registrar nor the employers were aware of his death when the agreement was recorded. There were no dependants. Upon application by the administratrix of the deceased workman for leave to issue execution,—Held, that the agreement was not conditional until it was recorded, and that it had been duly recorded despite the death of the workman within the seven days, and that it was enforceable as a County Court judgment by the administratrix under Schedule II. clause 9 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Price v. Westminster Brymbo Coal and Coke Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 746; [1915] 2 K.B. 128; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 245; 112 L. T. 905; 59 S. J. 301; 31 T. L. R. 219—C.A.

Schedule I. clause 19 of the Act does not bar a claim by a legal personal representative to enforce a deceased's workman's right against his employer. Ib.

Action to Set Aside Agreement on Ground of Mistake.]—A workman, with the advice of his solicitor, agreed with his employers to accept a lump sum in settlement of a claim for compensation due to him in respect of injuries caused by an accident, and a memorandum of the agreement was recorded. In a subsequent action to set aside the memorandum he averred that both parties were in error as to the extent of his injuries at the time when the agreement was made, both being under the belief that he would recover in a few weeks, whereas it turned out he was permanently incapacitated:—Held, that these averments did not disclose a relevant ground for setting aside the agreement. M'Guire v. Paterson & Co., [1913] S. C. 400; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 107—Ct. of Sess.

"Agreement" in Settlement of Claim for Compensation.] — An agreement between a workman and his employers for the settlement of a claim for compensation by payment of a lump sum may be an "agreement" in the sense of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906 (and so recordable), even though the employers dispute liability to pay compensation, if in fact they have agreed to the amount of the payment being fixed as though they were liable under the Act. Ib.

Appeal from County Court Judge—Jurisdiction of Court of Appeal.] — When a County Court Judge makes an order upon a matter referred to him by a Registrar of the County Court on his refusal to record a memorandum of agreement under clause 9 (d) of Schedule II. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, an appeal from that order lies direct to the Court of Appeal under clause 4 of Schedule II., and not to the Divisional Court. Panagotis v. "Pontiac" (Owners) (81 L. J. K.B. 286; [1912] 1 K.B. 74; [1912] W.C. Rep. 74) distinguished. Bonney v. Hoyle & Sons, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 541; [1914] 2 K.B. 257; [1914] W.C. & I. Application to Rectify Register by Removing Memorandum—Jurisdiction.]—In arbitration proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, there is no jurisdiction to remove from the register, kept under Schedule II. clause 9 of the Act, a memorandum of agreement which correctly states the terms of the agreement entered into between the parties, unless the application to remove it is made under Schedule II. clause 9 (e) within six months of its being recorded, and it is proved to the satisfaction of the arbitrator that the agreement was obtained by "fraud or undue influence or other improper means." Schofield v. Clough & Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 447; [1913] 2 K.B. 103; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 292; 108 L. T. 532; 57 S. J. 243—C.A.

Costs—Jurisdiction—Enquiry as to Adequacy of Sum Payable—Order for Successful Party to Pay Costs—No Misconduct Proved.]—Assuming that a County Court Judge has jurisdiction as to the costs of an enquiry, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, Sched. II. clause 9 (d), as to recording a memorandum of an agreement for redemption of a weekly payment, he cannot order a successful party against whom no misconduct is proved to pay the costs of the other party. Kierson v. Thompson & Sons, Lim., 82 L. J. K.B. 920; [1913] 1 K.B. 587; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 140; 108 L. T. 236; 57 S. J. 226; 29 T. L. R. 205—C.A.

Seaman.]—In the case of seamen, compensation for accident under the Workmen's Compensation Act begins exactly where the right to maintenance under the Merchant Shipping Acts ends. McDermott v. "Tintoretto" Steamship, 80 L. J. K.B. 161; [1911] A.C. 35; 103 L. T. 769; 11 Asp. M.C. 515; 55 S. J. 124; 27 T. L. R. 149—H.L. (E.)

The words in paragraph 3 of Schedule I. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, that the arbitrator is to have regard to "any payment, allowance, or benefit which the workman may receive from the employers during the period of his incapacity," refer only to such as is received in respect of the incapacity or that period of it which is covered by the compensation. Ib.

The appellant, a seaman, was injured by accident on board ship and received maintenance and wages until he landed in New York, where he was discharged and taken to a hospital, where he stayed for some weeks. He was then conveyed to England, where he arrived more than two months after the accident:—Held, that the arbitrator, in assessing compensation for the accident, was not required by paragraph 3 of the schedule to make any deduction from the award in respect of the wages, maintenance, and treatment received by the seaman on the ship from the time of the accident until he was discharged. Ib.

Stoker in Mercantile Marine — Member of Royal Naval Reserve — Concurrent Contracts of Service.]—A sailor, who was also a member of the Royal Naval Reserve, met with an accident, and compensation was awarded to him. The County Court Judge, in estimating the average weekly earnings of the applicant, had regard, in addition to his wages, to the annual sum of 6*l.* which he received as a member of the Royal Naval Reserve:—Held, that there were concurrent contracts of service within Schedule I. 2 (b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that the applicant was entitled to bring the annual sum as well as his wages into account. "Raphael" Steamship v. Brandy, 80 L. J. K.B. 1067; [1911] A.C. 413; 105 L. T. 116; 55 S. J. 579; 27 T. L. R. 497—H.L. (E.)

"Benefit" Received from Employer—Hospital Charges Paid.]—Payment by employers of an account rendered to them for the maintenance of an injured workman in hospital is a benefit received by the workman within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, Sched. I. (3), which falls to be taken into account in fixing the amount of his compensation. Sorensen v. Gaff & Co., [1912] S. C. 1163; [1912] W.C. Rep. 342—Ct. of Sess.

"Suitable employment"—Risk of Future Incapacity—One-eyed Miner.]—A miner was struck by a chip of coal while working at the coal face and thereby lost the sight of one eye. His employers, after paying compensation for a time, ceased payment on the ground that he was able to resume his former occupation and to earn his former wage. The miner having applied to the Sheriff to have the compensation continued, the Sheriff dismissed the application, finding that the miner was able to resume his former occupation at the face and to earn his former wage, and that the risk, which was incidental to working at the face, of a similar accident again happening was not increased by the fact that he had lost the sight of an eye. On appeal, it was contended for the miner that the Sheriff had disregarded the relevant consideration that the loss of one eye, although not increasing the risk of a similar accident occurring, would render the results of such an accident more serious, as total blindness would follow; and accordingly that, the employment of a miner working at the face not being a "suitable employment" for him, he was still entitled to compensation:—Held (dub. Lord Johnston), that the determination of the Sheriff, in dismissing the application, was right. Law v. Baird, [1914] S. C. 423; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 140—Ct. of Sess.

Observed that the question whether an employment was suitable arose only under Schedule I. (3) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, when partial incapacity existed, and therefore did not arise in this case as the workman's incapacity had ceased. Ib.

Per The Lord President and Lord Guthrie (Lord Johnston dissenting): The circumstance that the results of a future accident might be more serious to a workman who had lost one eye than to a workman who had not, could not relevantly be taken into consideration in determining what was "suitable" employment. Ib.

Loss of Eye — Recovery of Wage-earning Capacity—Question of Fact.]—The appellant, who was a miner in the employment of the respondents, met with an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment in the year 1912 and lost the sight of an eye, and the respondents paid him compensation. In 1913, by consent, the question of the appellant's fitness for employment was referred to a referee, who reported that he had recovered from his incapacity and was again fit for his work as a miner. Since that time the respondents were willing to employ him as a miner, and they in fact employed him at labouring work on the surface. On the application of the respondents the arbitrator ended the compensation on the ground that the appellant had not proved that he had not recovered his wage-earning capacity :—Held, that the question was one of fact for the arbitrator. Jones v. Anderson, 59 S. J. 159; 31 T. L. R. 76—H.L. (Sc.)

Accident Making Loss of Eye Apparent—Loss of Earning Capacity—Inability to Obtain Employment.]—The theory upon which compensation for injury by accident under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, proceeds is that of compensation to the worker as a wage earner, and a disfigurement which impairs or destroys the injured workman's capacity to get work is an element to be taken into consideration in the assessment of compensation. Ball v. Hunt, 81 L. J. K.B. 782; [1912] A.C. 496; [1912] W.C. Rep. 261; 106 L. T. 911; 56 S. J. 550; 28 T. L. R. 428—H.L. (E.)

The appellant, who was an edge-tool moulder, many years back met with an accident in the course of his employment whereby he lost the sight of one eye, but the loss was not apparent and he was able to obtain employment at usual wages as if his sight had been normal. In September, 1910, while in the service of the respondents, he met with a second accident which necessitated the removal of the blind eye and rendered the loss apparent, as the result of which, though now completely recovered, he was unable, although his power to do work remained as before, to obtain further employment in his trade :—Held, that the appellant's inability to obtain employment by reason of his disfigurement by the removal of his blind eye was an element to be taken into consideration in assessing compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Ib.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (80 L. J. K.B. 655; [1911] 1 K.B. 1048) reversed. Ib.

Goods Porter—Light Work Found by Employers after Accident—Mess-room Attendant—Same Rate of Wages as before—Interruption of Work for Four Days by Reason of Strike.]—A goods porter, employed by a railway company at 23*s.* 6*d.* a week, in November, 1911, was totally incapacitated by accident in the course of his employment. In December, 1912, having partially recovered, he resumed work, and the company having paid him half wages in the interval, found him light work as a mess-room attendant at the same rate of wages that he was receiving before the accident, and he was so employed at the present time. In November and December, 1913, on four days, which were not consecutive days, the company were unable to find work for him and other members of their staff, in consequence of a labour strike in Dublin. He claimed 7*s.* 10*d.* as compensation for the four days :—Held, that the claim could not be supported; that it was inconsistent with the provisions of Schedule I. clauses 1 (b) and 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906; that it was immaterial that the light work was obtained from the employers and not from a stranger, and that, as the relation of employers and workman had continued ever since December, 1913, with only the loss of four days, the interruption, if it could fairly be so called, was of no moment. Woodhouse v. Midland Railway, 83 L. J. K.B. 1810; [1914] 3 K.B. 1034; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 595; 111 L. T. 1084; 30 T. L. R. 653—C.A.

Partial Incapacity—General Fall in Wages since Accident—Method of Assessing Compensation — Extraneous Circumstances.] — In awarding compensation to a workman for partial incapacity under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, Sched. I. clause 3, the Court will have regard to extraneous circumstances not personal to the workman. Bevan v. Energlyn Colliery Co., 81 L. J. K.B. 172; [1912] 1 K.B. 63; [1912] W.C. Rep. 126; 105 L. T. 654; 28 T. L. R. 27—C.A.

In 1907 a collier sustained injuries through an accident, and was paid compensation by his employers until February, 1911. In August, 1911, he commenced proceedings to recover compensation for partial incapacity. Before the accident his average weekly earnings were 2*l.* 19*s.* 1*d.*, but now he was only earning 1*l.* 12*s.* 7*d.* a week. There was evidence, however, that apart from any accident he would not have been able to earn as much as he was doing in 1907, because colliers' earnings had fallen universally owing to the passing of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1908, which reduced the working hours of miners to eight hours a day :—Held, that the fall in wages was a circumstance to which the Court must have regard in awarding compensation for partial incapacity under Schedule I. clause 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. James v. Ocean Coal Co. (73 L. J. K.B. 915; [1904] 2 K.B. 213) distinguished. Ib.

"Average weekly earnings"—Computation — Mathematical Accuracy.] — Although the Court does not require mathematical accuracy in calculating the average weekly earnings of a workman who has been injured by "accident arising out of and in the course of" his employment, within the meaning of section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, a small mistake in the ascertained amount not being sufficient to upset an award, yet where there is a substantial mistake the case must go back to the County Court Judge to assess the compensation to which the workman is entitled. James v. Mordey, Carney & Co., [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 670; 109 L. T. 377—C.A. And see Roper v. Freke, ante, col. 1947.

—— Amount Earned by "a person in the same grade" — Two Grades of Casual Labourers — Preferential Right of Employment.] — A man engaged as "extra casual labourer" met with an accident in his employment. He had only been engaged for a day when he met with the accident, so that his "average weekly earnings" had to be computed by taking the average amount earned by "a person in the same grade" as himself within Schedule I. (2) (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The man's employers had two classes of casual labourers—"B" ticket men with preferential rights of employment and "extra casual labourers." "B" ticket men got on the average four days' work a week, and "extra casual labourers" three days' work a week. Both classes received the same rate of pay and did the same work :—Held (Cozens-Hardy, M.R., dissenting), that the preference made a difference of grade between the "B" ticket men and the "extra casual labourers," and that in computing the man's average weekly earnings under Schedule I. (2) (a) regard must be had to the average amount earned by the latter grade, and not to that earned by the former grade. Barnett v. Port of London Authority (No. 1), 82 L. J. K.B. 353; [1913] 2 K.B. 115; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 250; 108 L. T. 277; 57 S. J. 282; 29 T. L. R. 252—C.A.

The provision in Schedule I. clause 2 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, that for the purpose of assessing compensation in respect of an accident to a workman "average weekly earnings shall be computed in such manner as is best calculated to give the rate per week at which the workman was being remunerated," means that they are to be computed in the manner best calculated to give the rate of his remuneration under the employer for whom he was working when the accident happened. A casual labourer who is employed casually by two or more different employers is not employed under concurrent contracts of service within the meaning of Schedule I. clause 2 (b) of the Act. A workman who was employed by the respondents as a casual corn porter met with an accident in the course of his employment. He had been employed by them casually during the three years preceding the accident, and during the year preceding the accident he had also been employed by a shipping firm at such a high rate of pay that his combined earnings for the year averaged over 2*l.* 5*s.* a week. The average earnings of a corn porter in the employment of the respondents was 30*s.* a week :—Held, that the workman's average weekly earnings must be computed by regard to the average weekly earnings of a workman in the same grade under the same employer, but that regard must also be had to the man's personal qualification as shewn by his high wages with the shipping company. In any case, however, the average weekly earnings could not be computed at more than the maximum sum earned by a man in the same grade under the same employer. Cue v. Port of London Authority, 83 L. J. K.B. 1445; [1914] 3 K.B. 892; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 481; 111 L. T. 736—C.A.

—— Grade of Employment — Change of Grade.]—A girl in a rope and sailcloth factory, employed at a weekly wage of 7*s.* 6*d.* to work a drawing machine dealing with hemp which was afterwards spun into rope, was promoted to work, at a weekly wage of 8*s.*, a drawing machine dealing with tow, a finer material which was afterwards woven into sailcloth. Five weeks after the change she was accidentally injured :—Held, that the change was a change in the "grade" of her employment within the meaning of Schedule I. (2) (c) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that compensation was to be calculated on the basis of her average weekly earnings for these five weeks. Dalgleish v. Edinburgh Roperies and Sailcloth Co., [1913] S. C. 1007—Ct. of Sess.

—— Workman Employed in Different Grades of Employment.]—A workman, a boilermaker by trade, who had been employed for four weeks as a boilermaker at a boilermaker's wage, and for fifteen weeks as a labourer at a labourer's wage, in the service of the same employer, was injured while working as a labourer :—Held, that in calculating his average weekly earnings for purposes of compensation, the wages he had earned as a boilermaker did not fall to be included. Babcock & Wilcox v. Young, [1911] S. C. 406—Ct. of Sess.

A workman was employed as a casual labourer for five weeks, when he met with an accident in the course of that employment. Occasionally during that time he had been employed to take the place of a grinder who was ill, for which he received higher remuneration, but he had not been employed as a grinder for fourteen days before the accident :—Held, that, in considering the amount of compensation to be awarded, the earnings in both capacities should be taken into account. Dobson v. British Oil and Cake Mills, [1912] W.C. Rep. 207; 106 L. T. 922—C.A.

—— Earnings of Same Grade—Personal Qualifications—Actual Earnings.]—A man engaged as a casual grain porter met with an accident while employed by a corporation. He was preferentially employed as an able and reliable man by some firms, but not by the corporation. He obtained an average weekly wage of 2*l.*, whereas the average weekly wage of casual grain porters was 25*s.* The County Court Judge found that there was no grade of preferred casual grain porters, and that the man was only entitled to 12*s.* 6*d.* a week compensation, half the average earnings of his grade of casual grain porters :—Held, that the County Court Judge ought to have had regard to the personal qualifications and actual earnings of the man as well as the average earnings of his grade, and that he was entitled to compensation at 1*l.* a week. Snell v. Bristol Corporation, 83 L. J. K.B. 353; [1914] 2 K.B. 291; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 100; 110 L. T. 563—C.A.

—— Power of Arbitrator in Awarding Amount.] — An arbitrator is not bound to award the full half of his average weekly earnings to a workman as compensation for total incapacity, although he cannot give more. Ib.

—— Capacity for Work Offered—Interference by Trade Union—Incapacity Caused by Accident—Machine Minder—Skilled Workman.]—A workman, who was originally a labourer earning 21*s.* a week, was promoted by his employers to mind a newly invented wire-drawing machine at 37*s.* 6*d.* a week. He was injured while working this machine, and lost two fingers. Full compensation was paid until he had recovered as far as possible. When he returned his employers gave him work as a labourer, which after a time he left. They were willing to give him work on the machine, and said he was fit for it. He also was willing and said he could do the work, but a trade union interposed and forbade men who had not been apprenticed to wire drawing—and this workman had not been apprenticed—to work a wire-drawing machine. There was no other evidence as to the amount the man could now earn in a suitable employment:—Held, that the man could not claim compensation based on his wages of 37*s.* 6*d.* a week, as his employers were prevented from giving him the machine work; that he was in a grade beyond that of an ordinary labourer, and that, as there was no evidence of partial incapacity resulting from the injury, a declaration of liability only should be made. Thompson v. Johnson & Nephew, Lim., 84 L. J. K.B. 158; [1914] 3 K.B. 694; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 333; 111 L. T. 734—C.A.

—— "Concurrent contracts of service"—Accident in One Employment—Provision that Workman to Devote Himself Exclusively to that Employer's Service.]—Where a workman is employed concurrently under two or more contracts of service, they need not be ejusdem generis in order to be "concurrent contracts of service" within the meaning of Schedule I. clause 2 (b) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Lloyd v. Midland Railway, 83 L. J. K.B. 330; [1914] 2 K.B. 53; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 105; 110 L. T. 513; 58 S. J. 249; 30 T. L. R. 247—C.A.

A workman was employed by a railway company as a platelayer, his hours of work being from 6 A.M. to 5.30 P.M. on weekdays, except Saturdays, when he finished work at 12 noon. He also worked of an evening as checktaker at a theatre under a contract of service. When the workman was first taken into the railway company's employment, he was handed a book entitled "Rules and Regulations for the Guidance of Officers and Men" in this company's employment. Rule 1 provided that "persons employed by the company must devote themselves exclusively to the company's service." The workman, having met with an accident while working for the railway company, made a claim for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906:—Held, that rule 1, on its true construction, only meant that the workman was to devote himself exclusively to the company's service during the actual hours of his employment by them, and that, notwithstanding that rule, the workman's compensation must be computed on the footing that his "average weekly earnings" were the combined earnings in his two concurrent employments in accordance with Schedule I. clause 2 (b) of the Act of 1906. Ib.

—— "Grade"—Temporary Employment.]—A man who was ordinarily employed as a "hobbler" was drowned while temporarily acting as mate of a ship, the proper mate being absent through illness:—Held, that the man had not met his death while holding the "grade" of a mate within the meaning of that term in Schedule I. clause 2 (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Jury v. Atlanta s.s. (Owners), 81 L. J. K.B. 1182; [1912] 3 K.B. 366; [1912] W.C. Rep. 389; 107 L. T. 366; 56 S. J. 703; 28 T. L. R. 562—C.A.

—— "Grade"—Permanent Employment as Carter—Temporary Employment as Teamsman.]—A workman was employed for a few weeks as a casual carter, and subsequently, but only temporarily, as a casual teamster, at a higher rate of wages. Having met with his death by an accident arising out of and in the course of this latter form of employment, and his dependants having claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906,—Held, that, under the special circumstances of the case, the temporary employment as teamster did not constitute a new and distinct "grade" of employment within the meaning of Schedule I. clause 2 (a) of the statute; and that the arbitrator accordingly was justified in adding together his wages in the two different kinds of employment in order to form a basis on which to arrive at his "average weekly earnings." Dobson v. British Oil and Cake Mills ([1912] W.C. Rep. 207) followed. Edge v. Gorton, 81 L. J. K.B. 1185; [1912] 3 K.B. 360; [1912] W.C. Rep. 392; 107 L. T. 341; 56 S. J. 719; 28 T. L. R. 566—C.A.

—— Absence During Illness.]—A workman, who met with a fatal accident in the course of his employment, had been in his employment from the beginning of October, 1910, to the date of his death on May 20, 1912, and his total earnings during that period amounted to 111*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* On proceedings taken by the workman's widow to obtain compensation, the employers paid into Court 202*l.* 9*s.* 6*d.*, being a sum equal to 150 times the average weekly earnings of the workman, the weekly earnings being calculated on the division of 111*l.* 12*s.* 3*d.* by eighty-six, the number of weeks worked. It appeared that during the eighteen months of his employment the workman was absent during eight days by illness, and that there were two broken weeks at the beginning and end of the employment. The County Court Judge adopted the employers' contention as to the calculation of the sum payable and awarded the amount paid into Court:—Held, that the award was right; that although the broken days at the beginning of the employment ought strictly to be added to the days in the broken week at the end, the County Court Judge was not bound in view of the length of the employment to go into this with microscopical accuracy; and that in the circumstances he was justified in disregarding the number of days during which the workman was absent through illness. Turner v. Port of London Authority. [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 123; 29 T. L. R. 204—C.A.

—— Days Lost through Shortage of Work—Method of Computation.]—In calculating the average weekly earnings of a workman for the purpose of awarding compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the Court must not disregard days or parts of days during the twelve months preceding the accident in which there was a shortage of work so that the employer was unable to find the workman any work to do. White v. Wiseman, 81 L. J. K.B. 1195; 3 K.B. 352; [1912] W.C. Rep. 403; 107 L. T. 277; 56 S. J. 703; 28 T. L. R. 542—C.A.

—— Absence from Work Due to Trade Fluctuations—Trade during Period of War—

Absence not Due to "unavoidable cause."]—In computing "average weekly earnings" under Schedule I. of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, absence from work due to trade fluctuations during a period of war, but arising independently of the war, is not to be excluded as absence due to "unavoidable cause" within Schedule I. clause 2 (c) of the Act. Per Warrington, L.J.: Even if the absence from work were due to fluctuations of trade caused by war, it ought not to be excluded, as such fluctuations would not, during a period of war, be abnormal incidents of the employment. Griffiths v. Gilbertson & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1312; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 359; 113 L. T. 628—C.A.

—— Employment under Abnormal Circumstances.]—A workman was taken on during a dock strike as an extra dock labourer and was incapacitated, after working for twelve days, by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. He was paid at the ordinary rate per hour of a casual dock labourer, but was able to earn more than an extra casual dock labourer would in ordinary times because there was a shortage of workmen and the employment was continuous. The arbitrator found that the circumstances were entirely abnormal, that there was no grade to which he could find that the workman belonged, and that the workman would have earned during the strike period at least as much per week as he earned during the first week. He therefore computed the man's average weekly earnings at that amount and awarded compensation on that basis:—Held, that the arbitrator had not misdirected himself, and was justified in computing the man's average weekly earnings in that way. Barnett v. Port of London Authority (No. 1), 82 L. J. K.B. 353; [1913] 2 K.B. 115; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 250; 108 L. T. 277; 57 S. J. 282; 29 T. L. R. 252—C.A.

—— Aliquot Share of Net Earnings of Gang.]—A workman employed by a company worked in a gang. The gang was paid a certain rate per ton of stone raised, the powder necessary to raise it being supplied to the gang by the company at cost price. The head of the gang received the net sum due after the cost of the powder had been deducted, and distributed it among the members of the gang according to the number of hours each had worked and not according to the amount of stone raised or powder used by each. The average weekly sum actually received by the workman was 1*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* The average cost per man per week of the powder was 3*s.*:—Held, that the workman's average weekly earnings, computed on the footing of Schedule I. (2) (a) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, were his aliquot share of the net earnings of the gang—namely, 1*l.* 6*s.* 2*d.* Shipp v. Frodingham Iron and Steel Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 273; [1913] 1 K.B. 577; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 230; 108 L. T. 55; 57 S. J. 264; 29 T. L. R. 215—C.A.

Whether a sum deducted from a definite wage to an individual workman would be considered a sum paid to cover any special expense within Schedule I. (2) (d), quære. Ib.

—— Temporary Employment — Intention of Leaving England.]—A carpenter who had been working in Canada came to England in November intending to return to Canada in April. He worked temporarily for employers whom he had informed of his intention to leave this country, and having met with an accident in February, after working for nine weeks, he claimed compensation. The arbitrator assessed compensation under Schedule I. clause 1 (b) of the Act at 50 per cent. of one-ninth part of the aggregate amount actually earned by the workman during the nine weeks. He refused to take into consideration that he might have earned more in the summer by working longer hours at the same employment, as he was intending to leave for Canada in April, and he considered it not "impracticable," under Schedule I. clause 2 (b), at the date of the accident to compute the rate of remuneration of the workman in this way:—Held, that the employment being admittedly of a temporary character, the arbitrator had made no error of law in so computing the "average weekly earnings," and he was not bound to give the workman the benefit of the higher wages he might have earned when the days were longer if he had continued in the same employment. Godden v. Cowlin, 82 L. J. K.B. 509; [1913] 1 K.B. 590; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 330; 108 L. T. 166; 57 S. J. 282; 29 T. L. R. 255—C.A.

Employment by Same Employer for Three Years Next Preceding Injury—Absence from Work During Period—Period of Employment —"Employment by the same employer."]—Where the relationship of master and servant has existed continuously for a period of three years next preceding the death of a workman by accident in his employment, the case falls within the First Part of Schedule I. clause 1 (a) (i) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and the definition of the words "employment by the same employer" in Schedule I. clause 2 (c) is not to be applied to those words in the First Part of Schedule I. clause 1 (a) (i), so that neither absence from work due to "illness or other unavoidable cause" nor change of grade is to be regarded, and the compensation to be awarded to the deceased's total dependants is the amount of wages actually earned by him during that period. Semble, a very prolonged absence might break the continuity of the employment. Greenwood v. Nall & Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1356; [1915] 3 K.B. 97; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 346; 113 L. T. 612; 59 S. J. 577; 31 T. L. R. 476—C.A.

A workman was, for a period of exactly three years next preceding his death by accident in his employment, employed only by the respondent employers in one grade. During this period he was absent from work for 163 working days; forty-five not accounted for, thirty-five for sickness, and eighty-three for injury, the longest period of absence being six weeks:—Held, that the compensation payable to his dependant was the amount of the sum actually earned by the deceased during the period of three years. Ib.

Power of County Court Judge to Amend Claims.]—Where a claim has been made on the basis of partial dependency, and no application to amend has been made, the County Court Judge has no power to make an award, on the basis of total dependency, for a larger sum than that claimed. Lloyd v. Powell Duffryn Steam Coal Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1054; [1914] A.C. 733; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 450; 111 L. T. 338; 58 S. J. 514; 30 T. L. R. 456—H.L. (E.)

10. Suspensory Award.

Possibility of Supervening Incapacity.]—A workman who had suffered injuries which necessitated the amputation of portions of three fingers of the right hand, after recovering from the operation obtained work at higher wages in the district where he had been employed and where, owing to the construction of public works, there was a large demand for labour. In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator, while finding that the workmen's injuries were permanent, found also that he was no longer incapacitated owing to the accident from earning his former wages, and ended the compensation that was being paid to him. In an appeal at the instance of the workman, the Court remitted the Case to the arbitrator to consider and decide whether the ending of the payment of compensation should be permanent or temporary. Dempsey v. Caldwell & Co., [1914] S. C. 28—Ct. of Sess.

Per The Lord President (dub. Lord Johnston): A suspensory order was the proper judgment for the arbitrator to pronounce, looking to the possible adverse effect of a change in the condition of the labour market on the future wage-earning capacity of a permanently damaged person. Ib.

Rosie v. Mackay ([1910] S. C. 714) and Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway (81 L. J. K.B. 541; [1912] A.C. 242) considered, and the former case held overruled by the latter. Ib.

Rupture—Declaration of Liability—Suspensory Award.] — On September 6, 1913, the applicant suffered personal injury—namely, a rupture—by "accident arising out of and in the course of" his employment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The rupture did not permanently disable him, but it occasioned a certain amount of pain. On informing the manager of his employers of the accident an order was given to him to go to the infirmary, where he was told to wear a truss, which he obtained there. The injury was of a nature which even immediately did not interfere with his work. He was only away one or two days, and the truss which was given him at the infirmary he thought so little of that he wore it only off and on, since which his wife had made him an appliance that, according to the medical evidence, was practically useless. For eighteen months the applicant continued to work for the greater part of the time with the same employers, doing the same work, without any ill consequences arising from it. But there came a time when his employers did not want him any more, and thereupon he commenced proceedings to obtain compensation. It was found by the learned County Court Judge that it was not proved that incapacity for work had resulted from the injury to the applicant as between the date of the accident and February 13, 1915, when he finally left the respondent's employment; and that the applicant had not been incapacitated for work since the last-mentioned date inasmuch as there was nothing to shew that he was unable to do suitable work of the same class as that which he had done for the respondents almost continuously since the accident. In these circumstances His Honour declined to make a declaration of liability, as he was of opinion that there was no reasonable ground for anticipating that with reasonable care on the part of the applicant he would suffer any incapacity in the future from the accident. The applicant appealed:—Held (dissentiente Lord Cozens-Hardy, M.R.), that the case came within the decisions in "Tynron" (Owners) v. Morgan (78 L. J. K.B. 857; [1909] 2 K.B. 66) and Griga v. "Harelda" (Owners), (3 B.W.C.C. 116); and that therefore the applicant was entitled to a declaration of liability or a nominal award. Chapman v. Sage & Co., [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 472; 113 L. T. 623—C.A.

Wage-earning Capacity—"Suitable employment."]—A workman met with an accident arising out and in the course of his employment which caused the loss of one eye. Subsequently he recovered sufficiently to be physically able to do his old work, and his employers offered to take him on again at his work at his old wages:—Held, that this was not sufficient to shew that all incapacity from the accident had ceased. The test was whether the man's wage-earning capacity had been diminished, and in this connection it was the duty of the Court to consider whether the old work was "suitable employment" for him. Where by their answer a workman's employers have formally submitted to a suspensory award in favour of the workman, the arbitrator is not entitled to withhold it from the workman and make an unqualified award in favour of the employers. Jackson v. Hunslet Engine Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 1361; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 389; 113 L. T. 630—C.A.

Unreasonable Refusal to Submit to Medical Treatment.]—A collier met with an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and was paid compensation by his employers under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for over a year. They then stopped paying it, and he thereupon commenced proceedings for compensation; but the employers denied liability on the ground that, if the incapacity still continued, it was owing to the man's unreasonable refusal to undergo medical treatment provided and paid for by them. A few months before the employers stopped the payments the man had been advised to undergo the Weir-Mitchell treatment for neurasthenia. The employers agreed to provide it, and the man's solicitors, in writing to say that he agreed to submit himself to it, suggested that as he was also advised to have massage for some injury to his back this should be given him at the same time. The employers agreed to this, and the man entered a home for treatment, but on an attempt being made to massage him he left the home. The medical evidence was apparently all in favour of massage, but no note of the evidence was taken by the County Court Judge, who dismissed the application on the ground that the continued incapacity was due to the man's unreasonable refusal to submit to massage :—Held, on the correspondence and admitted facts, that there was evidence to support the Judge's decision, but that, as it was not certain that massage would cure the incapacity, there ought to be a suspensory award of 1*d.* a week. Smith v. Davis & Sons, Lim., 84 L. J. K.B. 1125; [1915] A.C. 528; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 299; 113 L. T. 250; 59 S. J. 397; 31 T. L. R. 356—H.L. (E.)

Refusal of Compensation — No Suspensory Award—Incapacity Continued.]—On a workman's application for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, a suspensory award may be made on an original application for compensation as well as on an application to review under Schedule I. clause 16 of the Act. If the workman's application is dismissed without any such suspensory award being made the matter is res judicata, and no subsequent application for compensation can be entertained in respect of the same accident, although the workman's capacity for work may have altered in the meantime. Nicholson v. Piper (76 L. J. K.B. 856; [1907] A.C. 215) followed. Green v. Cammell, Laird & Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 1230; [1913] 3 K.B. 665; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 707; 109 L. T. 202; 29 T. L. R. 703—C.A.

Per Kennedy, L.J. : In cases of a permanent physical injury the arbitrator, if satisfied that the workman's incapacity for work has for the time ceased, ought as a general rule—inasmuch as in such a case an incapacity for work due to the injury may supervene at a later time—not to make an award simply terminating the weekly payment, but should make an order keeping alive the employer's liability. Ib.

11. Form and Costs of Award.

Judge's Decision—Duty to State Grounds.]—It is the duty of a County Court Judge, when sitting as an arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to state the grounds of his decision. Marshall v. Price, Wills & Reeves, 30 T. L. R. 248—C.A.

Form of Award.]—The use of Form 24 or of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1907 (made in pursuance of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906), is intra vires an arbitrator under the statute when making an award for compensation to an injured workman. Although circumstances might conceivably arise in which it might be necessary to modify this form, or to depart from it altogether, yet in the vast majority of cases this is the proper form to be used. Higgins v. Poulson, 81 L. J. K.B. 690; [1912] 2 K.B. 292; [1912] W.C. Rep. 244; 106 L. T. 518; 28 T. L. R. 323—C.A.

Oral Judgment — Alteration in Subsequent Formal Award — Subsequent Correction of Formal Award — Jurisdiction.] — Where the award of a County Court Judge, sitting as an arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, has been signed, sealed, and filed in accordance with rule 28 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1907, it is not competent for him afterwards to alter it, except as provided for in sub-rule 2 of rule 28. Mowlem & Co. v. Dunne, 81 L. J. K.B. 777; [1912] 2 K.B. 136; [1912] W.C. Rep. 298; 106 L. T. 611—C.A.

Per Cozens-Hardy, M.R. : It is competent for the County Court Judge, however, to alter an award subsequently to his making it verbally in Court, but prior to its being signed, sealed, and filed in accordance with rule 28. Ib.

Costs of Obtaining Award — Bankruptcy — Preferential Payment.]—The costs of obtaining an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, are not payable in priority to all other debts in a bankruptcy. Jinks, In re ; Trustee, ex parte, 112 L. T. 88; 58 S. J. 741—D.

Employer Insured against Liability in Respect of Workman—Bankruptcy—Rights of Workman.] — Section 5, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, enacts that "Where any employer has entered into a contract with any insurers in respect of any liability under this Act to any workman, then, in the event of the employer becoming bankrupt, . . . the rights of the employer against the insurers as respects that liability shall, . . . be transferred to and vest in the workman, and upon any such transfer the insurers shall have the same rights and remedies and be subject to the same liabilities as if they were the employer, so however that the insurers shall not be under any greater liability to the workman than they would have been under to the employer." The effect of this section is to give to the workman a right to enforce the policy against the insurance company, in substitution for the right which he possessed before the Act of proving against the estate of a bankrupt employer. The section does not give the workman merely an additional right or, in other words, an option either to prove against the bankrupt employer's estate or to claim against the insurance company. Craig v. Royal Insurance Co., 84 L. J. K.B. 333; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 139; 112 L. T. 291; [1915] H. B. R. 57—Atkin, J.

—— Employer and Insurer Insolvent—Workman's Right of Proof.]—A workman was receiving compensation from his employer on account of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. The employer company was insured against workmen's compensation claims with an insurance company. The employer company became insolvent, and shortly afterwards the insurance company also became insolvent. It being unlikely that the insurance company would pay any dividend at all, the workman sought to prove for his whole claim in the liquidation of the employer company, and as to 100*l.* thereof as a preferential payment:—Held, that there was no right to preferential payment, and that the workman's right of proof in the liquidation of the employer company was impliedly taken away by section 5, sub-sections 1 and 2 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and that his only remedy was proof against the insurance company notwithstanding their insolvency. Pethick, Dix & Co., In re; Burrows v. The Company, 84 L. J. Ch. 285; [1915] 1 Ch. 26; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 5; 112 L. T. 212; [1915] H. B. R. 59; 59 S. J. 74—Neville, J.

Costs of Award — Whether a Preferential Debt.]—See Jinks, In re; Trustee, ex parte, ante, col. 2004.

Winding-up of Company—Insurance—Liability of Insurers.]—A colliery company were members of the respondent company, and as such members were entitled to an indemnity against all proceedings, costs, damages, claims, and demands in respect of compensation resulting from any accident to their workmen. By the articles of association, "Whenever a member's protection has been determined . . . he shall not be entitled to any indemnity in respect of any accident." The colliery company made default in payment of a call, and the respondent company removed their name from the list of protected mines and works. The colliery company was afterwards wound up. The respondent company had become liable to pay an indemnity to the colliery company in respect of an accident to the appellant, one of their workmen, which occurred while the colliery company were still members of the respondent company:—Held, that the clause in the articles of association referred to accidents happening after the protection had been determined, not to accidents which had happened while it was existing, and that on the winding up of the colliery company the respondent company were liable to pay compensation to the appellant under section 5 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Judgment of the Court of Appeal ([1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 1) reversed. Daff v. Midland Colliery Owners' Mutual Indemnity Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 1340; 109 L. T. 418; 20 Manson, 363; 57 S. J. 773; 29 T. L. R. 730—H.L. (E.)

Winding-up Proceedings Commenced — Insurance Policy—Arbitration Clause—Dispute—Subrogation—Award under Policy—Condition Precedent to Right of Action.] — A girl was employed by a company, and in the course of her employment met with a serious accident. The company did not dispute their liability, and paid compensation until winding-up proceedings were commenced. They had a policy of insurance which contained a clause that any dispute between the insured and the insurers should be referred to arbitration under the Arbitration Act, 1889, and that an award in favour of the insured should be a condition precedent to any right of action against the insurers. The girl applied to the County Court under section 5, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for an order that the insurers should continue the payment of compensation. The insurers denied liability on the ground that the policy had become invalid through a breach of its conditions by the employers:—Held (affirming the County Court Judge, who decided that there was a dispute between the parties, and that in the circumstances he had at present no jurisdiction in the matter), that section 5, sub-section 1 of the Act of 1906 merely enabled the applicant, by way of subrogation, to stand in the position of the employers, and that, consequently, until there had been a submission to arbitration under the Arbitration Act, 1889, and an award, as provided by the policy, the applicant was not entitled to claim any payment from the insurers. King v. Phœnix Assurance Co., 80 L. J. K.B. 44; [1910] 2 K.B. 666; 103 L. T. 53—C.A.

—— Commuted Sum—Order for Payment out of Assets—Receiver and Liquidator—Preferential Payment.]—On an application under section 5 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the County Court Judge ordered the liquidator of a company in voluntary liquidation to pay to the applicant the commuted sum of 100*l.* in lieu of a weekly payment ordered to be paid under a former award:—Held, that any question relating to the preferential payment of this sum must be decided in the winding-up, and was not the subject of appeal under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Homer v. Gough, 81 L. J. K.B. 261; [1912] 2 K.B. 303; [1912] W.C. Rep. 30; 105 L. T. 732—C.A.

—— Appeal — Jurisdiction.] — Semble, that under section 5, sub-section 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the County Court Judge's jurisdiction was limited to assessing the lump sum and that he had no jurisdiction to order payment; but as this objection was not taken before the County Court Judge the Court of Appeal could not entertain it. Ib.

13. Claims Under and Independently of Act.

"Proceedings independently of this Act"—Receipt Referring to Employers' Liability Act, 1880—Subsequent Death of Workman—Claim by Dependants.]—A workman who was injured by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment through the breaking of a chain was paid a sum of money by his employers and gave a receipt for the same as "being in full satisfaction and liquidation of all claims under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880, and the common law, in respect of injuries, whether now or hereafter to become manifest, arising directly or indirectly from an accident which occurred to" him on a specified date. Shortly afterwards the workman died, and his dependants claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906:—Held, that there had been no exercise by the workman of the option conferred upon him by section 1, sub-section 2 (b) of the Act; and that, therefore, his dependants were only barred from recovering under the Act to the extent of the benefits received by him. Howell v. Bradford, 104 L. T. 433—C.A.

Res Judicata—Finding in Arbitration—Subsequent Action at Common Law.]—In an application under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to end or diminish compensation payable to a minor workman, the arbitrator found that the workman had agreed to accept compensation at a certain rate, and reduced the amount. The workman having thereafter sued his employers at common law for damages for his injury and for setting aside the arbitrator's finding that he had agreed to accept compensation, the defenders, on the ground that the arbitrator's decision was final on questions of fact, pleaded that the matter was res judicata. The Court repelled the plea. M'Feetridge v. Stewarts and Lloyds, [1913] S. C. 773—Ct. of Sess.

Action by Widow for Damages under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846—Verdict for Employers on Ground for Contributory Negligence — Action "for injury caused by any accident"—Assessment of Compensation by Judge.]—An action under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, is an action brought to recover damages "for injury caused by any accident" within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. Potter v. Welsh & Sons, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 1852; [1914] 3 K.B. 1020; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 607; 112 L. T. 7; 30 T. L. R. 644—C.A.

A workman whilst employed in moving a trolley through a doorway received a severe blow on the head and also a jagged wound on his tongue by reason of a tooth being forced through it. He did not consider the injury serious at the time. He mentioned it to his foreman, but no written notice of the accident was given, and he continued at work. Cancer of the tongue supervened, but his doctor did not inform him of the nature of the trouble. He remained at work until a week before his death, which took place in July, 1913, the accident having happened the previous January. His widow brought an action under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, against his employers, but the jury gave a verdict for the defendants on the ground of contributory negligence. The plaintiff then applied to Channell, J., before whom the action was tried, to assess compensation under section 1, sub-section 4 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. His Lordship did so, holding that the action was within sub-section 4 of section 1 of the Act, and that the deceased had acted reasonably in not giving notice of the accident to the employers. The Court of Appeal affirmed Channell, J., on the first point, but reversed him on the second point on the ground that, as the injury was neither latent nor trivial, no "reasonable cause" was shewn within section 2 of the Act for the failure to give notice of the accident, and that therefore the claim to compensation failed. Ib.

Webster v. Cohen ([1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 268; 29 T. L. R. 217) and Clapp v. Carter ([1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 80) applied. Ib.

Payment of Maximum Amount to Dependants of Deceased Workman—No Claim under Act by Widow—Subsequent Action by Widow under Fatal Accidents Act, 1846.]—A workman was killed by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. He left a widow and six children dependent on him. His employers admitted that they were liable to pay compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and paid into Court 300*l.*, the maximum amount for which they were liable under that Act, and that amount was invested on behalf of the six children. Before any step had been taken under the Act of 1906, a letter had been sent on behalf of the widow to the employer stating that she proposed to claim damages under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846; but she was afterwards added, though not at her own request, as a claimant in the proceedings under the Act of 1906. She was throughout cognisant of the proceedings under that Act, she approved of and concurred in the application for the investment of the 300*l.*, attended at the hearing thereof, and thereat renounced her rights in that sum in favour of her children, and the award was made with her consent. The widow subsequently sued the employers for damages under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, alleging that it was in consequence of their negligence that her husband was killed:—Held, that, by virtue of section 1, sub-section 2 (b) of the Act of 1906, the action was not maintainable, inasmuch as the employers, having with the knowledge and consent of the widow paid the maximum amount of compensation under that Act, were not liable to pay her compensation independently of that Act. Codling v. Mowlem & Co. (No. 1), 83 L. J. K.B. 1727; [1914] 3 K.B. 1055; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 579; 111 L. T. 1086; 58 S. J. 783; 30 T. L. R. 677—C.A.

Decision of Atkin, J. (83 L. J. K.B. 445; [1914] 2 K.B. 61; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 1), affirmed. Ib.

"Recovery" of Compensation from Employers — Acceptance of Compensation under Reservation of Claims against Third Parties—Competency of Action against Third Parties.]—An injured workman claimed compensation from his employers in respect of an accident. His right to compensation was admitted, and payments were made for which he granted receipts which stated that he had "elected to take compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act." They further bore to be granted "under reservation of my claims against third parties," and he agreed with his employers to repay the sums received from them if he recovered damages from the third parties whom he alleged to be responsible for the accident. In an action of damages by the workman against these third parties,—Held, that he had not "recovered" compensation in the sense of section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, so as to be barred from pursuing the action. Wright v. Lindsay, [1912] S. C. 189—Ct. of Sess.

—— Injury through Negligence of Third Person.]—The plaintiff, who was employed by a colliery company, occupied himself in his leisure time in the cultivation of a plot of land as a farmer. In the course of his work for the colliery company he was injured by accident owing to the negligence of the defendants. He was paid compensation by his employers under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, but he claimed to be entitled to recover from the defendants the loss he had sustained in his capacity of farmer:—Held, that, having received compensation, he was precluded by section 6 of the Act from maintaining an action for damages arising out of the same injury. Woodcock v. London and North-Western Railway, 82 L. J. K.B. 921; [1913] 3 K.B. 139; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 563; 109 L. T. 253; 29 T. L. R. 566—Rowlatt, J.

The word "injury" in section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, means physical injury or hurt, and is not a translation of the juristic term "injuria." Ib.

A workman employed by a colliery company as brakesman on a branch line of railway belonging to his employers, was incapacitated for work as the result of an accident and received compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for three years, until he died from his injuries. His father thereupon brought an action of damages in respect of his son's death, against a railway company, owing to whose fault, he averred, the accident had happened. The Court dismissed the action, holding that the pursuer's claim was excluded by section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, on account of his son having recovered compensation from his employers. Gray v. North British Railway, [1915] S. C. 211; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 460—Ct. of Sess.

14. Remitting Case to Arbitrator.

Refusal of Arbitrator to State Case.] — In proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator found that a workman's death resulted from injuries sustained by him owing to a fall from a ladder, and awarded compensation. A medical certificate which was produced stated the cause of death to have been appendicitis-peritonitis. The arbitrator refused to state a Case for the opinion of the Court on the question whether the death of the deceased "was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment," on the ground that the question was one of fact and not of law:—Held, that the proper question was "whether there was evidence upon which it could competently be found that the death of the workman was the result of an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment"; and case remitted to the arbitrator to state a Case on this question. Euman v. Dalziel & Co., [1912] S. C. 966; [1912] W.C. Rep. 328—Ct. of Sess.

Power to Remit Case to Arbitrator.] — A Court is entitled to remit a case to an arbitrator if it has been stated ambiguously or incompletely, in order to obtain further information, but it is not entitled to do so in order to obtain evidence which will enable the Court to substitute itself for the arbitrator. Lendrum v. Ayr Steam Shipping Co., 84 L. J. P.C. 1; [1915] A.C. 217; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 438; 111 L. T. 875; 58 S. J. 737; 30 T. L. R. 664—H.L. (Sc.)

15. Costs.

See also Vol. IX. 2256.

Costs Ordered to be Paid by Successful Applicant — Severable Issues.] — Where a County Court Judge, sitting as arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, has made an award in favour of a workman's claim for compensation, it is not competent for him to order the workman to pay the employer's costs of and incident to the arbitration; but he must exercise his discretion judicially as to the payment of costs. Evans v. Gwauncaegurwen Colliery Co., 106 L. T. 613; [1912] W.C. Rep. 215—C.A.

Where in applications under the Act there is more than one issue to be determined it is competent for the learned County Court Judge to treat such issues as severable, and to order the costs of an issue upon which a party has failed to be paid, or to be set off against the remainder of the costs. Ib.

Enquiry as to Adequacy of Sum Payable—Order for Successful Party to Pay Costs—No Misconduct Proved.]—Assuming that a County Court Judge has jurisdiction as to the costs of an enquiry, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, Sched. II. clause (9) (d), as to recording a memorandum of an agreement for redemption of a weekly payment, he cannot order a successful party against whom no misconduct is proved to pay the costs of the other party. Kierson v. Thompson & Sons, Lim., 82 L. J. K.B. 920; [1913] 1 K.B. 587; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 140; 108 L. T. 236; 57 S. J. 226; 29 T. L. R. 205—C.A.

Set-off of Costs—Validity of Award—Right to Contest — Receipt of Weekly Payment — Approbation and Reprobation.] — Where an award has been made under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for payment of a weekly sum as compensation to a workman, and the award contains an order for payment of certain costs by the workman with liberty to the employers to set off such costs at a certain rate per week against the weekly sum payable for compensation, the workman cannot, after receiving the weekly sum payable under the award, contest the jurisdiction of the arbitrator to order the costs to be set off and deducted from the weekly payments. The award is entire, and the workman cannot contend that part of it is good and part bad. Johnson v. Newton Fire Extinguisher Co., 82 L. J. K.B. 541; [1913] 2 K.B. 111; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 352; 108 L. T. 360—C.A.

Costs of Appeal—Costs of Arbitration—Set-off — Jurisdiction.] — The Court of Appeal cannot, after judgment has been given specifically dealing with costs, alter their judgment by ordering that the costs of the appeal shall be costs in an arbitration in the County Court under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, so as to enable the appeal costs to be set off against costs in the arbitration. Barnett v. Port of London Authority (No. 2), 82 L. J. K.B. 918; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 414; 108 L. T. 944; 57 S. J. 577—C.A.

Costs of Obtaining Award — Whether Preferential Debt.]—The costs of obtaining an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, are not payable in priority to all other debts in a bankruptcy. Jinks, In re; Trustee, ex parte, 112 L. T. 88; 58 S. J. 741—D.

16. Appeal.

See also Vol. IX. 2257.

Accident before Commencement of Act — Reference to Medical Referee—Appeal to House of Lords.]—No appeal lay to the House of Lords from the Court of Session in Scotland in a proceeding under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The Act of 1906 by Schedule II. section 17 (b), gave an appeal to the House of Lords in cases from Scotland under that Act, and by section 16, subsection 2, repealed the Act of 1897, but provided that that Act should "continue to apply to cases where the accident happened before the commencement of this Act, except to the extent to which this Act applies to those cases." Section 16, sub-section 1 of the Act of 1906 provided that that Act, "except so far as it relates to references to medical referees, and proceedings consequential thereon, shall not apply to any case where the accident happened before the commencement of this Act." In a case where an accident happened after the passing of the Act of 1906, but before it came into operation, and after it had come into operation the Sheriff directed a reference to a medical referee,—Held, that a subsequent appeal from the award of the Sheriff to the Court of Session was not a "proceeding consequential on" the report of the medical referee, so as to make the Act of 1906 apply to the case and give an appeal to the House of Lords from the decision of the Court of Session. Mackay v. Rosie, [1912] W.C. Rep. 41; 105 L. T. 682; 56 S. J. 87—H.L. (Sc.)

Review of County Court Decisions by Court of Appeal.]—The function of the Court of Appeal in reviewing the decisions of the County Court explained. Wilmerson v. Lynn and Hamburg Steamship Co., 82 L. Appeal from Order—Evidence on Commission.]—See Taylor v. Cripps, ante, col. 1975.

Order for Detention of Ship.]—An order made by a County Court Judge for the detention of a ship under section 11 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, is only in aid of an arbitration under the Act, and not part of it. An appeal from such an order, therefore, does not lie to the Appeal Court under the Act, but to the Divisional Court in the usual way, notwithstanding Schedule II. clause 4, the application of which is limited by section 1, sub-section 3 of the Act:—So held by Cozens-Hardy, M.R., and Fletcher Moulton, L.J. (dissentiente Farwell, L.J.). Panagotis v. "Pontiac" (Owners), 81 L. J. K.B. 286; [1912] 1 K.B. 74; [1912] W.C. Rep. 74; 105 L. T. 689; 12 Asp. M.C. 92; 56 S. J. 71; 28 T. L. R. 63—C.A.

Order on Reference from Registrar.]—When a County Court Judge makes an order upon a matter referred to him by a Registrar of the County Court on his refusal to record a memorandum of agreement under clause 9 (d) of Schedule II. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, an appeal from that order lies direct to the Court of Appeal under clause 4 of Schedule II., and not to the Divisional Court. Panagotis v. "Pontiac" (Owners) (81 L. J. K.B. 286; [1912] 1 K.B. 74; [1912] W.C. Rep. 74) distinguished. Bonney v. Hoyle & Sons, Lim., 83 L. J. K.B. 541; [1914] 2 K.B. 257; [1914] W.C. & I. Appeal by Workman against Part of Award —Acceptance by Workman of Payment under Award.]—A workman cannot appeal against any part of an award made under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, after he has accepted payment of compensation under it. Johnson v. Newton Fire Extinguisher Co. (82 L. J. K.B. 541; [1913] 2 K.B. 111; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 352) followed. Jones v. Winder, [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 37—C.A.

Quantum of Compensation.]—In claims for compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, it is for the County Court Judge to find the quantum of compensation to be awarded, and the Court of Appeal will not interfere with his award unless there has been misdirection or no proper exercise of his judicial discretion. Cheverton v. Oceanic Steam Navigation Co., [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 462; 29 T. L. R. 658—C.A.

VII. REVIEW AND REDEMPTION OF WEEKLY PAYMENTS.

See also Vol. IX. 2260.

1. Review.

a. Jurisdiction.

Recorded Memorandum—Review.]—When a memorandum has been recorded in terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the only method by which the employer can relieve himself of the liability imposed upon him by that memorandum is by an application for review. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co. v. Cairnduff, [1911] S. C. 647—Ct. of Sess.

Condition Precedent to Jurisdiction of Arbitrator.]—Where a workman is in receipt of a weekly payment by way of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, either under the award of an arbitrator or under a recorded agreement, it is not a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the arbitrator to review the weekly payment that a question should have arisen between the employer and workman before the application for a review was launched. Tyne Tees Shipping Co. v. Whilock, 82 L. J. K.B. 1091; [1913] 3 K.B. 642; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 579; 109 L. T. 84; 57 S. J. 716—C.A.

Award by Committee—Application to County Court to Review—Refusal to Hear Application —Appeal.]—An application was made to a County Court Judge to review an award made by a committee of employers and workmen under schedule 2, paragraph 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The Judge refused to hear the application on the grounnd that, the award having been made by a committee, he had no jurisdiction to review it:—Held, that the Judge had refused to entertain jurisdiction, and an appeal from his decision lay to the Divisional Court and not to the Court of Appeal. Howarth v. Samuelson, 104 L. T. 907—C.A.

Where an award of a weekly payment as compensation to a workman has been made by a committee representative of an employer and his workmen under the Second Schedule of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, a memorandum of which has been duly recorded in the County Court register, the workman is entitled, under clause 12 of the First Schedule, to have such award reviewed by the County Court Judge, provided that he has objected to the settlement of the matter by the committee by notice in writing sent to the other party before the committee meet to consider the matter, inasmuch as the review of such award is a new matter under the Act. Rex v. Templer; Howarth, Ex parte, 81 L. J. K.B. 805; [1912] 2 K.B. 444; [1912] W.C. Rep. 209; 106 L. T. 855; 56 S. J. 501; 28 T. L. R. 410—C.A.

Termination of Weekly Payment—Jurisdiction.]—In an application by employers for a review of weekly payments made under an agreement—whereby the employers agreed to pay the injured man a certain sum per week until the same should be ended, diminished, increased, or redeemed, in pursuance of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906—on the ground that the incapacity of the man for work had ceased, the County Court Judge made an order terminating the agreement and the weekly payments:—Held, that the order was technically erroneous because the Judge's jurisdiction was merely to say that the weekly payments should be "ended, diminished, increased, or redeemed," and not that the agreement should be terminated. Appeal dismissed by consent of parties, the appellant not desiring a remit on the point of form. Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway, 81 L. J. K.B. 541; [1912] A.C. 242; [1912] W.C. Rep. 95; 106 L. T. 354; 56 S. J. 323; 28 T. L. R. 290—H.L. (E.)

Medical Referee—Finality of Report.]—In an application for review of compensation paid to a miner who had received an injury resulting in the loss of an eye, a remit was made to a medical referee under paragraph 15 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The referee reported that the miner was "as fit as any other one-eyed man to resume his work under ground." The miner applied to have the question of his earning capacity tried, but the arbitrator refused the application and ended the compensation, on the ground that the referee's report was final, and that it meant that the miner's incapacity had ceased:—Held, that the report, though final as to the miner's physical condition, was not final as to his earning capacity, and the case was remitted to the arbitrator to hear evidence on this point. Arnott v. Fife Coal Co., [1911] S. C. 1029—Ct. of Sess.

Prospective Award—Termination of Weekly Payment at Future Date.]—It is not competent for a County Court Judge, sitting as arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to prophesy as to how long the incapacity for work of a workman, who has been injured by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, will last, and to anticipate what may happen in the future in the workman's condition. It is for the employer who desires to obtain on the ground of change of circumstances a review of the weekly payment which has been made payable to the injured workman to establish that such change has taken place, and the onus of so proving ought not to be shifted to the workman. Baker v. Jewell (79 L. J. K.B. 1092; [1910] 2 K.B. 673) applied. Walton v. South Kirkby, Featherstone, and Hemsworth Colliery, [1912] W.C. Rep. 383; 107 L. T. 337—C.A.

Cesser of Workman's Incapacity for Work—Ending Weekly Payment—Suspensory Award Unnecessary.]—Where a County Court Judge sitting as arbitrator under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, has found—there being ample evidence to justify his finding—that a workman who has been injured by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment and has been awarded compensation in respect thereof is no longer suffering from any incapacity resulting from the accident, that is a finding of fact with which the Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction to interfere; and the Judge has power to make an order ending the liability of the employers to make any further weekly payments under the original award, and is not bound to qualify his finding of fact by deciding that he ought to make a suspensory award. Wheeler, Ridley & Co. v. Dawson, [1912] W.C. Rep. 410; 107 L. T. 339—C.A.

b. Notice of Application for Review.

Service of Notice on "all persons interested" —Service on Personal Representative.]—The notice of an application for variation that it is necessary in such a case by rule 58, sub-rule 3 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1907, to serve upon "all persons interested" may be served upon the personal representative of a dead "dependant." Ivey v. Ivey, 81 L. J.

K.B. 819; [1912] 2 K.B. 118; [1912] W.C. Rep. 293; 106 L. T. 485—C.A.

Interest of Dependant not Part of his Personal Estate.]—The interest of a "dependant" in compensation awarded him under the Act does not pass to his personal representative on his death as part of his personal estate. Ib.

c. Grounds for Review.

Subsequent Change of Circumstances — Death of one "Dependant" — Variation of Award—Apportionment between other Dependants.]—The death of one of several "dependants" who are beneficiaries under an award under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, constitutes such a "variation of the circumstances" of the other "dependants" as will justify the Court, if it think proper, in altering the award under the provisions of clause 9 of Schedule I. of the statute. Ivey v. Ivey, ante, col. 2014.

Partial Incapacity—"Able to earn"—Workman Fit for Light Work.]—In an application at the instance of the employers of a workman to end or diminish the weekly payments of compensation due under a recorded memorandum of agreement, it was proved that about nine months after the accident (by which the workman, a labourer, had been wholly incapacitated and for which he had been receiving compensation at the rate of 12*s.* weekly) the employers offered him light work as a labourer, which he refused, though he was able for the work, and though it would have aided his recovery. Six months later, at the date of the application for review, the workman was proved to be "able for light work such as that of a messenger or light porter or other occupation, where he would not require to do the heavy work of a labourer," and the employers renewed their previous offer of employment. There was no evidence of how much the workman was capable of earning at such work as he was able to perform. The arbitrator having reduced the compensation to 8*s.* weekly, the workman appealed on the ground that there was no evidence to justify the award. The Court sustained the award. Proctor v. Robinson (80 L. J. K.B. 641; [1911] 1 K.B. 1004) and Cardiff Corporation v. Hall (80 L. J. K.B. 644; [1911] 1 K.B. 1009) considered. Carlin v. Stephen, [1911] S. C. 901—Ct. of Sess.

Per Lord Salvesen: Incapacity for the purposes of the Workmen's Compensation Act is primarily physical incapacity; it does not include inability to get employment which arises from something not personal to the workman. Ib.

One-armed Man—Ability to Do Light Work—No Attempt to Get Work—Particular Kind of Light Work—"Suitable employment"—Evidence—Local Knowledge of County Court Judge.]—In 1909 a labourer lost his right arm in his employment and was in receipt of 11*s.* a week compensation. In 1914 his employers applied to review. Shortly after his accident the man had applied for work once to his employers and was refused. Since then he had never attempted to get any work. He married three years after his accident, and there was evidence that he was a strong healthy young man capable of light work, but there was no evidence of any particular light work which he could do, or that suitable work was obtainable. The County Court Judge found that he was capable of doing some kinds of light work which were obtainable in the district in which he lived, and, as he had never attempted to obtain any work, reduced his compensation to 7*s.* 6*d.* a week. On appeal,—Held, that the facts proved, coupled with his local knowledge, justified the conclusion of the County Court Judge. Silcock v. Golightly, 84 L. J. K.B. 499; [1915] 1 K.B. 748; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 164; 112 L. T. 800—C.A.

Chance of Obtaining Light Work—Burden of Proof.]—A lime washer employed by a firm of builders, sustained injuries to his left foot and ankle by the breaking of a ladder, and received weekly payments as compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, on the footing of total incapacity. On an application by the employers for a review and reduction of the weekly payments, the County Court Judge found that the workman was suffering from bad flat foot as a result of the accident, which prevented him from following his ordinary employment or from doing the full work of an ordinary labourer or able-bodied man, but that he could do some light work if he could obtain it; and, there being no evidence that the man could obtain any such work, the Judge refused the application:—Held, that the burden was on the employers to establish what particular kind of light work the man was able to perform, and to prove either that they had offered him work of that kind or that there was a chance of his obtaining such work in the district if he applied for it; and that as they had failed to discharge the burden, the decision of the County Court Judge was right. Proctor v. Robinson, 80 L. J. K.B. 641; [1911] 1 K.B. 1004—C.A.

Where on an application by the employer to review the amount of weekly payments under an award the medical evidence finds that the workman is able to do any form of light work, it is not necessarily incumbent on the employer to shew that he has offered to provide such work or that it can be obtained in the neighbourhood, and it is competent to the arbitrator to reduce the amount, notwithstanding evidence by the workman that he has made some unsuccessful attempts to obtain such work:—So held (dissentiente Cozens-Hardy, M.R.). Clark v. Gas Light and Coke Co. (21 T. L. R. 184), Proctor & Sons v. Robinson (80 L. J. K.B. 641; [1911] 1 K.B. 1004), and Radcliffe v. Pacific Steam Navigation Co. (79 L. J. K.B. 429; [1910] 1 K.B. 685) discussed. Cardiff Corporation v. Hall, 80 L. J. K.B. 644; [1911] 1 K.B. 1009; 104 L. T. 467; 27 T. L. R. 339—C.A.

Partial Incapacity—Inability to Obtain Suitable Employment.]—An averment, in an application to review weekly payments which had been awarded as compensation for partial incapacity resulting from injury by accident, that the injured man, who had been dismissed from his employment, was unable to obtain suitable work within reasonable distance of the locality in which he had been employed,—Held, to be a relevant averment for enquiry. Macdonald (or Duris) v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co., 81 L. J. P.C. 188; [1912] A.C. 513; [1912] W.C. Rep. 302; 106 L. T. 905; 56 S. J. 550; 28 T. L. R. 431—H.L. (Sc.)

Per Lord Shaw: Boag v. Lochwood Collieries, Lim. ([1910] S. C. 51) was wrongly decided. Ib.

Light Work — Amount Workman Able to Earn—Discretion.]—A workman having sustained an injury received the full amount of compensation for a time, and then the employer offered him some light work which he refused to accept. The employer then applied for a review with the object of diminishing the weekly payments. It was proved that the man was able to do light work, but there was no evidence to shew the exact amount of wages he would be able to earn. The County Court Judge, acting partly on his own local knowledge, diminished the payments:—Held, that the employer having established a case for a review of the payments, the Judge had a discretion to diminish the amount without evidence of the actual sum the workman could earn. Roberts & Ruthven v. Hall, [1912] W.C. Rep. 269; 106 L. T. 769—C.A.

Offer of Light Work — Change of Circumstances.]—An unskilled dock labourer while working at the docks met with a serious accident which rendered him unable to do the full work that he did before. For a considerable time his employers paid compensation to the workman under an agreement with him. Subsequently they offered to take him on as a labourer and give him 8*s.* a day and to find him work for four or five days a week, but they warned him that he must not take that as a guarantee by them of perpetual employment. The employers then applied under section 16 of the First Schedule to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, for an order to review the weekly payment payable to the workman, on the ground that there was a change in the circumstances because of their offer of light work to him:—Held, that, having regard to the findings of the learned County Court Judge that the workman was fit for light work, and to the fact that the employers had offered the same to him, his Honour ought to have required evidence as to the probable amount of the wages which the workman could earn in order to ascertain what alteration should be made in the weekly payment (if any), and that therefore the case must go back to the learned Judge. Gray, Dawes & Co. v. Reed, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 127; 108 L. T. 53—C.A.

Partially Incapacitated Workman — Employer's Offer of Full Wages for Light Work —Refusal of Offer—Suspension of Compensation.]—An injured workman, who had been receiving compensation in pursuance of an agreement with his employer, recovered from his injuries sufficiently to be fit for light work. His employer thereupon offered him such work, and offered to pay him therefor the same wage as he had been earning before the accident. The workman refused this offer and presented for registration a memorandum of the agreement with his employer. The Sheriff refused to record the memorandum and ended the compensation:—Held, first, that the workman was barred from receiving compensation by his refusal of work, at full wages, suited to his capacity; and secondly, that the proper course for the Sheriff was to have recorded the memorandum, but, in respect of the employer's offer to pay the workman full wages, to have suspended compensation. Keevans v. Mundy, [1914] S. C. 525—Ct. of Sess.

—— Registration of Agreement — Review — Application by Employers for Termination of Weekly Payments — Burden of Proof.]—A collier in January, 1906, met with an accident which caused permanent injury to his right hand. His employers admitted liability, and by agreement paid him half-wages until August, 1908, when they found him light work in the colliery at wages somewhat higher than his old wages. He was first employed as a watchman on the surface, and afterwards as a signalman underground. He had to walk up a high hill to get to the pit, and in April, 1910, he gave up work because he was suffering from heart disease and could not walk uphill. In January, 1911, he obtained registration of the agreement for compensation. His employers thereupon applied under Schedule I. clause 12 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, for a review and termination of the weekly payments as from April, 1910. It was proved that the heart disease was not caused by the accident, and that the man's hand was useless except for some special kind of light work. The County Court Judge declined to terminate the agreement, but slightly reduced the weekly payments:—Held (affirming his decision), that the burden was on the employers to prove that the workman was not now under any incapacity by reason of the accident, and that that burden was not discharged by shewing that since the accident he was earning wages equal to or greater than his old wages. Cory v. Hughes, 80 L. J. K.B. 1307; [1911] 2 K.B. 738; 105 L. T. 274; 27 T. L. R. 498—C.A.

—— Mental Infirmity Supervening — Insufficient Medical Evidence to Prove Complete Recovery.]—A miner met with an accident, causing injury to his back and involving complete incapacity for nearly two years, at the end of which he was put on light work on the surface. After a time he asked to be allowed to try his old work again, but owing to symptoms of mental infirmity he was prohibited from descending the mine. The employers applied to terminate or diminish the compensation on the ground of recovery; but their medical evidence only dealt with the workman's mental, and not his physical condition, and the arbitrator was not satisfied with it, and dismissed the application without hearing the respondent's evidence:—Held, that he was justified in so doing. New Monckton Collieries v. Toone, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 425; 109 L. T. 374; 57 S. J. 753—C.A.

Incapacity at First Total, Then Partial—Reduction in Weekly Payments.]—A workman, at first totally incapacitated by an accident for the consequences of which the employers accepted liability, was paid by them half-wages for some months, when they sought to reduce the weekly rate of payment on the ground that total incapacity had ceased. The workman applied for arbitration, and was the only witness examined before the County Court Judge. He proved that he had tried to get employment and failed, and was admittedly not actually in any employment at the time of his application. He did not, however, give any estimate of what would be the value of his services if employed. No evidence of any kind was adduced by the employers. The County Court Judge awarded the applicant, until further order, a weekly sum which was equivalent to half the wages he was earning up to the time of the accident:—Held, that the County Court Judge was within his jurisdiction in making the award, and that it should be affirmed. Osborne v. Tralee and Dingle Railway, [1913] 2 Ir. R. 133; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 391—C.A.

Permanent Partial Incapacity—Infant—Offer of Suitable Work at Increased Wages—Termination of Award.]—A workgirl, seventeen years old, employed in a factory, lost one of the fingers of her left hand by accident while attending to a machine, and obtained an award of 3*s*. per week. Later the employers applied to terminate this award, and offered her suitable employment in their works, not involving any danger through machinery, at higher wages than her average wage before the accident. The County Court Judge refused to disturb the award:—Held, that as he had not purported to exercise any discretion under the proviso to Schedule I. (16), and as there was no evidence upon which he could have done so, the award ought to be terminated. Clarke, Nicholls & Coombes v. Knox, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 664; 57 S. J. 793—C.A.

Partial Recovery.]—When a workman who has been totally incapacitated, and has been receiving full compensation in terms of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, partially recovers and is earning a wage, a prima facie case arises for reducing his compensation; but it is open to him to prove circumstances which will warrant the arbitrator, in the exercise of his discretion, in refusing to diminish the compensation. The circumstance that the compensation he has been receiving together with the wage he is earning does not equal his average weekly earnings before the accident does not by itself justify a refusal to diminish. Pryde v. Moore & Co., [1913] S. C. 457; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 100—Ct. of Sess.

Industrial Disease—Recovery—Susceptibility to Recurrence.] — In an application by employers for the ending or diminishing of a weekly payment it was proved that the workman, after being duly certified as suffering from miner's nystagmus (an industrial disease), was awarded compensation, that he had "now completely recovered from this attack," but that he was susceptible to a recurrence of the disease. It was not proved whether the susceptibility was due to the original attack or to constitutional predisposition, the evidence being inconclusive:—Held, that as the workman had recovered from the original attack, and as he had failed to discharge the onus which lay on him of proving that his susceptibility to recurrence of the disease was due to that attack, the compensation fell to be ended. Darroll v. Glasgow Iron and Steel Co., [1913] S. C. 387; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 80—Ct. of Sess.

Incapacity for Work—Physical Capacity—Wage-earning Capacity.]—A miner who had lost one eye by an accident and who had been given work above ground and was receiving partial compensation, was examined by a medical referee, who reported that he was "as fit as any other one-eyed man to resume his work underground." The employers having applied to have the compensation ended, the arbitrator found that the miner had made various applications for work underground without success, and that he "is presently working on the surface and is only able on account of his injuries to earn 18*s*. a week," and dismissed the application. On appeal, the Court refused to disturb the arbitrator's finding. Arnott v. Fife Coal Co., [1912] S. C. 1262; [1912] W.C. Rep. 355—Ct. of Sess.

Unreasonable Refusal to Work—Medical Advice.]—A bricklayer met with an accident in the course of his employment and was in receipt of compensation for some years. In September, 1912, he was offered light work, but refused it, and his own doctor then certified that he was incapable of continuous work of any sort. Thereupon the employers commenced proceedings, asking, first, for the diminution and, secondly, for the termination of the compensation. Both applications came on for hearing together. There was a serious conflict of medical testimony, but the employers' medical evidence was that the workman had no physical disability which would prevent him doing light work or beginning work as a bricklayer, but was merely suffering from weakness of will and a fixed but erroneous idea that he was a chronic invalid. The County Court Judge terminated the compensation. He found that the workman had been offered light work which he had unreasonably refused; that an average man suffering as the workman did would long ago have gone back to work; and that, acting on unwise medical advice, the man had behaved in an unreasonable manner. He did not think the man was a malingerer, and he agreed with the medical referee who reported that the employers' medical evidence gave the correct view of the man's condition, and that a continuance of compensation was likely to keep up that condition:—Held (Cozens-Hardy, M.R., dissenting), that on these findings the County Court Judge was justified in terminating the compensation. Higgs & Hill, Lim. v. Unicume, 82 L. J. K.B.

369; [1913] 1 K.B. 595; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 263; 108 L. T. 169—C.A.

Per Cozens-Hardy, M.R.: The County Court Judge ought to have reduced the compensation to 1*d.* a week so as to allow the conflicting opinions of the doctors to be subjected to the test of actual experiment. Ib.

Per Hamilton, L.J.: There is no fixed rule that a man acting on the advice of his doctor cannot be held to have acted unreasonably. Ib.

Refusal to Undergo Surgical Operation.]—A workman accidentally injured in the foot, and thereby incapacitated, refused to undergo a simple operation which it was reasonably certain would have cured him. In so refusing he acted on the advice of his own doctors, who were of opinion that the proposed operation, though devoid of danger, would be useless. In an application for review of a payment of compensation which he was receiving,—Held, that he was precluded by his refusal from claiming a continuance of the compensation. O'Neill v. Brown & Co., [1913] S. C. 653; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 235—Ct. of Sess.

Report by Medical Referee of Fitness for Work—Finality of Medical Referee's Report.]—By agreement between a coal miner, who had received an injury to his thumb and was receiving compensation, and his employers, the question of the workman's capacity to resume his former employment was referred to a medical referee under paragraph 15 of Schedule I. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The medical referee reported that the workman was "quite fit to resume his ordinary employment as a coal miner, having recovered from" the injury. The employers thereupon applied to have the compensation ended, when the workman lodged answers in which he averred that having returned to work he had ascertained "that his earning ability has been considerably reduced from the effects of his injury" and maintained that he was still entitled to partial compensation. The arbitrator having ended the compensation, the workman appealed and asked leave to lead evidence in support of his averments:—Held, dismissing the appeal, that as the medical referee's report was final and was from its terms conclusive as to the question raised by the workman's averments, proof of these averments was inadmissible. Ball v. Hunt (81 L. J. K.B. 782; [1912] A.C. 496) and Macdonald (or Duris) v. Wilsons and Clyde Coal Co. (81 L. J. P.C. 188; [1912] A.C. 513) distinguished; and observed that where a medical referee's report is not from its terms conclusive a proof may be admissible. Gray v. Shotts Iron Co., [1912] S. C. 1267; [1912] W.C. Rep. 359—Ct. of Sess.

Whether a proof might not have been admissible if the workman had averred that owing to the consequences of the accident he had been unable to obtain employment, quære. Ib.

Report of Medical Referee — Recovery of Wage-earning Capacity—Termination of Compensation—Suspensory Award.]—A workman lost the sight of one eye by an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, and received compensation from his employers. Upon a remit by consent to a medical referee, the referee reported that the workman had recovered from his incapacity, and was fit for work; and it was also in evidence that he had been in fact employed at his former work at his old rate of wages:—Held, that there was evidence on which the arbitrator was entitled to terminate the compensation without making a suspensory award. Jones v. Anderson, 84 L. J. P.C. 47; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 151; 112 L. T. 225; 59 S. J. 159; 31 T. L. R. 76—H.L. (Sc.)

Recovery from Injury—Supervening Incapacity — Onus of Proof.] — Under a remit by parties to a medical referee to report on the condition of a workman, who had been injured and who was in receipt of compensation, the referee reported that he was fit for his former work. Thereafter the employers applied for review of the compensation, which was opposed by the workman on the ground that, since the date of his examination by the medical referee, he had again become incapacitated as a result of the accident:—Held, that the onus was on the workman of proving that the supervening incapacity was due to the accident. M'Callum v. Quinn ([1909] S. C. 227) distinguished. M'Ghee v. Summerlee Iron Co., [1911] S. C. 870—Ct. of Sess.

—— Possible Recurrence — Keeping Arbitration Open.] — The appellant met with an accident which necessitated the removal of one of his eyes. Compensation was paid as for total incapacity. Subsequently his employers applied for a review. The Sheriff-Substitute and the Court of Session found that earning capacity had been completely restored, that a cataract which had been developed was not due to the accident, and made an order ending the compensation; and the House of Lords affirmed their decision, being of opinion that the arbitration ought not to be kept open to meet future developments. Hargreave v. Haughhead Coal Co., 81 L. J. P.C. 167; [1912] A.C. 319; [1912] W.C. Rep. 275; 106 L. T. 468; 56 S. J. 379;—H.L. (Sc.)

—— Loss of Sight of one Eye — Earning Capacity Restored — Subsequent Disease of other Eye—Incapacity therefrom.]—If a man loses the sight of one eye from injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment and recovers his original earning capacity, but afterwards, owing to disease in his other eye, which has no causal connection with the injury by accident, suffers incapacity for work, the injury by accident cannot be treated as a contributory cause of his subsequent incapacity, and a suspensory order made in respect of the injury by accident cannot therefore be increased on account of such incapacity. The principles laid down in Hargreave v. Haughhead Coal Co. (81 L. J. P.C. 167; [1912] A.C. 319; [1912] W.C. Rep. 275) applied. Hart v. Cory Brothers, Lim., 85 L. J. K.B. 116; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 522; 60 S. J. 89—C.A.

Agreement to Pay—"During total incapacity"—"Change of circumstances"—Total

Incapacity, Supposed to be Temporary, Become Permanent.]—Where an agreement has been entered into between a workman who has been injured by "accident arising out of and in the course of" his employment, within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and his employers for payment to him of compensation "during his total incapacity for work," the weekly payment cannot be reviewed under section 16 of the first schedule to the Act merely because the total incapacity, which the parties thought would be temporary, has subsequently become permanent by reason of the necessity that the workman should undergo a surgical operation, that not being a "change of circumstances" within the meaning of the authorities. Scott v. Long Meg Plaster Co., [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 258; 111 L. T. 773—C.A.

The meaning of "change of circumstances" is that where an injured workman is awarded compensation on the footing that he is able to do some light work, he being only partially incapacitated, the weekly payment to him can be reversed if it is subsequently proved that that which, according to the medical evidence, was believed to be the fact turns out to have been unfounded. Or, if it can be proved that total incapacity has ceased and that there is only partial incapacity, there can be a review of the weekly payments. But, if total incapacity was supposed to exist at the date of the award or the agreement, it is immaterial to consider whether that which was a matter for doubt at one time has subsequently become a matter of certainty. Ib.

Incapacity from Nervous Effects—Neurasthenia — No Actual Physical Effects.] — In March, 1913, a workman suffered an injury to his head. The wound was completely healed by July, 1913. He was in receipt of compensation for total incapacity from his employers. In September, 1914, the employers applied to review on the ground that the man was capable of light work, which they had offered and he had refused. The medical evidence was conflicting. The medical assessor reported that the man could do light work on the level, but that he genuinely believed that he was unable to work. There were no actual physical effects. The County Court Judge found that the man honestly believed that he was incapable of work, and that his condition was due to neurasthenia resulting from the accident, but said that he ought to try and get work, and dismissed the application :—Held (Phillimore, L.J., dissenting), that there was evidence to justify the finding of the County Court Judge. Wall, Lim. v. Steel, 84 L. J. K.B. 1599; [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 117; 112 L. T. 846—C.A.

Permanent Injury—Chance of Employment — Review of Compensation — Termination or Suspension.]—A workman met with an accident which necessitated the amputation of the thumb of his left hand. In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, after the workman had recovered from the effects of the operation, the arbitrator found that he was fit to resume his former work as a brakesman, and also that the loss of his thumb did "not impair his chance of employment in his former line of employment or in any other line of employment which he might reasonably hope to follow," and terminated the compensation. The workman contended that the compensation should have been suspended and not ended :—Held, that, notwithstanding the permanent and patent nature of the injury, the arbitrator, in view of his finding as to the workman's chance of employment, was entitled to end the compensation. Watson v. Beardmore & Co., [1914] S. C. 718—Ct. of Sess.

Temporary Recovery — Nominal Award — Suspensory Order.] — Decision in Rosie v. Mackay ([1910] S. C. 714) to the effect that it is incompetent to keep open a claim to compensation by means of a nominal award or similar device, doubted in view of the opinions delivered in the House of Lords in Taylor v. London and North-Western Railway (81 L. J. K.B. 541; [1912] A.C. 242). Weir v. North British Railway, [1912] S. C. 1073; [1912] W.C. Rep. 332—Ct. of Sess.

Unreasonable Conduct of Workman—Incapacity Due in Whole or in Part to Workman's Failure to Return to Work.]—In an application for termination or review of compensation which was being paid to an injured workman, the arbitrator found that the workman had for some time been fit for light work, but had made no attempt to obtain work, and that, though partial incapacity still existed, it was "due in whole or in part to the defender's failure to return to work when able to do so," and ended payments of compensation till further order :—Held, that, as the arbitrator's findings did not exclude the conclusion that incapacity was still partly due to the workman's injuries, he was not entitled to end the compensation. Devlin v. Chapel Coal Co., [1915] S. C. 71—Ct. of Sess.

Observations on the effect of a workman's unreasonable conduct on his right to continue to receive compensation, and semble (per Lord Mackenzie and Lord Skerrington) that unreasonable conduct cannot per se deprive a workman of his right to compensation, but can only do so if it is proved that the existing incapacity is due to that conduct. Ib.

Rise in Wages between Date of Agreement and Date of Review—Increase of Amount.]—The compensation payable to a minor workman was fixed by agreement at a weekly sum representing half the amount which, in the opinion of the parties, he would have been earning at the date of the agreement had he remained uninjured. Some months afterwards, in consequence of a general rise in wages, he applied to the Sheriff to have the compensation increased :—Held, that the fact that there had been a general rise in wages between the date of the agreement and the date of the application did not per se entitle the workman to an increase, but that it was merely one of the items to be taken into consideration by the Sheriff in determining for himself the weekly sum which the workman would probably have been earning at the date of the review if he had remained uninjured. Malcolm v. Spowart & Co., [1913] S. C. 1024—Ct. of Sess.

Reduction of Amount Payable from Previous Date — Over-payment — Set-off against Sums Subsequently Payable.]—A workman was injured in 1908, and compensation was paid to him at the rate of 14*s.* 7*d.* a week under an agreement duly recorded under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. On the application of the employers the payments were reduced by the Judge on July 4, 1910, to 10*s.* a week as from February 18, 1910. The employers having paid 14*s.* 7*d.* a week from February 18, had paid the workman 4*l.* 11*s.* 8*d.* too much. They claimed to set the over-payments off against the 10*s.* a week falling due :—Held, that the previous over-payments could not be set off against the weekly payments falling due after July 4, in consequence of Schedule I. clause 19 of the Act, which provides that a weekly payment "shall not be capable of being assigned, charged or attached . . . nor shall any claim be set off against the same." Hosegood v. Wilson, 80 L. J. K.B. 519; [1911] 1 K.B. 30; 103 L. T. 616; 27 T. L. R. 88—C.A.

"Diminution and (or) redemption"—Right of Employer to Withdraw Claim for Redemption.]—A workman met with an accident in his employment. His employer paid him compensation for over a year and then applied to review asking for "diminution and (or) redemption," on the ground that the workman could do light work. The workman submitted to redemption on the footing that he could not do his former work. The employer then, before the arbitration came on, gave notice that he withdrew his application so far as it related to redemption :—Held, that the employer was entitled to withdraw that part of his application. Gotobed v. Petchell, 83 L. J. K.B. 429; [1914] 2 K.B. 36; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 115; 110 L. T. 453; 48 S. J. 249; 30 T. L. R. 253—C.A.

d. Date from which Review may be Ordered.

Termination of Award.]—Upon application by a workman to review an award as from a date antecedent to the date of the application, the applicant alleging inability to work since that date owing to incapacity and the respondents denying inability to work since that date and the incapacity, and saying that they should ask for termination of the award, —Held, that the arbitrator had jurisdiction to terminate the award as from the antecedent date, the issue of incapacity as from that date having been raised. Bagley v. Furness, Withy & Co., 83 L. J. K.B. 1546; [1914] 3 K.B. 974; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 518—C.A.

It is competent for an arbitrator to end the weekly compensation payable to an injured workman under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, at a date antecedent to that of the application for review, if it be proved that in fact his incapacity for earning wages had ceased at the earlier date. Donaldson v. Cowan ([1909] S. C. 1292) disapproved. Gibson & Co. v. Wishart, 83 L. J. P.C. 321; [1915] A.C. 18; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 202; 111 L. T. 466; 58 S. J. 592; 30 T. L. R. 540—H.L. (Sc.)

Increase of Weekly Payments in Case of Minors—Order not to be Dated Prior to Date of Application to Review.]—On February 6, 1911, a collier, who was then under twenty-one years of age, was certified to be suffering from nystagmus. He was paid as compensation half his average wages, 10*s.* a week, until April 20, 1911, when compensation was stopped and he was given a job by his employers at 1*l.* 6*s.* 1*d.* a week. On September 23, 1913, he applied to review, as a minor when certified, under the proviso to Schedule I. clause 16 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, asking for increased compensation so as to make up his earnings to the amount which he would probably have been earning if he had remained uninjured. He claimed the increase as from April 20, 1911. The arbitrator awarded him increased compensation as from February 6, 1912, a year after the disease was certified :—Held, that the arbitrator could not award an increase of compensation as from a date prior to the date of the application to review—namely, September 23, 1913. Williams v. Bwllfa and Merthyr Dare Steam Collieries, 83 L. J. K.B. 442; [1914] 2 K.B. 30; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 527; 110 L. T. 561—C.A.

2. Redemption.

Discretion of Judge.]—Where a weekly payment under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, has been continued by an employer for not less than six months he has an absolute right, under Schedule I. paragraph 17 of the Act to redeem the liability therefor by a payment as therein provided, and the Judge has no discretion to refuse to allow him to do so. Kendall & Gent v. Pennington, [1912] W.C. Rep. 144; 106 L. T. 817—C.A.

Permanent Incapacity — Lump Sum — "May"—Redemption Compulsory—Onus of Proof.]—Where an employer applies for commutation of a weekly payment under clause 17 of Schedule I. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, the arbitrator, whether he finds the incapacity to be permanent or not, must award a lump sum which can be enforced as a judgment. When the award has been made it is compulsory on the employer to redeem at the figure found payable, and the award should not be in the form that the employer "may" redeem the weekly payment at that figure. Calico Printers' Association v. Booth, 82 L. J. K.B. 985; [1913] 3 K.B. 652; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 540; 109 L. T. 123; 57 S. J. 662; 29 T. L. R. 664—C.A.

In an application under clause 17 the arbitrator must ascertain on the evidence before him, as best he can, whether the weekly payment already fixed is likely to be proper during the rest of the workman's life; and so long as he does not misdirect himself his conclusion of fact will not be interfered with. Ib.

Dictum of Farwell, L.J., in Calico Printers' Association v. Higham (81 L. J. K.B. 232, 238; [1912] 1 K.B. 93, 104; [1912] W.C. Rep.

104, 109) that the onus of proving permanent incapacity is on the person alleging it, doubted. Ib.

Permanent Incapacity — Actuarial Value — Duty of Court Court Judge.] — The words "where the incapacity is permanent" in clause 17 of Schedule I. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, include partial as well as total incapacity; but the question whether the diminished capacity to work is permanent or not is one which the arbitrator must decide on proper evidence before applying the actuarial method of ascertaining the amount of compensation under the first alternative in clause 17. It does not follow because the physical injury is permanent—as, for example, the loss of a finger—that the diminished capacity to work is necessarily permanent also. National Telephone Co. v. Smith ([1909] S. C. 1363) dissented from. Calico Printers' Association v. Higham, 81 L. J. K.B. 232; [1912] 1 K.B. 93; [1912] W.C. Rep. 104; 105 L. T. 734; 56 S. J. 89; 28 T. L. R. 53—C.A.

Per Fletcher Moulton, L.J. : The arbitrator in assessing the commutation of a weekly payment under the second alternative in clause 17 is not determining the compensation to be given for the accident. He has to consider only the amount of the weekly payments, their probable duration, the probability of their being diminished or raised in the future, and the probable extent of such variation, if any, and ought not to be guided by any consideration of what a jury might allow as damages. Ib.

Per Fletcher Moulton, L.J. : Semble, the words in clause 3 of Schedule I., "the average weekly amount which" the workman "is earning or is able to earn in some suitable employment or business after the accident," refer to the value of the work which the workman is doing in his own business—that is, the wages which he would have to pay to another for the services which he is himself performing therein. Ib.

Principle of Assessment.] — In December, 1906, a workman fell from a ladder while working at his employer's mill and sustained injuries which resulted in total incapacity. For a considerable time the employers paid the workman a weekly sum of 16*s.* 1*d.* by way of compensation, but in September, 1910, they stopped these payments. On January 12, 1911, the workman obtained an award of compensation at the same rate from September 10, 1910. The employers then took proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Sched. I. clause 13, to obtain redemption of these weekly payments. The County Court Judge awarded a lump sum of 120*l.* 13*s.* 5*d.*, which he arrived at by estimating the damages he would have awarded at the time of the accident, deducting the weekly payments since received by the workman, and awarding the balance :—Held, that the County Court Judge had made the award on a fallacious principle, and that the case must be remitted to him to re-assess the redemption price. Victor Mill, Lim. v. Shackleton, 81 L. J. K.B. 34; [1912] 1 K.B. 22; [1912] W.C. Rep. 33; 105 L. T. 613—C.A.

Principles governing the award of a lump sum in redemption of weekly payments under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, discussed. Ib.

Infant—"Permanent incapacity."]—Where an application is made by employers to redeem a weekly payment to a workman under Schedule I. clause 17 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, on the ground of the permanent incapacity of the workman, the arbitrator must satisfy himself whether the physical condition of the injured workman is stable. The permanent incapacity referred to is the incapacity to earn full wages, and the condition of the workman may be stable and his incapacity permanent although if uninjured he would at some future time in the ordinary course of his employment become entitled to be paid higher wages. If the incapacity is permanent an infant under clause 17 is in no better position than an adult, and the weekly payment may be redeemed by the payment of a lump sum of such an amount as would purchase an annuity equal to 75 per cent. of the weekly payment, although his probable earnings would be likely to increase if he had remained uninjured. If the incapacity is not permanent the amount is in the discretion of the arbitrator. On such an application to redeem a weekly payment the burden of proving the permanent incapacity of the workman lies upon the employers. Marshall, Sons & Co. v. Prince, 84 L. J. K.B. 16; [1914] 3 K.B. 1047; [1914] W.C. & I. Rep. 559; 111 L. T. 1081; 58 S. J. 721; 30 T. L. R. 654—C.A.

Applications both for Review and Redemption Pending.]—A girl of thirteen years of age met with an accident arising out of and in the course of her employment, which caused permanent injuries to one of her hands. Five years later, the hand having reached a condition of stability, the employers applied for redemption of the weekly payment they were making. The respondent, having appeared to an irregular service of this application, applied for an increase on the ground of increased earning powers but for the injury. Both applications were set down for hearing on the same day, the employers' being first :—Held, that the employers' right to redeem the existing payment was not absolute, but subject to the workman's right to review and obtain an increase of the payment. Eley v. Moreland, [1915] W.C. & I. Rep. 554; 60 S. J. 59—C.A.

VIII. ACTION BY EMPLOYER FOR INDEMNITY.

Payment by Master—Alleged Legal Liability of Third Party—Notice of Claim—Condition Precedent to Action.]—Where an injury to a workman is caused in circumstances creating a legal liability in a person other than his employer to pay damages in respect thereof, and the workman has received compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, from his employer, the employer is entitled, under section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to bring an action against such third party for an indemnity, notwithstanding that he has not served upon such third party the notice of his claim as required by rules 19 and 24 of the Workmen's Compensation Rules, 1907 to 1911. The only effect of not giving such notice is that the third party is not bound by the decision in the arbitration in the County Court, and that the employer has to prove his claim strictly against such third party. Nettleingham v. Powell, 82 L. J. K.B. 911; [1913] 3 K.B. 209; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 424; 108 L. T. 912; 57 S. J. 593; 29 T. L. R. 577—C.A.

Injury to Workman—Payment of Compensation by Master—Alleged Legal Liability in Third Party.] — The plaintiffs, having purchased from the defendants a quantity of coal, sent their steamship to take delivery of the coal at certain staiths of which the defendants had control in a navigable river. When the steamship was opposite the staiths a foy boat with two men in it came on to the port quarter of the steamship close to the propeller, and was receiving a steel rope from the steamship to take to the staiths. The staith foreman, who was a servant of the defendants, gave the order "Slow ahead, helm a-port." The pilot on the steamship passed the order on to the captain, but neither of them enquired whether the propeller was clear. The second officer, who was aft while he thought there was danger, did not signal to the captain that the propeller was not clear, thinking that he should defer to the staith foreman. The engines were accordingly started, the foy boat was sucked on to the propeller and sunk, and the boatmen were injured. The plaintiffs having paid compensation to the injured boatmen under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, brought an action against the defendants for an indemnity under section 6 of the Act. There was evidence to shew that it was the practice on the river when a vessel got off the staiths for the staith foreman to indicate to what spout she was to go, and then to give directions as to her mooring. There was also evidence that the second officer was aft on such occasions for the very purpose, among others, of seeing that the propeller was clear, and that the captain and pilot on the bridge should get a hail from aft that all was clear before they started the propeller. The Judge found that the staith foreman had been negligent, but that the officers of the steamship had been guilty of contributory negligence, and he gave judgment for the defendants:—Held, by the Court of Appeal, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to the indemnity which they claimed, inasmuch as—first (Kennedy, L.J., doubting on this point), the circumstances did not create a legal liability on the defendants to pay damages under the section, the plaintiffs' own negligence by their servants the officers of the steamship having been the immediate and proximate cause of the injuries; and secondly, even if the defendants by their servant the staith foreman had been guilty of negligence conducing to the injuries, the plaintiffs had been guilty of contributory negligence, and were in the position of joint wrongdoers with the defendants. Cory v. France, Fenwick & Co., 80 L. J. K.B. 341; [1911] 1 K.B. 114; 103 L. T. 649; 11 Asp. M.C. 499; 55 S. J. 10; 27 T. L. R. 18—C.A.

Negligence of Fellow Workman — "Some person other than the employer."]—Where a workman is injured in consequence of the negligence of a fellow workman, and receives compensation from his employer, the latter has a right to indemnity from the fellow workman who caused the injury. Lees v. Dunkerley, 80 L. J. K.B. 135; [1911] A.C. 5; 103 L. T. 467; 55 S. J. 44—H.L. (E.)

Negligence of other Persons — Absence of Contributory Negligence of Workman.] — A workman, a lad about sixteen years of age, was seated with his employer's son in his employer's cart. The son got down to attend to some business on one side of a railway line running alongside certain docks. The workman then got down for his own private and necessary purpose. He crossed the railway line, which was on the other side of the road. He passed through an opening in a sort of passage between heaps of boxes and went behind those boxes. On his return in a short time he ran out from the opening by which he had entered, and when he was in the act of crossing the railway line, not having looked either to the right hand or to the left, he was knocked down by an engine belonging to a railway company and was seriously injured. The railway company were served with notice by the employer under section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906. The deputy County Court Judge found that there was evidence of negligence on the part of the railway company. He ruled that there was no evidence of contributory negligence such as would disentitle the workman to recover compensation. The railway company appealed:—Held, that, on the question of contributory negligence, the circumstances were such that the case fell rather within Dublin, Wicklow, and Wexford Railway v. Slattery (3 App. Cas. 1155) than within Davey v. London and South-Western Railway (52 L. J. Q.B. 665; 11 Q.B. D. 213); and that it being a question of fact and not a question of law, it was not competent for the Court to do other than accept the finding of the learned Judge. Cutsforth v. Johnson, [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 131; 108 L. T. 138—C.A.

Injury Caused by Negligence of Third Person —Death of Workman—Payment of Compensation to Dependant — No Right of Action by Dependant against Third Person.] — By section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, where the injury in respect of which compensation under the Act is payable is caused under circumstances creating a legal liability in a third person, the workman may take proceedings both against the third person for damages and against his employer for compensation under the Act, but may not recover both damages and compensation; and if the workman recovers compensation under the Act, the person paying the compensation shall be entitled to be indemnified by the third person. A workman was injured through the negligence of third persons, the defendants, and died in consequence four days later. His employers, the plaintiffs, paid compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, to his illegitimate daughter, his sole dependant, and claimed an indemnity in respect thereof from the defendants under section 6 of the Act :—Held, that the legal liability of the defendants to the workman created by the fact of the negligence causing the injury was none the less a legal liability because it ceased with the workman's death, and that the provision as to the right of the workman to an alternative remedy was not intended to limit the effect of the provision as to the right of the employers to indemnity, and that, consequently, the fact that the dependant, the illegitimate daughter, could not exercise the option referred to in the section, as she was not entitled to bring an action against the defendants under Lord Campbell's Act, made no difference to the plaintiff's rights, and that they were entitled to the indemnity claimed. Smith's Dock Co. v. Readhead, 81 L. J. K.B. 808; [1912] 2 K.B. 323; [1912] W.C. Rep. 217; 106 L. T. 843; 28 T. L. R. 397—Bray, J.

Award against Employer—Fatal Injury from Kick of Horse—Owner's Liability—Scienter.]—Whilst engaged in his work at his employer's yard, a workman was kicked and fatally injured by a horse which belonged to a third party and was standing there unattended. The horse was not known by its owner to be vicious :—Held, that, even assuming that the horse was a trespasser in the yard and had been left there unattended by the negligence of its owner, the employers were not entitled to be indemnified by him under section 6 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, in respect of their liability to pay compensation to the dependants of the deceased workman. In the case of a horse not known to be vicious it was not the natural consequence of leaving it unattended in the yard that it should kick the workman, and the damage was therefore too remote and the owner of the horse not liable. Cox v. Burbidge (32 L. J. C.P. 89; 13 C. B. (N.S.) 430) followed. Bradley v. Wallaces, 82 L. J. K.B. 1074; [1913] 3 K.B. 629; [1913] W.C. & I. Rep. 620; 109 L. T. 281; 29 T. L. R. 705—C.A.

Industrial Disease — Disease Contracted by Gradual Process — Several Employers — Liability to Contribute.]—Where a workman has in the course of his employment contracted a disease mentioned in Schedule III. to the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1906, and is entitled to compensation from his last employer under section 8, if the disease is of such a nature as to be contracted by a gradual process, the last employer is, under subsection 1 (c), clause (iii.) of that section, entitled to an arbitration to determine the contribution to the compensation payable which should be made by any other employers of the workman who during the twelve months previous to the date of his disablement have employed him in the employment to which the nature of the disease was due, without proving that the disease was in fact contracted in the employment of such other employers. Mallinder v. Moores & Son, Lim., 81 L.
